You will perceive from a glance at it, that the propositions for the purchase of certain privileges on the Transit route, as well as the islands in the Bay of Panama, for purposes of a naval station, have been indignantly negatived, and that the Government of New-Granada has not only peremptorily refused all indemnity to the United States for injuries to their persons and property sustained by her citizens in the April massacre, but has actually turned the tables upon the Cabinet at Washington, by claiming so indemnity to New-Granada for her losses on the same occasion in the sum of $150,000! Also, New-Granada claims an apology from the United States for the insolence of Consul Ward, Capt. Bailey, and Mr. Bowlin; and, furthermore, signifies her intention of pushing a claim at Washington for damages sustained by the loss of the national tonnage and interoceanic postage on American mails, which she was prevented from collecting by threats of resistance on the part of Commodore Mervine. Verily, the wheels are at a dead lock!

You will recollect that I wrote you at the commencement of these negotiations that the new President Ospina, on his accession to the Presidency, would be extremely anxious to arrange all outstanding questions with foreign Powers—that he cared nothing for the Isthmus of Panama, and would even accede to the demands and propositions of our Government if he dared do so; but the Administration of Mallarino had so inflamed the minds of the people against the "Yankee fillibusters," as they call us, that he would find it extremely difficult to do anything towards a settlement. I find in El Tiempo, of Bogota, a confirmation of this position. That journal, in announcing the arrival of Ospina at the capital, says it is reported he traveled with all haste, in order to be in time to exert his influence against any hasty action of the Government—that he wished "no categorical answer should have been given until his arrival, as he is said to look forward to the time when the Isthmus will naturally be alienated."

You will also perceive by the official papers that all the information I have sent you from time to time upon the negotiation has been substantially and even minutely correct.

That Ospina will seek to arrange matters satisfactorily to the United States, especially now that the Cabinet of Washington has made it simply a question of dollars, and dropped the only part of the demand of any consequence to American travel,—guarantee for the future,—I have not the least doubt. That he could succeed in doing so, in the present state of the public mind, is altogether improbable. But he is a most astute politician and statesman—firm as a rock—a man who keeps his own counsel, and works "under the rose" to accomplish his purposes. Altogether the chance for the $400,000 does not look so desperate; and the prospect of another massacre of American citizens on account of the good-nature of the administration at Washington, in not hanging the authors of the last one, is "first-rate."

That all departments of the government of New-Granada are a unit as regards the rejection of the ultimatum of Mr. Morse, will very clearly appear by the proceedings in the House of Representatives, when the President communicated to it the state of affairs. I quote from the New Granadino of Bogota, March 19:

"The Executive communicated to the House of Representatives, after negotiations had been broken off and the ultimatum refused, all the papers upon the question at issue. The matter was referred to a Committee, consisting of Señors Ancizar and Valencia, who, after ample consideration, proposed in open session of the 17th, a solemn vote of approbation to the Executive Power, and to the Commissioners, Señors Pombo and Gonzales, for the dignified, honorable and patriotic manner in which they have treated the question. This proposition having been voted unanimously, the Committee proposed to pass to the order of the day, declaring the object of this latter motion to be to obtain the opinion of the Chamber. With this view Señor Ancizar read a project of decree upon the fondo of the question, which was very significative, and argued the matter with eloquence, moderation, clearness and frankness. The House negatived, unanimously, the motion to pass to the order of the day; and in consequence the project referred to was submitted to discussion. It authorized the Executive, in case the Republic should be threatened by the United States, to contract a loan of $500,000, with a view to prepare the nation for defence. Señor Ancizar, having again taken the floor, announced a new proposition, conferring unlimited power upon the Executive in case of an invasion of New-Granadian territory by the United States. This elicited a brilliant and energetic debate, on account of the opposition of Señor Pardo, who attacked the project in distinct terms. He was replied to by Señors Pereira, Gamba, L. M. Perez, Escovar, Samper, Baraya and Ancizar; upon which Señor Pardo withdrew his opposition, and the project was unanimously passed to a second reading. The House then adjourned."

El Tiempo appears to have discovered Mr. Morse's weak points,—indeed, no great penetration was needed for that—and these are, the most perfect conviction of the divinity of the "peculiar institution," and a thorough contempt for every man, woman and child who hails from north of Mason and Dixon's line. To these sentiments he adds that of the prophet of fillibusterism, viz: that you have a right to seize upon any country on the American continent, without a why or wherefore, only if it will subserve the interests of slavery. And being a very communicative gentleman, Mr. Morse cannot avoid torturing these sentiments into the face of every body he meets. I doubt not that he opened his budget of propositions at Bogota, with the preface that New-Granada would do a wise thing to divide herself up into eight or ten slave States, and then apply to General Quitman for annexation to the great Southern Republic, after the election in the United States, of 1860. But New Granada owes the honor conferred upon her in the appointment of Mr. Morse, to her own Minister at Washington, General Hran, who recommended it to Mr. Marcy, because the wives of the two former gentlemen happened to take tea together at some watering-place in Europe.

I inclose you some translations from the Bogota papers, in regard to the serious phase of the April question, but will give you here a bit at Mr. Morse, from El Tiempo:

"Mr. Morse has not left us, as we stated he had in a former number of our paper. But he has been improving his time the past week, in running about, admiring the marvels in nature of the tropics, and trying to catch a white turpial, to carry home to 'poor Pierce.' He has visited the Falls of Tequendama and the Bridge of Pandi; been hunting for tue bones of mastodons in the district of the Giants, near Sesche; has carefully investigated the truth of the legend of Bochica; overbruling, con mano fuerte, the rock where the Funza precipitates itself; and has trembled at the sight afar off of the fields of Fusagasugá, covered with big stones, that he at first took for the battalions of the Government which were being secretly drilled there for the defence of the Isthmus. We are assured that everywhere as his eye roamed on our fertile fields, he exclaimed: 'Oh that we could bring here two or three hundred thousand slaves to work for us, while, drunk with these perfumes of the flowers, we should voluptuously sleep away our lives!' It is said that he is a monomaniac on the question of Slavery."

Panama, Monday, April 13, 1857.

In the Gaceta Oficial of March 13 is published the correspondence between Señors Pombo and Gonzalez and Messrs. Morse and Bowlin. I find in it one allusion to the letter I wrote at the instance of Señor Pombo, in regard to the lamentable events of the 15th April of last year.

As Señor Pombo has limited himself to citing from some pieces of my certificate, it would appear that I had endeavored to justify or excuse the bloody attack on that night upon the passengers who were in the railroad station. In order to correct this error I will quote the paragraph entire upon which it is founded. It is as follows:

"With respect to the responsibility, my opinion is, that it rests upon the Government of New-Granada, because, on account of the peculiar situation of the Isthmus, there should have been a sufficient police or military force to keep order; and it naturally results that as the necessary force was not provided, that the Government is bound to answer for the lives and property destroyed. At the same time, some allowance should be made for the irritated state of the populace brought about by the continual acts of hostility towards them of the lower class of California passengers."

It never entered my mind to excuse in any manner the miserable men who committed such horrible excesses on the occasion before referred to.

I have the honor, &c., WILLIAM PERRY.

The British Mackintosh claim has passed both houses, and been signed by the President. It gives $60,000 more than was proposed by a former bill, but $300,000 less than the claim. It was not generally thought the proposed settlement, according to the terms of the new law, would be satisfactory to the British Government.

The House of Representatives passed to a second reading, but by only two majority, a bill to indemnify French citizens in the sum of $100,000 for spoliations on their commerce during the Columbian revolution. This is the more strange, because, at the time of these alleged spoliations, France was the ally of Spain, who was making war on New-Granada. Perhaps it is a bid for French sympathy against the United States.

A bill has passed the first reading in the House, changing the Constitution so as to adapt it to the Federal system. It is proposed to divide New-Granada into eight States.

News has reached us of the loss of the Boston ship Cathedral, belonging to Enoch, Train & Co., and of her Commander, Wm. H Howard, Dr. Kirkendal, of Trenton, N J., and seven of her crew. She was thrown on her beam-ends by the striking of a tremendous sea off Cape Horn, lat. 590 14' S., and lon. 6 0 38' W., on the 18th February. The first officer cut away her masts, but she would not right, but went down in 40 minutes after the accident. The Captain was sick in his berth and refused to leave it. Thirty-six of the crew, after being all night in an open boat without oars, were picked up by the English ship Anna Edwards Sharp. They go to the States in this steamer. The Cathedral was loaded with coal for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company at Benicia, California.

Last October Wm. Brabrowe piloted the ship Samuel Adams out of Boston Harbor. The ship was seen to leave her; and as there was a tremendous sea running at the time, and the pilot never returned, it was feared he was swamped in his little skiff. It appears that the ship backed her top-sails to take on board his boat, and then proceeded to sea, carrying the pilot to Callao. He goes home by this steamer. His family will, no doubt, be glad to see him, after his involuntary trip, which they feared might prove to be one to the place where "all good pilots go."

Mr. Morse, Mr. Canter, Superintendent of the Railroad, and some officers of the Cyane, took a sail in the harbor and lagoons of Colon, the other day, when their boat was capsized by a squall. Nobody was drowned—Mr. Center having been fortunate enough to fish Mr. Morse out before he was devoured by the sharks. The whole party came into town in a pitiable condition, minus shoes, hats, and their mouths full of salt water. Mr. Morse will report himself at Washington on the arrival of the Illinois.

We have had heavy rains the past week, as is usual at about this season. But the regular rainy season will not set in until we have our sort of Indian Summer of a month or so.

The day after the arrival of the mail from New-York three of the Commodore's boats, filled with people, were seen making towards the shore, whereupon a report was raised that he was coming to take the town. The walls were soon covered with people in the vicinity of the landing. But it was soon ascertained that he had only sent the boats ashore to make some preparations to go in search of some deserters, who had got down the coast to Chepo. The Government sent an armed police in the boats of the Commodore, to assist in the capture of the men. F. W. R.

The Relations Between the United States and New-Granada—Mr. Morse's Propositions and their Rejection—Action of the New-Granadian Congress.

From El Neo Granadino, March 19.

The Events of Panama.

The events of Panama, which have been the subject of angry notes and conferences, gave rise to a brilliant debate in the House of Representatives on the 17th. That the situation of affairs may be well understood, we recapitulate briefly the origin and progress of the tronolea.

After several minor affairs and difficulties directed against the national government and that of Panama, as well by the North American commercial houses of that City, as by the consols and shipments of the United States, and also by the railroad company, so ungratefully hostile and suspicious; after all this, new events served the Government at Washington, its agents, its citizens and the aforesaid company as pretexts for new disputes, new exactions, new outrages, new insolences and new resistance. These events were the tragedy of the 15th April in Panama, the passage by Congress in 1856 of a law upon tonnage and interoceanic mails on the Isthmus.

The Government of the United States, which sought an opportunity to provoke and prepare a rupture which might be used to justify the premeditated violation and invasion of the territory of the Isthmus, immediately raised two questions. One was the peremptory refusal to recognize our sovereignty, so far as the imposition of taxes on the Isthmus was concerned, although these were used to give security to the interests of her people. At the same time, instructing her consuls and naval force in the manner of resistance, after the manner of Mr. Bowlin, who reached the height of outrage and calumny in his official correspondence, and of that of President Pierce, in his dogmatism, insulting threats, and offensive and erroneous accusations in his message to Congress. At the same time, constituting itself judge of the domestic events of the Isthmus, and setting itself up as authoritative agent of all other nations, this Government, served by hot-headed agents, proved liars and sympathizers of annexationism, as are Consule Ward and Corwin, invented an enormous and scandalous pecuniary reclamation for the events of the 15th of April—a sort of spoliation speculation.

And then on the 18th instant, Mr. Bowlin, deroived the task of diplomatically calumniating the Congress of New-Granada, and the Governor and people of Panama, by formal threats, announcing, publicly, resistance to our sovereignty, and aggravated the questions at issue, in order to prepare for the events that were to follow.

Was there anything lacking after so much incivility, so many outrages, and so much injustice? Yes! we had not yet been told that force and expediency would settle everything. We had not yet been insulted by the infamous proposition to sell for money our own brothers and citizens of the Isthmus, and to place our sovereignty at the mercy of slavocracy and fillibusterism; and this was the mission that Mr. Pierce confided to Mr. Morse! Truly there is not a dirty mission in the world that cannot find a missionary. A planter of Louisiana, owner of hundreds of slaves, was the very man to propose the sale of the citizens of Panama, and to bring the Isthmus under the infamous influence of Slavery. President Pierce has been logical, and knew how to select his man.

Under these circumstances, and when the tonnage and mail questions had been removed to Washington, and when Mr. Bowlin preserved complete silence upon the April events, Mr. Morse, the Messiah of Slavery and fillibusterism and annexation, presented himself at Bogota. What object could this missionary of the Slavery propaganda, headed by Pierce, have in view? Each one of the agents of the Yankee Government has but to fulfill his mission.

Consul Ward insulted us in Panama, and encouraged the uncivil conduct of the Yankees, which resulted in the drama of the 15th April.

The Railroad Company sought constantly to create difficulties, thus ungratefully, day by day, requiting our generosity.

Colo. Mervine scandalously and with audacious violence resisted our laws, violated New-Granadian sovereignty, threatened the Government of Panama, and treated with contempt the mandates of our authorities.

Consul Corwine, as Commissioner, falsified facts, calumniated the people and Governor of Panama, and shamelessly proposed to President Pierce the occupation of the Isthmus by the forces of the United States, without previous declaration of war, or any rupture between the two countries, and without any other right than that of the strongest.

Let us now consider the new mission, at the head of which are the two Esquires (escuderos) of Mr. Pierce, Mr. Bowlin and Morse.

The two Esquires propose and then embody in a "Project" of Convention, the following:

1. The sale of the groups of islands near Panama, which belong to the Republic, for the purpose of establishing an United States Arsenal.

2. The execution of Panama and Colon, with an extensive territory adjacent, from one sea to the other into an independent district, subject to the intervention by force or otherwise of the United States.

3. Indemnification in a large sum (say $860,000) for the events of the 15th of April.

Such was the substance of the propositions, equivalents, at the bottom for the assents that must necessarily follow, viz: the sale of the whole of the Isthmus, and prepare for the sacrifice of Central America, the Island of Cuba, and our territories of Chorco, Darien, etc., etc.

The New-Granadian Commissioners, Señores Pombo and Gonzalez, replied with dignity, clearly, and in substance as follows: "The propositions presented are not admissible as the basee of discussion, because they are unjust, dishonorable, unconstitutional, and inapplicable to the interests of the Republic, and to the commerce of the world. New-Granada is altogether irresponsible for the events of the 15th April. The Republic can neither sell its territory or its citizens. The interests of all commercial nations, as well as of New-Granada, exacts that the transit should be completely free, and not subject to the monopoly of the United States. The Republic is disposed to enter into a negotiation with the powers most interested, which will do away with all difficulties in the transit, and to secure to the commerce of the world free access and all the advantages the Isthmus affords.

The North American Esquires refuse at the outset all intervention of other powers in the question of the Isthmus; declare the railroad to be an American enterprise, and that the greater part of the business over it is American; and insist upon their propositions and exactions. But the Granadian Commissioners energetically persevere in their negative, and then comes the ultimatum. If the famous and illustrious Esquire of La Manchs could instill so much wit and genius in his patron, it is not surprising that the ultimatum of the Yankee Esquires should be in complete harmony with the genius of Mr. Pierce, the modern Don Quixote of the American Union. Thus, all the reply these Yankee Esquires make to the incontestible observations of our Commissioners, is:

"The Government of New-Granada has closed the door to all negotiation. We now demand—$400,000, which small sum our Government, from motives of generosity, has fixed upon as indemnification, leaving upon New-Granada all the weight of responsibility for what may follow. And it will be for the United States to determine what means of redress the dignity and honor of the nation demand."

And after this peremptory notification, which is sufficiently plain to a man of good understanding, Mr. Morse takes a trip to the Falls of Tequendania and the Bucaramanga, gathering his corotos, and then goes home to avenge himself upon his loved slaves of Louisiana for the reproofs he received from our Executive and Commissioners, as well as from our Congress and people. In the meantime, Mr. Bowlin is inconsolable on account of the absence of his worthy and loved companion, and is "waiting for something to turn up."

After this diplomatic history, which places in flagrant contrast the noble and patriotic conduct of our Executive and Commissioners with the insolent suggestions of the Yankee Commissioners, we pass to the events in Congress.

[Here follows an account of the action of Congress in approving of the course of the N. G. Commissioners, in voting a sum of money for defence, in voting unlimited power to the President in case of invasion, etc., the facts of which are stated in the letter of our Panama correspondence.—Ed. Times.]

The House of Representatives has signified its approval in the most solemn manner, of the acts of the Government, in which it rightly interprets the national feeling. The people of New-Granada know their weakness in presence of the United States, and will do all that honor will permit in order to avoid a rupture and war. But she feels the justice of her cause, is proud of her glory, her honor and her sovereignty; and rather than be cowardly mercenary, she is resolved, if it must be so—and she is provoked and exasperated—never to surrender to her adversary, but to fall with arms in her hands.

Two Weeks Later from South America.

By the British steamship Bogota, at Panama, we have dates from the River Plate Provinces to the 4th February, from Chili to the 15th March, from Callao and Lima to the 26th, and Guayaquil to the 1st April.

From Ecuador there is nothing of political interest. A fire had destroyed the considerable pueblo of Santa Rosa.

PERU.

Capture of Two of the Revolutionary Ships by a British War Corvette—The Revolution still Losing Ground.

The news of the outrage committed upon the British mail steamship New-Granada, by the commanders of the revolutionary steamers Loa and Tumbes, in boarding the former vessel on her last passage to Panama, and forcibly taking arms and specie from her, reached Lima on the 24th. On the 25th, Mr. Sullivan, British Charge d'Affaires at Lima, and Admiral Bruce and officers held a conference on board the corvette Pearl, twenty-two guns, in the harbor of Callao, at which it was resolved to dispatch the Pearl immediately to capture the Tumbes and Loa. Two days' sail from Callao, northward, the Bogota saw all three vessels steaming in company towards Callao. The Tribune having left for China, the President on a cruise, and the Monarch, 84 gun ship, not having arrived at Callao from Valparaiso, though daily expected, the Pearl and Cockatrice, of four guns, were the only British ships in Peruvian waters. It was not known whether at the conference, it was decided to capture the Apurimac, 44-gun frigate on the arrival of the Monarch. Badly manned as she is at present, no doubt, the Pearl could take her, if she liked, without assistance. So far, you will see, the action of the British agents carries out my idea that the whole thing was a plot to break up Vivanco.

Vivanco had made no progress in his war on the Government of Castilla. Indeed, one or two of his battalions, for he has nothing at any one point that can be dignified with the name of a regiment, had gone over to the latter. Vivanco still holds Paita, as well as the Chincha Islands, but having lost two of his most useful steamers, he would not be likely to hold either much longer. He continued to sell guano at the Chinchas to Chilian merchants, at very low rates, and at last dates, there were nine vessels loading there under contracts with the revolutionary leader. Castilla had bought of the British Steam Navigation Company one of their steamers, the Santiago, for $150,000, and was converting her into a war vessel. I do not see any prospect of Vivanco's holding out two months longer.

BOLIVIA.

The Government is favorable to the idea of holding a Spanish American Congress at San Jose de Costa Rica, to consult upon measures for mutual "protection against American fillibusterism." The President has published a decree of general amnesty in favor of political offenders. The yellow fever, which has been raging for the last five months in the District of La Paz, still continues its ravages. The deaths from it in February were 285.

CHILI.

Business—A Revolutionary Movement Suppressed—Miscellaneous.

Business had been steady, but not so brisk as during the preceding fortnight. Specie, particularly silver, was very scarce, and some small failures had taken place in consequence. Bank discounts, 1 per cent. a month. The whole value of exports for 1856 was $18,000,000. In 1856 they amounted to $17,155,156. Flour diminished 530,000 quintals; wheat 103,000 quintals; coals increased 18,000 tons; silver in bars increased 25,000 marks; silver ores diminished 100,000 quintals; copper in bars diminished 30,000 quintals; copper regulus increased 30,000 quintals. The exportation of gold and silver coin, from January of this year up to March 10, amounted to $289,000.

Flour was selling at $8 to $8 50 per 200 pounds. American Pine, 80,000 feet, brought $145. California Tallow, $15. Freights from Coquimbo to Boston, of ores, was $20 to $22; to Liverpool, £3 17s. 6d.

The most important political news is the arrest and imprisonment of several persons in Santiago, the capital, charged with attempting a revolutionary movement. Among the most conspicuous are Señor Ugazar Garvias and Don Antonio Larrain. Don Manuel Cyzaguirre escaped and hid himself. They are to be tried immediately. Public opinion was adverse to the course of the Government in giving such prominency to this matter, as being calculated to disturb the public tranquillity.

The Consular Convention between Chili and Ecuador has been promulgated. A new Minister is shortly to leave for Costa Rica, in the person of Don Cayetano Astaburuaga, late Secretary to the Chilian Mission at Washington.

Considerable purchases of guano had been made by the Chilian merchants, of Vivanco, at much lower than the Government rates, for different points, of course excepting England and France.

RIVER PLATTE PROVINCES.

In Buenos Ayres the English loan was on the eve of an arrangement. The line of steamers between Marseilles and Rio Janeiro was shortly to be extended to Buenos Ayres. The price of passage to Buenos Ayres was to be $230. The inauguration of the Eastern Railroad took place Jan. 28, amid great rejoicings. The train ran 20 miles, crowded with excursionists. The difficulty with England, on account of Capt. Grant's passports having been sent to him, had been happily adjusted, and Her British Majesty's flag was saluted with 21 guns. Electric telegraphs were to be established between Montevideo and Buenos Ayres, passing over a large portion of the Oriental Territory and extending to Paraná.

IMPORTANT FROM THE WEST INDIES.

Capture of a Slaver by a British Cruiser—Awful Mortality and Suffering Among the Slaves—Landing the Slaves at Jamaica—The Secrets of the Cuban Slave Trade—Cuba to be Blockaded, &c.

We have received files of Kingston (Jamaica) papers to the 23d of April. The only news of importance is to be found in the following story of the capture of a slaver by a British cruiser furnished to the Falmouth Post by a correspondent at St. Annes. It is deeply interesting:

On Thursday last, the 16th inst., the inhabitants of St. Ann's Bay were thrown into a state of considerable excitement by the arrival of a schooner—evidently American—towed into port by H. M. brig Arab. It was soon ascertained that the schooner was a slaver, and that she had on board a large number of captives. It appears that the captain of the Arab had received information that a bark and schooner were expected in Cuba from the Coast of Africa, each with a cargo of slaves; a strict watch was therefore kept, and Monday the 13th inst. a suspicious looking craft was seen with a full press of sail, making the best of her way to her destined port. She was closely pursued, and the captain finding that there was no possibility of escaping from the Arab, deserted her, taking with him in a shallop, his crew, money, chronometer, and other useful articles. The commander of the Arab dispatched his gun-boat with 15 men, under the command of his first Lieutenant, with orders for the capture of the shallop—the chase continued for nearly three hours—and a shot having destroyed the rudder of the shallop, the captain, who was the owner of the slaver, surrendered. Two of his slaves, and an interpreter, were taken from the shallop, and the crew were left in it, to make the best of their way to Cuba. The first Lieutenant then boardered the schooner, and found her filled with young Africans, males and females, to the number of 373. no less than 127 having fallen victims to the horrors of the middle passage, during a voyage of 29 days.

The poor captives were in a wretched condition—all of them were naked—and the greater part seemed to have been half starved. They were packed closely together, and covered with dirt and vermin. On the arrival of the schooner in St. Ann's Bay, several gentlemen went on board, and their sympathies were excited at the misery they witnessed. Messrs. Bravo & Brother suggested measures, which were adopted, and with their usual liberality, ordered a steer to be killed, and soup prepared for the sufferers; other gentlemen furnished ground provisions bread, &c., and while the food was being prepared, the whole of the human cargo was brought upon deck, washed, and had blankets given to them until clothing could be procured. Thirty of them were in a dying state, but the most humane attention was paid to them, and up to the time when our informant left St. Ann's Bay, they were all alive, and expected to do well. The honorable Charles Boyce, Custos of the Parish, sent off without loss of time, a dispatch to his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, acquainting him with all circumstances connected with the capture, and requested to be informed whether the captives should be handed over to proprietors of estates who were anxious to procure their services.

"The Captain of the schooner refused to give his name, or the name of the vessel, but stated that he would be a loser of $80,000—a loss which did not cause him much concern, as he had made other and successful trips. A great deal of information, however, has been obtained from the interpreter, who is inconsolable on account of the absence of his worthy and loved companion, and is "waiting for something to turn up."

After this diplomatic history, which places in flagrant contrast the noble and patriotic conduct of our Executive and Commissioners with the insolent suggestions of the Yankee Commissioners, we pass to the events in Congress.

BOLIVIA.

The Government is favorable to the idea of holding a Spanish American Congress at San Jose de Costa Rica, to consult upon measures for mutual "protection against American fillibusterism." The President has published a decree of general amnesty in favor of political offenders. The yellow fever, which has been raging for the last five months in the District of La Paz, still continues its ravages. The deaths from it in February were 285.

Business—A Revolutionary Movement Suppressed—Miscellaneous.

Business had been steady, but not so brisk as during the preceding fortnight. Specie, particularly silver, was very scarce, and some small failures had taken place in consequence. Bank discounts, 1 per cent. a month. The whole value of exports for 1856 was $18,000,000. In 1856 they amounted to $17,155,156. Flour diminished 530,000 quintals; wheat 103,000 quintals; coals increased 18,000 tons; silver in bars increased 25,000 marks; silver ores diminished 100,000 quintals; copper in bars diminished 30,000 quintals; copper regulus increased 30,000 quintals. The exportation of gold and silver coin, from January of this year up to March 10, amounted to $289,000.

Flour was selling at $8 to $8 50 per 200 pounds. American Pine, 80,000 feet, brought $145. California Tallow, $15. Freights from Coquimbo to Boston, of ores, was $20 to $22; to Liverpool, £3 17s. 6d.

The most important political news is the arrest and imprisonment of several persons in Santiago, the capital, charged with attempting a revolutionary movement. Among the most conspicuous are Señor Ugazar Garvias and Don Antonio Larrain. Don Manuel Cyzaguirre escaped and hid himself. They are to be tried immediately. Public opinion was adverse to the course of the Government in giving such prominency to this matter, as being calculated to disturb the public tranquillity.

The Consular Convention between Chili and Ecuador has been promulgated. A new Minister is shortly to leave for Costa Rica, in the person of Don Cayetano Astaburuaga, late Secretary to the Chilian Mission at Washington.

Considerable purchases of guano had been made by the Chilian merchants, of Vivanco, at

Miss Laura Keene.....Sole Lessee and Directress,
Curtain rises at 7½ o'clock.
The Management has great pleasure in announcing, for the first time in America, the last successful effort of ALEXANDER DUMAS, FILS,
THE MONEY QUESTION.
Supported by the strength of this universally acknowledged talented company.
THE SENSATION
produced in Paris by the representation of this piece was so great that the Emperor and Empress attended the theatre on several occasions during the first representations.
The aim of the author in this instance is truly commendable for the morality it inculcates, and the lesson it teaches the financiers of the present age, who grasp at money obtained by any means.
FORTY-FOURTH NIGHT OF THE ELVES.
THIS EVENING Thursday, April 30, 1857,
THE MONEY QUESTION.
Characters by Messrs. Wheatleigh, Jordan, Barnett, Stoddart, Mrs. H. P. Grattan, Misses Kate Reignolds, Clifton and Manners.
To be followed by
THE ELVES.
LEGEND.—The mountain forests of Pastoria are inhabited, it is said, by Pixies, Sprites and Elves, who, like the Phantom Dancers of Germany, delight to entrap travelers into their realms and torment them with their mischievous antics. Having the power of transferring the spirit, they often, in their malicious gambols, give life to the newly dead. Statues, rocks and trees are seen fantastically moving in the forest, but it is only during the DAY they retain their fictitious existence; at the approach of NIGHT they resume their immobility.

TESTIMONIAL TO MR. LESTER.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The steamship Illinois, from Aspinwall on the 20th inst., with $1,489,060 in treasure, arrived at this port yesterday. The Illinois brings late and interesting news from California, Oregon, the Sandwich Islands, the South Pacific, New-Granada, Central America and the British West Indies.

From Nicaragua we have late and important news. The cause of WALKER is more desperate than ever—it is so utterly hopeless that his own friends do not suppose him capable of holding out beyond the 20th of April. The reports of his victories on the 5th and 16th of March were fictitious. No such victories were obtained, nor was there any such slaughter of the Costa Ricans as the fillibusters represented. WALKER did attack San Jorge on the 16th ult., but he was repulsed with heavy loss. The allies, since that day, have been gradually closing round him. By way of the lake, we have accounts from Rivas to the 13th of April. The WALKER force there then only amounted to 150 men. They were confined in two houses and had no provisions. The enemy, who also held San Juan del Sur, surrounded them at every point. There seemed to be only one doubtful question in connection with the issue—could WALKER escape?

The news from the Atlantic side confirms previous reports that the force under Col. LOCKRIDGE was completely broken up. The men, some three hundred in number, were brought in British frigates at Aspinwall. Our correspondents give full and highly interesting particulars of the events to which we have thus briefly alluded.

From San Salvador we receive the important intelligence that the partition of Nicaragua among the Allies has been finally settled. The native Nicaraguans are represented as consenting parties to the division.

The news from California for the fortnight ending the 6th inst. is not of special interest. The trial of the State Comptroller before the Senate, as a High Court of Impeachment, was in progress, and it was believed would result in a conviction. The business of mining was everywhere prosperous, and the abundance of rain that had fallen in all parts of the State has been of great benefit to the miner, the farmer, and herdsmen. From all quarters the reports were favorable to a prolific harvest.

From Oregon we learn that there are apprehensions of another Indian outbreak. On the 17th ult. the steamer Portland was carried over the Falls of Willamette, in the vicinity of Oregon. The captain and a boy lost their lives.

Our dates from Honolulu are to the 12th of March. The schooner Likoliho had arrived at that port with about a hundred tons of guano from Jervis and New-Nantucket Islands, situated about ten days' sail to the south of the Sandwich Islands. The event created quite an excitement, as every one believed that the enterprise would be a failure. It has, however, proved very successful, and will no doubt be attended with important results.

Our Panama Correspondent gives the latest phase of the pending difficulty between the United States and New-Granada. The New-Granadian Congress had voted a large sum of money to put the country in a state of defence. We have received the correspondence that has passed between Mr. MORSE and the New-Granadian Government, including the American ultimatum, and its rejection, but as the documents are very long, and the substance of them has been already given, we will not inflict their publication upon our readers.

From Jamaica journals we learn that a slave-schooner of 150 tons burden—supposed to be American built—had been captured on the South Side of Cuba by the British brig-of-war Arab, and was taken into Saint Ann's Bay. There were 370 Africans, of from ten to eighteen years old, on board. Five hundred of these unfortunate creatures had been taken from a place called Kabinda, on the coast of Africa, and, during a passage of 29 days, over 120 had died. The remainder were suffering most horrible torture from hunger and close confinement. The Captain refused to give the name of his vessel or its destination. In the quotations that we publish elsewhere from Jamaica journals some important revelations are given respecting the modus operandi of these Cuban slave-traders. The people of Jamaica are greatly excited on the subject, and it is stated positively that a blockade of the coast of Cuba will be established by British cruisers if the Spanish authorities show themselves any longer unwilling or unable to suppress the traffic.

We have two weeks later news from the South Pacific. The insane attempt of the two Peruvian revolutionary ships-of-war to rob the British mail steamer had been promptly checked by Admiral BRUCE, who dispatched the corvette Pearl after the delinquent vessels, and within a few days they were brought, as captives, into the harbor of Callao. VIVANCO still has the frigate Apurimac in his service, but his cause is so manifestly losing ground, that there is scarcely any chance of his recovering himself sufficiently to regain the position he has lost. From Chile we have the report that several persons had been arrested in the capital, charged with attempting a revolutionary movement. The affair seems to be unimportant and wholly unsupported by popular opinion.

The steamship Quaker City arrived yesterday afternoon, from Mobile on the 22d and Havana on the 26th. Business at the latter place is reported to be more active than usual, Sugars having again advanced. A slaver, with 370 negroes on board, had been captured at Trinidad. Our correspondents report the Slave-trade in a very flourishing condition. The fleet of war vessels from Spain was daily expected. Mr. MORSE, our Minister to New-Granada, had reached Havana, on his way to New-Orleans—at which place he has since arrived.

A private dispatch was received in this City yesterday, from Little Falls, announcing that the Eastern Division of the Erie Canal, under the charge of Commissioner SHERRELL, is in perfect order. Some of the levels are already full, and all are expected to be so by to-morrow. We understand that the Auditor of the Canal Department has directed the Collectors to pass no boats until the 6th of May, in consequence of delay on the Western Division. This has given rise to considerable dissatisfaction, as the damage resulting, it is alleged, will be almost incalculable. Shippers can imagine no good reason why they should be kept back on the Eastern Division, in consequence of delay on the Western.

A telegraph dispatch states that a steamer arrived below Quebec last night, supposed to be the Circassian, from Liverpool, with four days' later news from Europe. The lines connecting with Quebec closed before the steamer arrived up.

Judge DAVIES yesterday decided the application of Mayor WOOD for an injunction against the new Board of Police Commissioners—refusing the application and dissolving the preliminary injunction. But the ground upon which he bases this refusal is so purely technical, that it deprives the decision of any public importance—as the question of the constitutionality of the new law is not decided or even alluded to. Mayor WOOD applied for relief as a tax-payer, about to be subjected to the payment of money by virtue of an invalid law; but he neglected to state, in his complaint, that the application was made not only on his own behalf, but also on behalf of all other tax-payers of New-York similarly situated. After a long argument Judge DAVIES comes to the conclusion that this omission is material, and that the Court cannot grant the relief asked to the plaintiff, so long as the other parties similarly situated would be at liberty to make similar application. It is upon this ground alone that he refused the injunction. The only point thus far settled, therefore, is that Mayor WOOD's counsel made a technical blunder in drawing the complaint. Mayor WOOD immediately commenced another suit, in which this error in the pleadings was corrected. The argument was commenced yesterday afternoon. WM. C. NOYES, Esq., in opening for the Commissioners, stated that he should not argue the constitutionality of the law in his opening, but confine himself to proving that the Court had no power to grant an injunction in such a case as the one at issue. Mr. SEDGWICK, for the Mayor, touched upon the constitution, and claimed to have proved that the law was void. It appears, however, that the result of this hearing will be but to settle a little more definitely the powers of the Supreme Court in granting injunctions.

The Board of Aldermen last night were again excited in regard to the recent legislation at Albany. The Corporation Counsel was directed to test the validity of two acts lately passed—one declaring that the twelve lower piers on the East River shall be exclusively used for canal barges; another, appointing Commissioners to build a new City Hall, which was termed a usurpation of power, infringing upon the rights of the Corporation. A lively debate resulted, in which the State legislators were handled by Alderman WILSON and others, in severe style, and the citizens, en masse, were advised to resist them. The Comptroller sent a communication to the Board relative to embarrassments occasioned to the City Treasury by the present mode of paying for work done by assessment.

In the Board of Councilmen on Wednesday, a great mass of ordinary matter was got through. The board concurred with the Aldermen appropriating $10,000 to contest the new Charter. The Mayor forwarded a veto against the extension of the lease of Thirty-fourth-street Ferry.

A motion to restrict the Mayor in the institution of suits at law against the Legislature, was negatived by 20 against 18. Adjourned to Monday.

At the meeting of the Commissioners of Emigration on Wednesday, a proposal was made to erect a building for baggage at Castle Garden. Baggage now is often lost there, and the Commissioners become accountable for it. The matter was referred to the Castle Garden Committee. A resolution was adopted that counsel for the Commission draw a form of license for boats. A communication was received from the State Comptroller, stating that it would be impossible to comply with the desire of the Commissioners to obtain a loan of $30,000. He stated there were no funds in the City treasury from which such a loan might be available.

A fine portrait of the President of the Commissioners of Emigration, GULIAN C. VERPLANCK, Esq., painted by HUNTINGTON at the expense of the Commission, was hung, yesterday, in the Board's Room.

The Cattle Markets were pretty well supplied again yesterday, the receipts for the week numbering 3,417, which is nearly equal to the average weekly supply for 1856. About 500 of these, however, were animals designed for the previous market, but detained on the railroads by the freshets. These were sold to butchers on Friday last. A great abundance of shad in market and also veal, diminishes the present demand for beef, and prices fell off yesterday, and a few animals were left over.

The first meeting in this City of the Theta Delta Chi Convention took place yesterday. Last evening the literary exercises were held in Hope Chapel. Delegates from nine of the principal universities and colleges of the Union were present, and the building was filled with an appreciative audience. Mr. W. H. TEFFT was the orator. His theme was "The Scholar," in his relation to public life. The "poet" was JOHN BROUGHAM. His subject was "The Age of Gold." It was characteristically humorous, and kept the audience in a continued roar of laughter.

The annual moving has commenced. The streets are alive with citizens on their migration from their own into other people's houses. Carmen are the most flush of all men this week.

A man named PATRICK DART was arrested yesterday for beating his step-mother, a Mrs. KEEGAN, aged 60 years, so cruelly as to excite doubts of her recovery.

The ante-mortem statement of MICHAEL COYLE, who was so terribly beaten on the 14th inst. in his boarding-house by a party of fourteen men or more, was taken yesterday. He states that he gave no cause for the assault, which was commenced by a man named FRYERI, who is in custody. COYLE is not expected to recover.

One of the car drivers on the Hudson River Railroad was struck on the head with a paving stone, yesterday afternoon, by a man named JAS. RINN, and injured, it is feared, in a fatal manner. The injured man was driving his car, one of the train that left Chambers-street at 4 o'clock, P. M., and when near Spring-street, was compelled to stop, in order to prevent a collision with a horse and cart which was backed up in the street against a heap of sand. The obstruction being removed, he moved on, when RINN whose ire was, from some cause excited, picked up a paving stone, and following the cars, struck the driver with the stone on the head, knocking him senseless. The wounded man was conveyed to the depot, at Thirty-first-street, where medical aid was procured.

In accordance with the new City Charter, the Police magistrates will on Monday next act as Judges of the Court of Special Sessions, which Court will in future be open for business every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday. The Justices met yesterday and selected Justice OSBORN presiding magistrate of the Court, and Mr. R. H. JOHNSON its permanent Clerk. The other Justices and Clerks to act alternately.

In the Circuit Court, Brooklyn, before Judge BIRDSEYE, yesterday, a jury awarded JOHN HANLY $750 damages against the City of New-York, for injuries sustained by falling into a well in New-York. From the testimony in the case, it appears that plaintiff, in June last, while walking Bayard-street towards Hudson-avenue, stepped upon the covering of the well, which broke through, and he was precipitated to the bottom—a distance of about forty feet—and sustained such injuries that he was unable for a long time to pursue his regular business—that of a house painter. It was shown that the well had been covered by joist and plank, which had become rotten, by plaintiff, who was corroborated by other witness. This is the first case in this Court where a plaintiff has been put upon the stand to testify under the new act, and Judge BIRDSEYE, in his charge to the jury, expressed an opinion that it was a decided improvement on the old practice.

A woman named ANN COLLINS was found yesterday morning in a well in the rear of a house on Raymond-street corner of Johnson, Brooklyn. It was at first supposed that she had committed suicide, but upon an examination of the case by Coroner SNELL, he arrived at the conclusion that deceased had been murdered by her husband, FRANCIS COLLINS, who has been committed for examination. The theory of the Coroner is that the woman was choked to death by COLLINS and that he then threw the body into the well. The strongest evidence of a murder is that the woman had a small cord around her waist when found, and had been known frequently to quarrel with her husband.

Hon. ABRAHAM T. ROSE, late County Judge and Surrogate of Suffolk, (L. I.,) died at his residence on Tuesday last. Governor KING, upon Mr. ROSE's resignation some two weeks since, appointed Hon. GEORGE MILLER, of Riverhead, his successor.

The Nicaragua News.

The cause of WALKER and Fillibusterism in Nicaragua is lost. With a desperate tenacity the General still holds out at Rivas, but his force is reduced to one hundred and fifty men, all told, and his provisions to three mules. The Costa Rican commander has fixed the day upon which, as he says, WALKER will be forced to surrender; but we have too much faith in his determination and energy to believe that he will not, by some means or another, elude the vigilance of his enemies, and effect his escape. But all doubt as to the issue of the present struggle in Nicaragua is now set at rest.

The accounts received by the Illinois are deeply interesting. It appears that the victories obtained by WALKER on the 5th, and again on the 16th of March, were purely imaginative. A fight did take place on the 16th, but it was WALKER who was defeated, and he was compelled to return to Rivas, out of which he had ventured to attack San George, with a loss of 150 men. The great slaughter committed among the Costa Ricans was also a pure fabrication. They lost only two men killed and some sixty wounded. After this event, the Allies drew their lines closer and closer around Rivas, until at length, on the 13th of April, the date to which our advices extend, the fillibusters were shut up in two houses, without provisions and almost without hope of escape. The policy pursued by Gen. MORA throughout the whole campaign is still preserved. He refrains from attacking; but leaves disease, privation and suffering, to perform the work of death in the ranks of his enemies.

From the Atlantic side there is not much additional news. The force under Colonel LOCKRIDGE is completely broken up; principally, it is said, because Messrs. MORGAN and Co. have determined to support the Fillibusters no longer. The men, some three hundred in number, were brought to Aspinwall by the British frigates Tartar and Cossack. A portion of them were sent to the United States in the Granada.

This, then, is the last chapter in the History of Fillibusterism in Nicaragua. We may look for the final scene at Rivas in the accounts to be brought by the next steamer. The allies already regard the war at an end, and have divided among them the unfortunate State in which this long and bloody struggle has been fought. We hear from San Salvador that the terms of the partition of Nicaragua between Costa Rica, Salvador and Guatemala have been at length definitively settled.

Reform in Stock Dealings.

The demoralization of the New-York Stock Exchange Board, growing out of the unlicensed gambling operations of which, for the last six or eight months, it has been made the scene, has not only provoked the indignant comment of the outside public, who own or feel interested for the numerous values, which, like dice, are played with in Wall-street, but good men within the Board of Brokers have recently felt called upon to remonstrate. A motion, we observe, has been entered to limit the time contracts at the Board to sixty days, instead of twelve months, the present privilege. It is possible, when the motion comes to be voted upon, as it will, in a few days, that an amendment may be tried to further reduce the limit to thirty days, but as a two-thirds' vote is required to change the rule at all, the success of this movement is said to be questionable. That the Board will have to come to a thirty-days' limit voluntarily, or, what would be still more desirable, adopt the London plan of selling for cash or "the account"—that is, a day certain, in which all the contracts of the month are to be settled and the proper transfers made—or else be driven by legislation to three or five day contracts, appears, in the present condition of things, to be inevitable. The more creditable policy, certainly, would be for the old and conservative members, who desire to see their Association brought back to its original purpose as well as name—a Board of Brokers, to do the stock business of the public as between legitimate buyer and seller, instead of being, as it is now, a band of reckless Jobbers, three-fourths conspiring by time sales to depreciate the investments of the public, and the other fourth ready, on occasion, to unduly inflate them—would be to strike boldly for the most thorough reform—relying for success on the force of the existing and pressing necessity of doing something which shall be effectual to restore the Board to a proper degree of respectability and confidence.

There is no other prominent Stock Exchange or Bourse, in the world, but which, as an official practice, longer time bargains than four or six weeks are permitted. The great bulk of the dealings are, and should be, for cash or three or five days. In Philadelphia the limit is five days. But if for the convenience of the very large as well as numerous transactions in a city like New-York, the practice, as in London and Paris, of buying and selling for a day certain, within the current or succeeding month, in other words for a common day of account, to be fixed for each stock or class of stocks, by the Board of Brokers, should be deemed advisable, the public would have no reason to distrust it, at least until tried and found subject to unpardonable abuses. While it would be a convenience to parties desiring to provide for purchases some weeks ahead, without incurring the double brokerage for buying and carrying the stocks, it would afford every rational facility for speculation, if that is desirable, on the future of the market. Beyond this, time bargains are not permitted to be registered in England or France, nor are they anywhere essential to the real convenience of buyer or seller. With a purchase or sale for cash or the monthly account, the duty of the Stock-broker to his customer ceases. Then if the operation be a speculative one, or based upon the convenience of the party to pay for or deliver the stock, and the desired result not yet attained, the office of the Money-broker begins. The stock is taken up and a regular loan effected upon the certificate, or else a continuation to the next account day duly bargained for. Options are thus wholly dispensed with, and the public is spared the offensive and often damaging record of the bets between Bull and Bear to the extent of millions per day, that one will deliver to or receive from the other, sometime within sixty or ninety days, or six or nine or twelve months, without notice, certain stocks at a given price below or above their current value for cash.

We have thus glanced at the nature of the reforms which all the Commission members of the Stock Exchange ought to desire and which we are quite sure are desired by the oldest and most respectable of their number, without intending, at present, to enlarge upon the mischiefs or demoralization of the business as now and of late conducted. These are sufficiently palpable to the public and have been for more than a year past, reaching as they do the interests and shocking the confidence of hundreds and thousands of the best people in the country, who carefully regard, as they have honestly earned and paid for, the values thus daily staked on the mercy and caprice of that class of fancy operators who notoriously rule the dealings at the Board of Brokers. If the light in which this state of things is already regarded by the community is not understood or heeded in Wall-street, the reasons why the evil is not corrected where it originates will soon be susceptible of easy explanation. It may be plausible enough for the master spirits in the Street, whose wicked caprice and more than willing malice have depreciated the investments of the public by fictitious time sales to the extent of millions, where upon a reaction they would not be able to respond to thousands, to say that if the property thus dealt with have real or intrinsic merit, it would withstand the attack; but the public are not so blind as to regard the great elements of confidence and credit thus lightly. The fair discussion of values is one thing; a constant, systematic and unprincipled assault upon them another. The motive to such assault becomes doubly strong and the means almost invariably held to justify the end, where by the demoralized rules, and easy forbearance in case the gamesters lose the stake they play for at the Board of Brokers, these parties can sell ad libitum at their own option to deliver at such time within two or twelve months as may suffice to undermine the credit of the values thus sold and assaulted, or if failing in this, not to deliver at all. The evil is equally great, though the mischief, perhaps, not quite so wide spread, if the game of inflating and cornering stocks be selected, as it often is by the same parties. The morality of the operation is quite as loose, and the end usually accomplished, if accomplished at all, by the same system of exaggeration and through the same pernicious means of unlimited time contracts.

The Police War.

Our war of the Roses—that between the Ins and Outs, for the patronage of the Police Department—makes slow progress. Judge DAVIES, yesterday, decided the first application of Mayor WOOD for an injunction against the new Police Commissioners, by refusing it. But he based this decision solely and exclusively upon a technical defect in the complaint,—an omission on the part of the plaintiff to state that the application was made not only on his own behalf but also on behalf of other tax-payers of the City of New-York similarly situated. This omission the Judge held, was fatal,—and so he refused the decree asked without considering, or in any way referring to the real point at issue, namely, the constitutionality of the new law.

This question, however, may be decided by the other judges whose potential voice has been invoked by the respective parties. Judge ROOSEVELT, it will be remembered, granted an injunction against the new Commissioners, until final action should be had upon a writ sued out by the Attorney-General of the State, compelling the new Commissioners to establish the validity of the law under which they claim to act; and he also refused to grant an order to show cause why this injunction should not be dissolved. Judge PEABODY, however, did grant such an order, and yesterday this point was argued before him by Mr. NOYES on behalf of the new Commissioners, and Messrs. SEDGWICK & O'CONOR on the other side. When his decision is given we shall have advanced only one step,—and that may be a very short one,—towards the end. If he dissolves the injunction, the writ quo warranto will still remain to be argued and decided before Judge ROOSEVELT; from his decision, whatever it may be, an appeal will undoubtedly be taken to the full Bench, and thence to the Court of Appeals. When the contest will come to an end, it is not easy to predict.

It is certainly bad enough to have a Police under partisan control. But to have the Department merely as a bone of contention for two parties to wrangle over,—the public interest being left meanwhile to take care of itself,—would be too much for the patience of any but a New-York public.

ADVERTISING A CITY.—We have read a good many impressive essays on the commercial value of advertising, but we have never, until now, heard of advertising a City. The Philadelphia Bulletin thinks that the right-angled city might be greatly benefited by being advertised extensively both at home and abroad. Our cotemporary says:

"We must advertise ourselves well, in Europe as well as in America, and not merely in newspapers, but by all other methods. One of such methods is that proposed at the Board of Trade meeting, viz.: to send an agent abroad to let the European world know something about Philadelphia."

This proposition of sending abroad a blower to advertise so old a city as Philadelphia, is an idea as original as it is brilliant. But the Philadelphians are a good deal too modest; there is no other American city that has been half so extensively advertised in Europe. SIDNEY SMITH did a good deal of gratuitous advertising for Philadelphians, and we can hardly look into an English publication without seeing some allusion to the Pennsylvania metropolis. It was only yesterday that we unexpectedly found an advertisement of Philadelphia in the newly-published life of Sir CHARLES NAPIER, the hero of Scinde, whose biographer mentions that, among other eccentric operations by which he lost money, was investing in Philadelphia (doubtless meaning Pennsylvania) securities.

But still, the proposition of the Philadelphia Board of Trade is a most commendable one, and we hope it will be adopted. We would recommend the agent selected for this most important duty to take some lessons from Mr. BONNER, of the Ledger, or Professor HOLLOWAY, before going abroad. DAY and MARTIN sent an agent to Egypt to paste their show-bills on the pyramids, and the Philadelphia advertising agent might go a little further and write in large letters on the great wall of China, "Buy your Goods in Philadelphia." We fear the Lord Mayor of London would object to such a use being made of the dome of St. Paul's, or that would be a capital place for such an exploit.

Personal.

The Washington Star, speaking of the President and giving its editor's experience of the National Hotel malady, apprehends that the recent illness of Mr. BUCHANAN did not continue twelve hours, for he was as well as ever on Tuesday: the disease, however, appears in paroxysms, with respites of one or two days. The Star says:

"The President was entirely free from the action of the disease for three or four weeks up to the night before last, we hear, when he was somewhat affected by it until yesterday forenoon. It then vanished. Our own experience with it, which has been nearly purchased, indeed, teaches that in the President's case the disease is at its very last stage, and that, hereafter, he will be entirely free from it.

Two Roman Catholic Bishops were consecrated at St. Paul's Cathedral, in Cincinnati, on Sunday. Right Rev. JAMES FREDERIC WOOD was consecrated Coadjutor Bishop of Philadelphia, and Right Rev. HENRY DAUBEN JUNCKER, Bishop of Alton, Illinois. Archbishop PURCELL officiated, and the ceremonies were imposing. Dr. WOOD—now Bishop WOOD—was formerly a member of No. 2 Relief Fire Company in Cincinnati, and was known as "Father Wood." When he went away, he got from St. Patrick's a purse of gold, a golden cross and chain and ring.

Certain wicked people in the Canadian Parliament have been charged with receiving heavy bribes for pushing through railway charters and contracts. Proofs of bribery in one instance to the amount of $50,000, and in another of $100,000, are said to have been discovered, and will be produced in evidence before the Railway Committee. Meanwhile, pending the investigation, the Toronto press enters its objections to the exclusion of the reporters, as was attempted in Quebec when the Grand Trunk scheme was under discussion.

A remarkable case of existence under privation of food is spoken of in the Rochester papers. Mr. JOHN ELLIS, of Henrietta, who made an attempt upon his life by cutting his throat some week since, has not been able to take nourishment for twenty-seven days. He suffers little pain and but slight diminution of strength. He communicates with his family by means of a slate and pencil.

The new Mayor of Madison, Wisconsin, discourses in a style that is purely original upon the advantages of that fascinating region:

"Travelers to and from all parts of the globe will make their calculations to stop at Madison a few days to refresh themselves, recruit their tired and weary frames, preparatory to resuming their journey to all portions of the world. Such are our railroad advantages."

They have a member in the Ohio Legislature who takes a new view of "a question of privilege." According to the State Journal, Mr. PLUMB rose in the House, and said:

MR. SPEAKER—I rise to a question of privilege. I have been abused by the Ohio Statesman (the Democratic paper.) I consider it a great privilege to be abused by that paper.

The Louisville (Ky.) Journal says: In the Catholic Church at Lafayette, Ind., on Easter Sunday, ten couples were married, and each of the brides was named "Hannah." A cockney would call this a Hannahmated scene.

The Young Men's Christian Association.

NEW-YORK, Tuesday, April 28, 1857.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

DEAR SIR: I should not presume to trouble you either for the time to read or the space to insert any defence of the New-York Young Men's Christian Association, had you not published a harsh, and as I think, unjust censure upon it in your paper to-day. To this I ask the privilege of replying briefly.

In the first place, while I do not wish to underrate the usefulness and ability of those who have gone out, there is still reason to believe that a great many equally able and energetic young men remain behind. Against the names of Rev. Drs. SPRING and POTTS, I am not afraid to place the names of Rev. STEPHEN H. TYNG and THEODORE L. CUYLER, nor do we fear to carry the comparison further down. I might go further, but will simply quote Prof. CROSBY, who heads the list of withdrawals, as authority for saying that the present Board of Officers (who have nearly all been active in this secession movement) is "the very worst we ever had." Every man on the Board who has been worth having there, still remains—not all agreeing upon the policy of the Association, but all agreed that it has done nothing worthy of death.

Your article takes it for granted that "some" member insisted upon having a declaration upon Slavery, and that they have "accomplished their purpose." Permit me to say that I do not know any such members, and that I am perfectly certain that if there are any such, they have not succeeded. The Association has deliberately resolved that it will not take any test votes on Slavery or similar questions, and all its crimes are two, viz.:

1. That it would not ignominiously exclude or censure one of its most useful, honest and active members for a conscientious course of action (be that action mistaken or not.)

2. That it would not sustain and enforce a gag-law, borrowed from the famous Atherton rule, but declared itself fearless of free, manly Christian discussion.

Now, sir, what do you find to object to in this? What is there "rash," or "needless," or "political" in this?

Much is said of "Republicanism" in the Association and about it. Frankly I admit that the principles lying at the base of that party do instigate some of the discussions which have taken place among us. But the party so called has nothing to do with it. No party and is aimed at—no party man benefited. But the moral and divine principles in question have a strength in the hearts of the Christian world which will not be managed by "politicians" or "partisans," and which, relentless as the whirl of a planet in its fixed line of progress, will crush the Republican party as quickly as any other when it hesitates or palters with religious conviction.

We have not required the Young Men's Christian Association to pass any resolutions upon Slavery. But we have insisted on our right to discuss the matter in a purely religious and moral view—to consider whether indeed it is a religious question at all. In short, we abhorred a gag of any kind—we considered it a slur upon our character to have a resolution on our records, requiring the Chairman to keep a mastiff watch upon every speaker, and pounce upon him the instant he varied from any stereotyped sentiment or mill-horse track of universally-approved commonplace.

In conclusion, we trust that you will soon see that our noble Association is not a political club—is not entering into partisan conflicts—is not by any means crippled, and that a large majority of efficient, earnest members are still on hand, sustained by a larger majority of the Christian world.

Yours, respectfully,

A RASH YOUNG PILOT.

ARRIVAL OF MR. MORSE AT NEW-ORLEANS—THE RAMSEY AND CORMICK LAW—APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, April 29.

Mr. MORSE, Minister to New-Grenada, has informed the Administration by telegraph of his arrival at New-Orleans. He is expected shortly at Washington to report the particulars connected with his unsuccessful mission to Bogota.

In a business conversation, to-day, the President said that the Comptroller's jurisdiction under the Ramsey and Cormick law is absolute; and that the President must enforce the law as enacted. The matter causes much talk, as it is generally considered to overrule the opinion of the Attorney-General on the subject.

RESISTING STATE LEGISLATION.

THE NEW POLICE COMMISSION.

The First Injunction Dissolved by Judge Davies and a Second Argued Before Judge Peabody.

The City Hall Commission and the Surrender of Piers to Canal-Boats to be Tested.

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM.
Before Judge Davies

Fernando Wood vs. Simeon Draper and others.—Motion for a preliminary injunction. DAVIES, J. delivered a very long and elaborate opinion, refusing the application and vacating the preliminary injunction. The judgment, however, does not touch, or even allude to, the question of the validity of the law creating the Board of Police Commissioners, but relates exclusively to certain technical points in the allegations of the plaintiff, on the strength of which the motion is made.

Judge DAVIES says that the first question to be disposed of is, has the plaintiff such a standing in the Court as entitles him to the relief claimed in the complaint. He alleges, and it is not denied, that he is a tax-payer in the City of New-York and a corporator thereof. As such he is to be affected in his pecuniary interests by any law which authorizes the imposition of a tax,—as the law in question clearly does. The Judge, therefore, decides that the plaintiff has an interest, and such a one as the Court is bound to protect if it is likely to be illegally invaded; and in support of this opinion he cites the cases, Adriance vs. The Mayor, 1, Barber, 19; Kirby and others vs. Corporation; Christopher and Tilton vs. The Mayor, 13 Barb. 567, and several others. Upon these precedents Judge D. says "it must be regarded as the settled law of this Court, that it will grant its aid to restrain by injunction the imposition of any tax, or burthen on the tax-payers of the City, contrary to law, on a complaint filed by any tax-payer on his own behalf, as well as others similarly interested, or on behalf of any corporator of said City, having an interest in the corporate property therefor, on a similar complaint, showing an illegal diversion or application of the corporate property."

He then proceeds to consider the next question which is, whether the complaint shows sufficient facts to bring the present plaintiff within the principle of these decisions. In all the cases cited the plaintiffs claim the intervention of the Court, not only on their own behalf, but also on that of all others of like interest. This averment is omitted in the present complaint, in which the relief is only asked for by the plaintiff for himself alone. And upon this point Judge DAVIES says that the rule in reference to the proper and necessary parties is, that all must be made parties who have an interest in the result; and when a great many individuals are interested, the Court will often permit a few to represent the whole; but the bill should expressly state that it was filed as well on behalf of other members as those who are really made complainants. He cites a variety of case in which this rule has been laid down, and also one or two which seem to favor the opposite opinion, and says that on the whole he is satisfied, that the weight of authority is entirely with the proposition, that a plaintiff who seeks the aid of a Court of Equity, in a case like the present, must aver that he files his complaint, not only in his own behalf but that of all others similarly situated. Such an averment is essential to a complete determination of all the rights affected by the suit. As has been well observed, without it, the defendants might be subjected to a suit by every tax-payer of the City of New-York, while on a complaint with the necessary averments, a determination of the case would bind the plaintiff and all others having like rights and interests. Judge D. says he does not feel warranted in departing from these precedents, and therefore, without giving any opinion whether the plaintiffs might or might not put such a case on record as would entitle them to a decree for the relief they ask, he denies the motion for an injunction, and vacates the order for a preliminary injunction.

The Second Injunction on the Police Commissioners.

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM.—April 29.
Before Hon. Justice Peabody.

ARGUMENT ON THE SECOND ACTION—THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE LAW NOT MUCH DISCUSSED.

The People ex rel. Fernando Wood vs. Simeon Draper et al.—This case came up yesterday afternoon, on a motion to show cause why perpetual injunction should not be granted, and the act commonly known as the "Metropolitan Police Bill" be declared void. The action is based upon the same grounds as the first suit, being merely amended in the pleadings, in accordance with the decision of Judge Davies.

William Curtis Noyes, Esq., opened for the Commissioners. He alluded to the nature of the suit, and the effects of its decision. The chief point in his argument in opposing the motion was, that the Court was unable to grant the injunction, whether the law was unconstitutional or not. He thought that the proper and only remedy was by bringing a suit without injunction. The code, sec. 423 to 441, regulated the granting of injunctions quo warranto, and in many cases where relief was formerly obtained by injunction, were by those sections, compelled to do so merely by suits. This was a criminal case, partaking of a civil proceeding only so far as respects the fees of the offices; and injunctions could not issue in criminal cases. He thought this a well settled point. He would not argue the constitutionality of the law in this his opening, but would leave it, with proving that the Court had no authority to grant the injunction in the first place. Where a public functionary abuses his power by any act which bears on the community, his conduct excites attention, provokes popular resentment, and seldom fails to receive the punishment it merits. Should an individual be chosen for the victim, little sympathy is created for his sufferings, if the interest of all is supposed to be promoted by the ruin of one. The gloss of zeal for the public is, therefore, always spread over acts of oppression, and the people are sometimes made to consider that as a brilliant exertion of energy in their favor, which, when viewed in its true light, would be found to be a fatal blow to their rights.

In no government is the effect so easily produced as in a free republic; party spirit, inseparable from its existence, there sides the illusion, and a popular leader is allowed, in many instances, impunity, and sometimes rewarded, for acts that would make a tyrant tremble on his throne.

Theodore Sedgwick, Esq., for the plaintiff, reargued the case. He reviewed the arguments of Mr. Noyes, and came to totally different conclusions on the greater portion. He found some fault with the turn the arguments in both cases had taken; in not meeting the great question of the constitutionality of the law. The other suit was decided on purely technical grounds. The plaintiff was ready to meet the real question, and why would not the Commissioners wait for a few days, leaving the power over the Police Department undisturbed, until the question was decided, and not stop all actions with quibbles on points of practice? He went on to read various extracts from the Constitution, to show the conflict with the law. His argument, however, was in chief the same as that used by ex-Judge Edmonds in the first case.

Mr. O'Conor said that he did not intend to take part in the argument, but would read the following points:

PLAINTIFF'S POINTS.

First Point.—The Metropolitan Police bill, in its whole scope and design, and in every one of its provisions, including the repealing clauses, is manifestly repugnant to the letter and spirit of the Constitution, and is consequently void.

1. Numerous and carefully worded provisions of the Constitution, and the unanimous address of its framers to the people, show that a cardinal object of that instrument was "to reduce and decentralize the patronage of the Executive Government."—Convention Journal, p. 1,547.

2. Accordingly, as will appear by the same proofs, "the most important State officers are made elective by the people of the State, and most of the officers of cities, towns and counties are made elective by the voters of the locality they serve."—Convention Journal, p. 1,547.

3. An examination of the Constitution in detail will show that this highly approved principle of decentralization was extended to official power as well as to patronage; and that, even in the matter of election to office by the people, it was carried to the furthest practicable limit. One single case, for special reasons, was excepted from the general rule. Expressio unius exclusio est alterius.

1. The Senatorial, Judicial, and Assembly Districts are created for elective purposes merely, and are not governmental departments in any sense. Yet each of them as lie within the limits of a county, which is the largest recognized governmental department, are withdrawn from legislative control, and submitted to the government of the county authorities, i. e., the Boards of Supervisors. (Const., Art. 3, §§ 2, 5.)

2. The Legislature is not allowed to alter even these merely electoral districts, except at fixed and distant periods, i. e., on the return of each decennial census: (As to Senatorial Districts, Const., Art. 3, § 4. As to Judicial Districts, Const., Art. 6, § 16.)

3. It is intimated that the Legislature would conform to the spirit of the Constitution by conferring upon "the Boards of Supervisors of the several counties of the State further powers of local legislation and administration." (Const., Art. 3, § 17.)

4. So as to the spirit of decentralization even in the matter of election by the people, single Senate Districts, single Assembly Districts, and small Judicial Districts are directed. And in respect to counties, cities, towns, and villages, their elective officers are to be elected by the "locality they serve."

Second Point.—The proposition on which the Metropolitan Police bill is sought to be supported, is, that because there are no express negative words forbidding it, the Legislature may, for purposes of civil government, lawfully erect "a new and anomalous district unknown to the Constitution." The right thus to circumvent and overreach the provisions of the fundamental law, was expressly denied by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts in an analogous case. If it existed, it would render nugatory the most important features of the Constitution. It cannot be admitted.

1. The Constitution has recognized all the civil governmental districts of the State, thus giving them perpetuity by a constitutional sanction. They are: counties, cities, towns, villages, divisions of cities, town, or villages. Art. 10, § 2.

2. The power of selecting most of the principal State officers was vested in the people at large; the power of selecting some of them was vested in the people of districts created in the Constitution for this purpose alone. The power of selecting all county, city, town or village officers was vested, mediately or immediately, in the people of such county, city, town or village.

1. We say mediately or immediately, because when the officer is not to be elected by the people, he is to be appointed by some "authority" thereof; i. e. some functionary or functionaries of such county, city, town or village.

2. If the "authority" of the county, city, town or village in whom the Legislature might lawfully give to the central government the power of creating and appointing a local appointing power, no change would have been wrought as to local offices by the Constitution of 1846.

3. Patronage could be decentralized in no other way than by treating the people of the counties, cities, towns and villages as the original source of power in respect to all local officers.

Third Point.—The Constitution by a necessary implication forbids the Legislature to erect for any permanent purpose of civil government, new districts unknown to the fundamental law.

1. If that power exists in the Legislature our cities, towns and villages with their recognized divisions might be abolished, and all courts and officers therein also abolished.

2. The newly formed circles, arondissements, departments or cantons being unknown to the Constitution, their tribunals of justice, judges, offices and officers being wholly unprovided for therein, all the provisions of the fundamental law regulating the selection of local officers, would be inapplicable, and that great mass of patronage which it was intended to withdraw from the central power would be placed in the hands of the Governor and his revolutionary Legislature as the reward of their usurpation.

3. Under this view of the Constitution the whole Judiciary of the State except the Judges of the Court of Appeals and the Supreme Court, could be legislated out of office and a new set of District Courts, with Judges, clerks and other officers appointed by the Governor and Senate, or in any other way the Legislature thought fit, vested with their powers and jurisdiction.

4. So all the functions of local government now exercised by the local officers of counties, cities, towns and villages might be set off in parcels, each parcel having an anomalous district for itself.

1. Police in a district of four counties.
2. Lamps and gas in a district of two counties.
3. Paving and regulating streets, &c., in a district of a city and a half, and so on to the end.

The local officers for all these purposes of local government might, of course, be appointed by the Legislature itself, or any one else whom it saw fit to vest with the appointing power.

5. There is not a negative word in any of the provisions of the Constitution touching these subjects. But unless a prohibition shall be implied, numerous provisions of the Constitution are ineffectual and nugatory.

It then being quite late, it was agreed to adjourn until 10 o'clock this morning, unless another cause, in which Mr. Field was engaged, could not be postponed, in which case the argument would be continued at 3 o'clock to-day.

The Board of Aldermen.

The Board of Aldermen met last night, the President, Alderman CLANCY, in the Chair. The minutes of the previous meeting having been read and approved, the following preamble and resolution were offered by Alderman STERRS:

THE TWELVE PIERS FOR CANAL BOATS.

Whereas, The recent Legislature passed a law declaring that the twelve lower piers, from No. 1 to No. 12 East River, be exclusively used for canal barges, and

Whereas, It is believed that the depth of the water in said vicinity will afford important commercial facilities to another class of vessels, and

Whereas, The use of the wharves, piers and slips have always been under the control of the Corporation, and it is believed said act is not valid; therefore be it

Resolved, That the Corporation Counsel be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to test the constitutionality of said act.

Alderman TUCKER thought that it was time that such incendiary resolutions should be put a stop to. Members offering such resolutions only did so to make themselves conspicuous. Who ever heard of a Common Council, before the present one, meeting night after night to oppose measures passed by the Legislature? If the Board of Aldermen could do nothing better, they had better adjourn altogether.

Alderman STERRS contended that the Legislature had no right to legislate away his property. They had taken twelve of the best piers in the City for barges; and rather than submit to it, if any portion of that property belonged to him, he would plant a 32-pounder down there and fire it off. There never was such a set of cormorants as these Republicans at Albany. He trusted the Board would oppose such legislation.

Alderman MOSPEDON thought it was the duty of every citizen to resist a great number of the laws passed by the Legislature this last Winter. Those laws were simply outrages, and ought to be resisted by every constitutional means. He trusted that the resolution would be passed, and all resolutions of a similar nature. It was the duty of the Board, and as good citizens, to resist such acts as had recently been passed at Albany.

Alderman TUCKER was not a defender of the legislation at Albany, but when good laws were passed he regretted that the dominant party in this City should undertake, out of mere party-spirit, to oppose them. The fact was that these laws were passed by the aid of many good Democrats, who had left the Democratic Party, and hence the opposition offered to them by so many members of this Board.

Alderman ADAMS defended the resolution, and hoped it would be passed.

Alderman WILSON trusted that the resolution would prevail, and that action would also be taken relative to other laws which had been passed by the present legislature, and which were quite unconstitutional. The majority of the legislators at Albany were traitors to the United States. They ought not to be obeyed, for they had passed nothing but tyrannical laws, and it was the duty of the citizens in mass to resist them. Among others, the liquor law was a tyrannical one. For the size of the City, the inhabitants of New-York, for eighteen months past, when there was no license law, were as well behaved as those of any city in the world. Men would be fools to mind what these legislators said. The Albany Regency, as they had been called, had compelled the members from the country to vote as they pleased. If he lived till to-morrow (Thursday) night, he would try and get another resolution passed to oppose them.

The resolution was put to the vote, and adopted by 14 Ayes to 5 Nays.

CITY HALL COMMISSIONERS.

The annexed resolution was offered by Alderman BANTA:

Whereas, The recent Legislature of this State passed a law appointing Commissioners to build a City Hall; and whereas, it is believed that the same was an usurpation of power and infringes upon the rights of the Corporation; therefore

Resolved, That the Counsel to the Corporation be and he is hereby authorized and directed to test the constitutionality of said act.

Alderman TUCKER remarked that he supposed this resolution would also be adopted, and there was little use in saying anything about it. The resolution was adopted.

The report of the Committee on Salaries and Offices in favor of concurring with the Board of Councilmen to increase the pay of Clerks in the Mayor's office, was adopted. The salary of the Chief Clerk will henceforth be $1,500; First Marshal, $1,500; Second Marshal, $1,300; First Assistant Clerk, $1,500; Second Assistant Clerk, $1,200; Third Assistant Clerk, $1,000.

NO STEAM FIRE ENGINES.

The report of the Committee on Repairs and Supplies in favor of concurring with the Board of Councilmen, in confirming the award of contract for two Steam Fire Engines, at a cost of $3,500 each, was after some debate, laid upon the table.

The report of the same Committee in favor of concurring with the Board of Councilmen to increase the salary of the Fifth Clerk in the Bureau, from $800 to $1,000 was adopted.

A report from the Committee on Finances recommending concurrence with the Board of Councilmen in paying to Patrick Coyle the sum of $1,190 for losses which he sustained by the breaking down of a pier on which he had dumped manure, in 1854, while he had the contract for cleaning the Second, Fourth, and Sixth Wards of the City, by which he lost his manure, and otherwise incurred heavy charges, was, after some spirited debate laid over till this (Thursday) evening. Aldermen HEALY, FULLMER, and others contending that instead of being paid for the loss of the manure, he ought to be compelled to pay the City for the cost of rebuilding the dock, he having no right to dump manure there.

TREASURY EMBARRASSMENTS.

A communication was received from the Comptroller in relation to the embarrassments under which the City Treasury was laboring, arising from the mode adopted by the Corporation in paying for work done by assessment, which instead of making the City merely a trustee between the property-holder and the persons who perform the work, place the City Treasury in the position of Banker, and require it to advance the whole cost of the work as soon as the job is done and confirmed by the Common Council. In 1855 the payments, for a range of five years, exceeded the receipts on account of assessments, by the sum of $2,000,000. Under the ordinance of 1854, the City has already advanced $180,020 on contracts, of course still uncompleted, and of course still unconfirmed, and from which no collection could be received in most cases for years.

The object of the Comptroller, in presenting the communication, was to suggest another method for paying for work done by assessment. After receiving the communication, the Board adjourned to this evening.

Board of Councilmen.

The Board of Councilmen met on Wednesday, the President, J. N. PHILLIPS, Esq., in the Chair.

The Chairman of the Committee appointed to report upon the contumacious members who refused when ordered to vote at the previous meeting, not being prepared with a report, asked for delay. Councilman WARNER said the request was unnecessary, the resolution ordering the matter to be reported "as soon as practicabia." A member moved that the three gentlemen be allowed to take part in the deliberations, and to vote during the interval of the pending inquiry, or until it were otherwise ordered. The motion was carried unanimously.

Councilman OTTARSON then rose and signified his wish to retire, declining to take part in the proceedings until relieved from the charge of contumacy. He immediately proceeded to the door, and passed into the corridor. Councilman WARNER called the attention of the President to the fact that he was leaving, desiring him to order members to be found in their places. The President replied that the request of Councilman OTTARSON had been granted.

Councilman BULTEEL moved that the Comptroller report the amounts paid for pavement by the railway Companies.

Councilman MCCAHILL rose to a point of order, interrupting Councilmen WARNER, who was engaged in commenting upon the proposed resolution. The noise of the President's hammer, and the efforts of Councilmen MCCAHILL to explain, threatened a repetition of the scene of the previous evening.

A resolution, presented by Councilman WAUGH, was adopted, that the Receiver of Taxes report the amount of money received through the Collector, of personal taxes, and whether such amount has been deposited with the City Chamberlain.

A numerously-signed petition for the widening of Pearl-street was referred to the Committee on Streets.

It was moved that the owner of the mechanical contrivance in beaten copper, styled "The Washington Statue," be requested to remove it.

Councilmen WARNER thought the man who would move the removal of the statue of Washington ought to be expelled. The Councilman proceeded in a patriotic strain, uttering language extremely suitable for 4th of July oration.

Councilman BRADY thought Councilman FRANKLIN had a perfect right to move such a resolution from the impression that the statue not being the property of the Corporation might be in the way, and he might be justified in such a conclusion without the imputation of any want of patriotic or correct feeling.

The motion was afterwards withdrawn.

Councilman BOOLE called up the resolution passed by the Aldermen to appropriate $10,000 to test the validity of the charter.

Councilman CAMPBELL thought that $5,000 would be sufficient.

Councilman WARNER would advocate the appropriation, to defend the rights of the City from the attacks of the infamous Black Republican party at Albany. He felt indignant, and every drop of his blood was ready to cry out against these acts. Proceeding in the same strain, he concluded a very emphatic speech by observing:

"I do feel venomous, and I cannot help it; my City, right or wrong, but right or wrong, New York."

The motion to concur with the Board of Aldermen was adopted, by 35 to 10, Councilman BRADY remarking that it was useless to say anything, as he was well aware there were 31 persons present who would put either that or any similar thing through.

The Board then went into Committee of the Whole upon the regular calendar, and considered several motions as to street-paving and similar matters.

The Mayor forwarded the following veto against the extension of the lease to Thirty-fourth-street ferry.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, NEW-YORK, April 28, 1857.

To the Honorable the Board of Councilmen:

GENTLEMEN: I cannot concur with the two Boards of the Common Council in granting further extension to the lessee of the Thirty-fourth-street ferry, in which to commence running their boats, and therefore return the resolution to that effect without approval.

The lease to the present proprietors of the proposed ferry was made over one year ago, and was granted upon the ground of the public necessity for its speedy establishment. The theory which should govern the Common Council in the granting of facilities for public travel should be public accommodation in affording additional means of transit, and not to enable private individuals to reap personal pecuniary advantages.

The proposed ferry at the foot of Thirty-fourth-street to Hunter's Point is absolutely required, and was urged originally by property-holders and others as an indispensable improvement. It is my opinion it will be unwise and improper to grant the extension of the time asked in this case merely to accommodate the individuals interested in the delay. With this I am constrained to withhold my signature from the proposition.

FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

The House having resumed, the President complained that many members had left without leave.

Councilman BRADY moved that those members be placed under arrest, and be deprived the privilege of voting until action be had. The motion was adopted.

It was then moved by Councilman JONES:

Whereas, The Charter of the City of New-York vests in the law department thereof the control and direction of all suits at law in which the City is interested, therefore,

Resolved, That the Mayor of the City of New-York be, and hereby is, forbidden to commence any suits in relation to any acts of the Legislature, unless the same be commenced and carried on by and under the direction of the counsel to the Corporation.

The motion was lost by a vote of 20 negative, 18 affirmative.

The Board then adjourned to Monday next.

SUPREME COURT.

Before Hon. Justice Clerke.

Benjamin Tibbitts vs. Richard R. Ward and others.—This case having been brought to a hearing of both parties before Hon. Justice MITCHELL upon the bill of complaint and the answer of Joseph Blunt, in which it was alleged that the said Benjamin Tibbitts had no property or interest in the judgment referred to in the said bill of complaint, and had allowed his name to be used at the instance and for the benefit of Edward C. Delevan, and to prevent any inquiry unto the original consideration thereof, and further averring that the said consideration was fraudulent, and after full consideration a decree was made by said Justice in this cause on Feb. 4, 1854, that the said bill of complaint be dismissed as to the said Joseph Brunt with costs to be credited on said judgment, which said decree has now become absolute and the said costs have been taxed to the amount of $326 85 and credited on said judgment; and the said cause having now been brought to a hearing upon the said bill of complaint and the pleas of all the defendants averring that the said Benjamin Tibbitts has no interest or property in the said judgment, and Mr. Van Voorst having been heard on behalf of the plaintiff and Mr. Blunt on behalf of the defendants, it is now ordered and decreed with the assent of the counsel for the plaintiff, the said defendants not assenting, that the said bill of complaint be dismissed as to all the defendants, but no additional costs are allowed.

FINE ARTS.
READY-MADE CLOTHING, &c.

It has been aptly remarked by critics that good taste, being intuitive, genius of art were to be seen on the walls of even unpretending mansions, and that the best and purest taste was not always to be looked for in marble halls.

Apply the inference in the adornment of the outward man, and where, for a series of years, has been realized the discernment that has given eclat to the Ready-made Clothing business, and by productions the most recherché in style averted a subjection to the old regimen in getting suited, let the community answer and be assured that competition but prompts us to more strenuous endeavors in a determination to retain the supremacy hereinfore awarded our clothing. RATS, ROACHES, BED BUGS, &c.
NEW-YORK, April 12, 1857.

MR. HENRY R. COSTAR, No. 388 Broadway—Dear Sir; Having a great many Rats around my stable and shop, I thought I would try your Rat Exterminator, and bought one of your boxes, and my man fixed it according to your directions. The next morning he found over 150 dead rats. I have bought others' Rat Poison and found them humbugs, and take pleasure in pronouncing this no humbug, and that it will do more than you say it will in your advertisements. I have also tried it on steamboats, and satisfied them that it is the greatest thing of the age.

Respectfully yours, &c.,

M., at the said Bank in the City of New-York, from all persons who shall appear to be registered on that day on the books of the Bank as shareholders in the said Continental Bank, in the proportion of one new share of the increased capital stock at par, to every three shares then held by them respectively.

The amount subscribed, and not paid at the time of subscription, will be payable on the 1st day of July next, when certificates will be issued.

Such portion of the additional 5,000 shares as shall not be taken by the shareholders within ten days after the said 15th day of June, will be disposed of for the benefit of the Association body home, which, under the circumstances, is the only thing which could be done, as the men would not remain here, but return en masse to their homes, seeing no prospect of reaching you. I would, in conclusion, say that Col LOCKRIDGE has used every effort to forward our cause, and but for the unfortunate selection of TITUS to the command of Castillo, would ere this have succeeded in clearing the river, and joined you with a considerable force.

When in New-Orleans I observed that the Hon. PIERRE SOULE, Col. SLATTER and Mr. PILCHER were doing everything in their power for the advancement of the cause of Nicaragua, but they were all worn out and heartily tired of Col. THOMAS F. FISHER as agent, and say if you do not appoint another in his stead they will have nothing more to do with it as a Committee. I know it to be the fact that he is injuring our cause, Col SLATTER begged me to say to you that FISHER must be removed and recommends Col. G. M. RUTHERFORD, as the government Agent for New-Orleans, with the rank of Colonel,—this is right, as of my personal knowledge he has advanced several hundred dollars at different times—he is a man who stands high as an honorable man, with business talents of the highest order. As good a selection, in my opinion, cannot be made in New-Orleans.

There was much rejoicing in Greytown, at the unsuccessful issue of our enterprize up the river, in regular Grosser style, fandangoes, &c. The English say that they sympathize with us, and in case the Tennessee, (which is expected to return here to-night,) does not arrive, offer the use of one of their gun boats to transport the troops to Key West, Florida. On my arrival in the United States I immediately consulted with several eminent oculists, who all united in advising me to spend two or three months at the White Sulphur springs in Virginia, which owing to the shortness of my leave of absence I was unable to do. Having herewith tendered to you my resignation which I hope will be duly accepted, and notice given me addressed to the St. Nicholas Hotel, New-York, I will proceed to the Springs, as great hopes are given me of a perfect restoration of my sight.

Will you be so kind as to appoint Major JOHN B. HOOD as my agent to settle my business with the Government of Nicaragua: to receive my land warrant, and to purchase the estate of SAPOA, south of Virgin, on Lake Nicaragua, if there is sufficient due me to make the payment. I am sorry, General, that circumstances impel me to quit the service, but should I be so fortunate as to have my sight restored, I shall make you acquainted with the fact. Any service that you may require of me in the United States, give me the authority, and I will perform it to the best of my ability.

Captains WILLIAM and BEN WILLIAMSON started with me, but stopped at Mobile. BEN has entirely recovered from his wound with a slight limp.

With every wish for your health and success, I remain your friend and obedient servant, HORNSBY.

P. S.—Your late success, including 16th March, gives us a great deal of pleasure.

Election of the Trustees of the Society Library —A lively time among the Shareholders.

The annual meeting of the Shareholders of the Society Library was held on Tuesday night in the building of the Institution, for the purpose of electing fifteen Trustees for the ensuing year. Considerable interest attached to this meeting, arising from a personal controversy which had sprung up between the Trustees of the past year and the Librarian, Mr. JOHN MACMULLEN. The Trustees, and many of the shareholders, complained that since Mr. MACMULLEN's appointment, the increase in the salary department of the institution had been more than 100 per cent., and that the salaries paid were enormous and wholly unprecedented, caused by the necessity of employing others to do the labor which ought to have been performed by Mr. MACMULLEN himself, but which, as they allege, he has neglected from the commencement of his office. Another cause of offence given by Mr. MACMULLEN was his request for an increase of salary, notwithstanding the aforesaid increase of expenditure, which it was alleged was occasioned by his inefficiency. As stated in a circular, distributed among the shareholders, the question was "Shall we have an ornamental Librarian like Mr. MACMULLEN, sitting in the upper alcove of the library, or an efficient working Librarian at the desk?"

On his part, Mr. MACMULLEN, who resigned his situation on Monday, published a pamphlet, in which he complains of uncourteous treatment on the part of the Trustees, charges the system of conducting the affairs of the Library with gross faults; asserts that while the other public libraries in the City are making progress, the Society Library alone, through the mismanagement of the Trustees, is at a stand-still; that in order to raise money for procuring assistance to catalogue the books of the Library and for other help, he had to give daily lessons as a teacher, and spend money besides out of his own pocket, and that the institution was indebted to him for money thus disbursed. He also proposed sundry important changes in the management of the Library. In consequence of this difficulty, quite a lively time was had on Tuesday night, the meeting of stockholders being unprecedentedly large. The "regular" ticket, comprising the Trustees of the year just terminated, and who were proposed for reelection, was as follows:

Charles R. Swords, R. L. Kennedy, Charles E. Strong, Wm. H. Anthon, J. P. G. Foster, William Adams, Henry Van Schaick, George C. Anthon, Lewis C. Jones, Wolcot Gibbs, Robert Le Roy, Otis D. Swan, William J. Hoppin, Benjamin H. Field, George T. Elliot.

Gulian C. Verplanck, Chas. R. Swords, Hamilton Fish, Robt. L. Kennedy, Jacob Harsen, Otis D. Swan, John Bigelow, Wm. J. Hoppin, Jas. W. Beekman, Geo. T. Elliot, John H. Gourlie, Geo. B. Dorr, John Macmullen, Wm. H. Bradford, Henry J. Anderson.

The meeting was called to order by C. R. SWORDS, Esq., and on motion of W. H. ANTHON, Esq., Mr. E ANDERSON took the chair, and Mr. J. H. ANTHON was appointed Secretary. The reading of the minutes of the last meeting were dispensed with, and the Annual Report of the Trustees was presented. The library was therein described as being in a flourishing condition, being relieved from the incubus of a heavy debt, which for a long time had made its best friends despond, and being now, for the first time in many years, able to sustain itself. The new feature in the establishment, the Ladies' Reading Room, had been found to add much to its attractiveness. After the reading of the Report, Mr. HARSEN moved that Mr MACMULLEN should have liberty to make a statement relative to an anonymous circular which had been printed and scattered on the tables of the Library. Leave being granted, Mr. MACMULLEN addressed the meeting at some length. He confessed that he had been working all along for his private, personal ends, as the circular stated. He entered the Institution with that purpose in view, but it so happened that his personal ends were precisely the best ends of the Institution. The increase in the salaries complained of was them referred to. They are said to amount to the "enormous sum" of $2,557. This sum, he said, would have been enormous in the ancient stagnated condition of the Library. He was accused o neglecting the affairs of the Library, but in reply he read the flattering encomiums of the present Trustees in their last annual report, and confessed himself satisfied with their indorsement. As for his "modesty" in asking for an increase of salary, he simply asked for the $1,500 which the shareholders unanimously requested the Trustees to pay him a year ago, and offered besides to find them the money to pay it with. If this was immodest, he was content to suffer the aspersion. The circular claimed also for the Trustees the raising of $15,000, when the fact was that at a meeting held in February, 1856, the present Treasurer declared that the Trustees had done all they could, and raised only $2,000. The shareholders named a Committee who worked hard and brought thousands of dollars into the Treasury. This started the Trustees, who also named a working Committee, and thus the money was raised. Mr. MACMULLEN remarked that he was accused of being an "ornamental librarian, sitting in the upper alcove of the library, instead of an efficient working librarian at the desk." Of this, of course, he was not a fair judge, but thought he might safely say that the Library was not in a worse condition than when he took the post.

While Mr. MACMULLEN was speaking, the following letter was handed to the Chairman, and subsequently read by him to the meeting:

NEW-YORK, Tuesday, April 28, 1857.

To the Chairman of the meeting of the New York Society Library.

SIR: We, the undersigned, members of the present Board of Trustees, have seen a statement of this date, signed by Mr. MACMULLEN, proposing certain radical changes in the conduct and management of the Library, and accompanied by a ticket in which their names are included. They beg leave to state that their names were placed upon this ticket without their authority or consent, and that they entirely disapprove of the changes recommended by Mr. MACMULLEN.

Respectfully, Your Obedient Servants.

OTIS D. SWAN,
WM. J. HOPPIN,
C. R. SWORDS,
GEORGET ELLIOT.
ROBT. L. KENNEDY

In reference to this letter, Mr. MACMULLEN stated that he had only adopted a plan of frequent use in the election of trustees, whose names were often placed upon a ticket without their knowledge.

Mr. HARSEN said that his name also was on Mr MACMULLEN's ticket without his consent. Mr. BERRMAN likewise remarked that he had not been consulted.

Mr. PRITCHARD offered a resolution recommending that the late Librarian of the Institution, Mr. FORBES, should, in view of his great experience, and his zeal and attachment to the Institution, be placed in a situation where his aptitude in the affairs of the Library might be made available. The motion was put and lost. Mr. FORBES, we understand, has a memorial embodying the terms of the resolution, signed by over 200 leading members of the Institution.

On motion, the meeting then adjourned, and the balloting for Trustees was proceeded with. Messrs. G. T. STRONG, G. B. RAPELYE and JACOB HARSEN, were appointed tellers. The balloting occupied two hours and a half, and the counting was not concluded till past midnight. The whole number of votes cast was 217. There was a great deal of scratching, with about 30 scattering. The whole number of shareholders is 1,225, of whom several are minors and females. A very small proportion of voters took part in the proceedings of Tuesday night; but even such an attendance as was then present was a very unusual occurrence. The "Macmullen" ticket was defeated, with the exception of those names which were on the "regular" ticket. Mr. R. L. KENNEDY received every vote cast, viz: 217; Mr. OTIS D. SWAN and Mr. W. J. HOPPIN had 215 votes each; Mr. C. R. SWORDS obtained 214 votes. The "regular" ticket was elected, with the substitution of Mr. GULIAN C. VERPLANCK for Mr. CHARLES E. STRONG, the late Treasurer, who only lost his election, however, by three votes, Mr. VERPLANCK having 115, and Mr. STRONG, 112. The new list of Trustees is accordingly as follows:

Charles R. Swords, R. L. Kennedy, Wm. H. Anthon, J. P. G. Foster, William Adams, Henry Van Schaick, George C. Anthon, Lewis C. Jones, Wolcot Gibbs, Robert Le Roy, Otis D. Swan, William J. Hoppin, Benjamin H. Field, George T. Elliot, Gulian C. Verplanck.

THE PRIDE OF THE HUDSON.'

—The favorite steamer Thomas Powell, long known as one of the fleetest boats on the North River, notwithstanding the march of improvement that has been made in the construction of vessels—is again to be ranked among the floating palaces on the noble Hudson. During the past Winter she has had new boilers placed in her of extraordinary strength; a portion of her state-rooms have been removed, so as to afford ample space for promenade, or to sit and enjoy fine breezes and magnificent scenery whenever an opportunity may present; while other important alterations and improvements have been made in her arrangements, decorations, &c., that not only render her the fastest, but also the most beautifully finished and furnished steamer of her size afloat, entitling her to the appellation of "The Pride of the Hudson," which has been suggested as her future name. She is about to commence running as a day boat between this city and Poughkeepsie, leaving the latter place at 6:30, A. M., and New-York at 4 P. M. It is expected that she will make the trip between the two places, including her stoppages at Milton, New-Hamburg, Newburgh, New-Cornwall, Cold Spring, and Cozzens' upper landing at West Point, in about four hours, thereby allowing passengers down from any of those places about five hours for the transaction of business in the city. She will be under the command of Captain. A. L. ANDERSON, and will commence her trips on Saturday, May 2.—New-York Tribune, April 29.

☞ The only perfect Fountain Pen in the world. PRINCE'S PROTEAN FOUNTAIN PEN. N. B.—A new and important improvement has been recently added to this invention, by which any writer can graduate the flow of ink. The fountain cases are warranted as incorrodible, and the points of the Gold Pens are warranted for one year.

"We remember being counseled by the Professor of Rhetoric, in College, never, in writing, to arrest a free flow of thought, in order to look out a word in the dictionary, but to write on, an correct the diction afterwards. The reason assigned was, that a writer should take advantage of the concentration and glow of his mind, and not suffer it to become cooled and distracted while he investigates a question of language. For the same reason we prize "PRINCE'S Fountain Pen." It helps us to avail ourselves of the mind's best moods for composition. It is also an economist of time, soon repaying, by its saving in this respect, its original cost. A recent improvement has obviated our early objections to it, which arose from the insufficiency of the flow of ink. This difficulty no longer exists, the writer being able, by means of a new, ingenious contrivance, to regulate this flow at pleasure. No clergyman, we think, who gives it, as thus improved, a fair trial, could ever be induced to relinquish it; no man, indeed, whose literary or commercial pursuits require him to write hour after hour."

The public are invited to call and examine for themselves. Dépôt, No. 290 Broadway, corner of Reade-street.

WEDNESDAY, April 29—P. M.

The steamer Arabia sailed for Liverpool at noon with $1,039,212 in Bullion, and the Illinois arrived at 3 o'clock this afternoon with $1,489,060 from California. The former carried out a large mail and 179 first-class passengers. The Exchange market closed for this opportunity steady, but with sellers on London and the North of Europe, at the rates quoted yesterday. Most of the large remittances were made up at 109¼@109⅝ for Sterling, though 109⅝ was paid for particular signatures, or where a little time was granted to pay in the proceeds of the bills. The supply of Money on the Street was again increased, and the Brokers were quite easy. The demand on call at 7 ₰ cent. is fair, while discounts, outside of Bank, were not so much wanted; the rates on prime indorsed paper 8@9 ₰ cent. The Sub-Treasury received $175,078; paid $192,766, and held at the close a balance of $14,533,705. The San Francisco steamer, on the Pacific side, brought down to Panama $1,985,405 in Gold; the largest single shipment for several months past. We put this practical item, and the following paragraphs from the San Francisco papers by this steamer, in contrast with the "Gloomy signs from the Pacific," for which a veracious morning print of this City drew on its imagination to-day, only a few hours before the arrival of the present mail and treasure list:

From the San Francisco Price Current, April 5.

There is no change in the character of the advices from the mines. From all quarters we hear good reports, and we doubt not that this will prove to be the most prosperous season ever enjoyed. The attention of the people in the mountains is being turned in a marked degree to quartz, and new mills are being erected, and new veins opened in every direction. The secret of the successful working of quartz has been discovered at last, and there is no computing the wealth which will be derived from this branch of the mining for years—nay, centuries to come. The placer and hill diggings still continue to yield enormous amounts of gold, and it is well understood among the miners that the country has hardly been touched.

From the Alta California, April 5.

The business of mining, as will be seen by reference to our summary of news on that subject is everywhere prosperous. Never before have the miners, as a class, been doing better in California. To maintain and render permanent this flourishing condition of that important interest, capital is required to construct ditches, excavate tunnels, open leads, and erect quartz mills; all of which, when judiciously undertaken, are now demonstrated to afford not only safe, but lucrative openings for investment. And it is no matter of surprise that capitalists abroad have not shown greater readiness to put their money in enterprises now known to be so secure and profitable.

From the New-York Herald, April 29.

We are led to believe that the mines have been falling off in their yield for the last eighteen months to two years. * * We are given to understand that of late the yield has enormously diminished and that a large proportion of the diggers, disgusted with repeated failures and incapable of living on the profits of gold digging, have already betaken themselves to other callings. * * Too story of California will be that of the Atlantic States. We have had no gold mines to boast us an, but if we had had, our extravagance, our overtrading, our expansion could not have been greater. And the State into which the gold has dragged California, will be no worse than the State in which our railroads will leave us, when the time comes for their total ruin and the explosion of all parties concerned with them.

The Stock Market is rapidly recovering, and the firmness was more general to-day than for a fortnight past, although the market is far from being surrendered by the operators for the Fall. These parties were free sellers of New-York and Erie at the morning Board, at the lowest prices, 41@40¾, but as the price rebounded later in the day to 42¾@43, the stock took range with the general list and left off firm, with some appearance of new and strong buyers. Toledo and Illinois Central shares again felt the favorable influence of the reduced supply subject to the control of the Brokers, and the deliveries of the day were not got through, without paying a further advance on prices for the cash stock. At the close, Toledo was offered down, though the impression is current that further withdrawals of the stock will take place before the close of the week. There is scarcely a couple of thousand shares of the Illinois Central left to settle maturing contracts. Milwaukee and Mississippi recovered to 69 cash, that bid without sellers at the close. Michigan Southern advanced to 66¼, and Reading and New-York Central left off firm. New-York and Harlem, selling last week at 12 or a fraction below, has advanced rapidly to 18 ₰ cent. Three of the steamship notabilities, LAW, VANDERBILT and DREW have agreed to go into the new management to be elected next week. Such, at least, is the current report on the Street. The Bonds of the Company are firmer, 82¼ paid this afternoon for the first mortgage. The prominent fluctuations of the day were:

Toledo	69¾@10	@71¾	@70@69¾
Erie	40¾@41	@40¾	@42@43@42¾
Southern Michigan	63¾@64	@66@¾	@66@¾
Illinois Central	134@¾	@¾	@¾@¾
Harlem	15@¾	@16@¾	@17@18
Reading	82¾	@¾	@¾@¾
New-York Central	87¾	@¾

The May interest on the 6 ₰ cent. Bonds of the New-York Central and the principal of $150,000 of the old Syracuse and Buffalo section of the Road, will be paid on the 1st proximo by Messrs. DUNCAN, SHERMAN & Co. The Terre Haute and Alton and Belleville and Illinois town May interest will be paid at the Terre Haute and Alton office, William-street. The American Exchange Bank has made its usual half-yearly dividend of 5 ₰ cent. The Evening Post publishes the following:

FROM WASHINGTON.

Highly Important from Kansas—The Free-State Party Satisfied and Prepared to Co-operate with Governor Walker.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Daily Times

WASHINGTON, Thursday, April 30.

Advices have been received here from Kansas, by the Government, which are in the highest degree gratifying. Although a report had been industriously circulated, from Lecompton, that Gen. HARNEY was to accompany Gov. WALKER to the West, and that the new régime was to be inaugurated with blood, it had utterly failed in alarming the Free-State masses. These latter, under the leadership of Gov. Robinson, have resolved to coöperate with the endeavors of the Administration to secure a fair expression of the will of the people in relation to the question of Slavery, and will abandon their previous policy of inactivity. This is not a matter of surmise, but is the explicit declaration of ROBINSON himself, and it has been communicated not only to the Government, but also to Mr. WALKER, who is still in your City.

The Free-State population of Kansas are greatly encouraged by the increased in-pouring of settlers from the Northern States, within the last few weeks. Emigration from the South and from Missouri, which was always factitious and spasmodic, is on the wane. Moderate Pro-Slavery men, with a perception of the incompatibility of Slavery with the climate and character of the soil of the Territory, are beginning to reconsider their past opinions—the mere readily as their own material prosperity is rather impeded than enhanced by the burden of slaves whom they had brought with them. Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, New-York, Massachusetts and Connecticut, are each of them sending whole townships of emigrants here, whose movements have not been influenced by party zeal, but solely from a belief that rapid fortunes are to be acquired in Kansas, as a reward of honest industry.

The appointment of Hon. ROBERT J. WALKER, as Governor of the Territory, was well received there from the beginning, bnt as the period of his advent drews near, a real enthusiasm is being excited among all parties, and a willingness, in all minds, excepting those of extreme ultraist fanatics on both sides, to depend npon his sagacity and wisdom for a solution of past difficulties, and an equitable adjustment of the claims of the rival factions hy which we have been so sadly agitated. It is more sure than ever that Kansas will enter the Union as a Free State; but a satisfactory hope is beginning to be entertained that this desirable result will be obtained without the he rt-burnings which had been anticipated.

[FROM OUR REGULAR TELEGRAPHIC REPORTER.]

WASHINGTON, Thursday, April 30.

The number of land warrants issued during April under the bounty act of 1855 was over 3,000, requiring nearly half a million of acres. Altogether more than 200,000 warrants have been issued, to satisfy which twenty-five millions of acres are necessary. Six thousand warrants have been issued under the same act to persons who rendered military or naval service in the revolution, or to their widows, requiring a million of acres.

The Board to examine the various plans for a steam revenue cutter have concluded their labors and sealed their report, which is to be opened by the Secretary of the Treasury on his return from Georgia.

The President has recognized ERNEST ANGELBRODT as Consul for the Electorate of Hesse Cassel at St. Louis.

Mr. MEDILL, vice WHITTLESEY, enters on the duty of the first Comptrollership to-morrow.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, April 29.

Mr. WHITTLESEY leaves his office as First Comptroller to-morrow. He speaks freely of the impropriety of the interference of the Attorney-General in the case of Ramsay and Cormick, which was before him. He throws up the case because, he says, he cannot go into a fight which he will not be able to see the end of. Had the claimants produced their facts ten days before, he would have made an award. Were he to make an award now, it would present a case similar to that of Stoughton and Slater, and a mandamus would be granted by the Circuit Court here to the Secretary of the Treasury for the payment of the award.

Congress decided that there was a contract, and that the contract had been broken by the Postmaster-General. The Government, last session, through the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, took an appeal back to Congress from this decision. Mr. WHITTLESEY, therefore, suspended action upon it. But the session passed, and Congress did not alter their decision. The case was therefore taken up again by Mr. WHITTLESEY, and he was about to make an award, when the Attorney-General, at the suggestion of the Post-Office Department, interfered, and gave his opinion that RAMSAY and CORMICK have no contract. Mr. WHITTLESEY thinks the case of the contractors infinitely stronger than was the case of RICHARD W. THOMPSON. He thinks that the interference was unjustifiable, and entirely unprecedented in the history of the Government. He will leave on record his views on the whole subject, together with all the facts of the case.

The Board of Naval Constructions have decided upon the plans and specifications for the construction of the steam revenue cutter for New-York, and the decision will be opened when Secretary COBB returns.

The Navy Department is making an effort to fit out the East India squadron. The ships will be ready by the 15th of May, hnt where are the crews to come from?

Mr. REED will again visit this city, before his departure for China, for the purpose of receiving his final instructions, verbal and written. The Secretary of State has received, from various sources, a flood of information and any number of suggestions relative to the commercial interests of the United States in China, and the best means of promoting the same. Some of the hints are, perhaps, theoretical and visionary, while others are prompted by individual interests. It may not be generally known that our late treaty with China expired on the 12th of June last, by limitation. It was made for 12 years only. Mr. REED is to be charged with making a new treaty, but is not required to make it at Pekin, or a une quo voce. He will go there if permitted, for the purpose, hut will not be instructed to force his way in conjunction with the naval forces of England and France.

He will be instructed to secure for American trade, besides the five Canton ports, access to various other ports, and also to the chief marts and centres of commerce in the interior. Whether he is also to be instructed to protect the opium trade is not settled. The English have a number of fast-sailing and well-armed junks, which force their way up the rivers to places where their freight of opium may be disposed of. The Americans had but one small vessel in this business at the last advices. But, under the protection of a naval force, such as we shall soon have there with the addition of some steamers of light draft, our people will assist the English in the plan of "driving the wedge of civilization" into the interior of the Flowery Land.

SELBY PARKER'S fancy store has been sold out under Government execution for Abolitionists of the North, who got him to go security for CHAPLIN, the slave stealer.

The Cabinet have not been in session this week; bnt the individual members have been pretty busy with the details of their several offices.

Senator HUNTER arrived here yesterday from his residence in Virginia. It is a very rare thing for him to appear here during the recess of Congress, and nothing but special business ever brings him, although he is within a few hours' travel of this city.

It is rumored that he was brought here in consequence of the complaints made by Secretary CASS and Assistant Secretary CLAYTON of the conduct of the Clerk of his Committee of Finance, Mr. HARMON, better known as "Q, in a corner," in making a newspaper attack upon those officials, in relation to the Galphin and the Thompson claims. Mr. CLAYTON, it is said, felt especially aggrieved by this representation, and complained of it to Mr. HUNTER. Mr. HARMON's office is permanent, at an annual salary of $1,000. Unless he can explain the matter satisfactorily to his chief and to Mr. CLAYTON, the Chairman of the Finance Committee, may not he [illegible] an office of value."

FROM HAVANA.

Arrival of the Steamship Quaker City.

MR. MORSE AT HAVANA—DESERTERS FROM WALKER—CAPTURE OF ANOTHER SLAVER—INCREASED ACTIVITY IN BUSINESS, ETC.

The steamship Quaker City, Captain SHUFELDT, from Mobile the 22d at 7 P. M., and Havana at 12:30 P. M. on the 25th instant, arrived here on Wednesday afternoon.

The Quaker City made the passage from Mobile to Havana in 43¼ hours—remaining in that port 22 hours.

Nothing of importance was transpiring at Havana. The weather was quite cool and the health of the city and country perfect.

Mr. MORSE, the Commissioner from the United States to New-Granada, arrived at Havana from Aspinwall by the steamship Granada on the 24th, and proceeded the next morning in the Empire City to New-Orleans.

The Granada has also on board a number of deserters from WALKER's army, on their way to New-Orleans.

A slaver was captured near Trinidad a few days since. Negroes from the Coast and Coolies from the East were arriving on the Island.

The Spanish Armada, for the invasion of Mexico, has not yet arrived at Havana.

Business has been more active than usual. Sugars have again advanced, hut prices are nominal. Molasses the same. Stock of Sugar on hand 180,000 boxes. Exchanges have improved—London Sterling, 60 days' sight, 7⅛@9 ₹ cent. premium; New-York, 3 ₹ cent. discount; New-Orleans, 1⅛@2 ₹ cent. discount.

The steamship Empire City, GRIFFEN, from New-York for New-Orleans, arrived at Havana on the 24th, and left for her destination the following morning. The Granada, MCGOWAN, from Aspinwall, arrived on the evening of the 24th. Off Cape Hatteras, 28th, (8 A. M.,) the Quaker City passed a United States sloop-of-war, beating to the northward.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

HAVANA, Saturday, April 25.

Every day we learn of sales of vessels belonging to you and your neighbors—from New-York to Portland—which are known to these who sell, as well as to those who buy, to be intended for the coast of Africa. There are not less than ten vessels now in this port preparing for the coast, hut there is nothing in their supplies here which would indicate, sufficiently for judicial inquiry, their proposed trade. Supplies go ont by honest traders from the United States, to meet all their wants, at given points of communication:—and the vessels so used from the United States as especial carriers may take return cargoes or not, as may suit their convenience—to land in Cuba. The ark Clara B. Williams, the bark Minetouke, the brig E. B. Lawton, schooner Record, brig Zululah, and others of names forgotton are on the private lists of our contractors and negro speculators—500 more negroes have been safely landed—one cargo, 320 I believe, captured at Trinidad last week.

Mr. MORSE, the New-Granada Commissioner, came up yesterday hy the Granada from Aspinwall, and leaves to-day for New Orleans by the Empire City.

We are daily expecting war arrivals from Spain.

The health of our city is good. Exchanges have improved 7⅛@8 per cent. on London premium. New-York, 3 discount. Freights are ruinously low—rates as bargains can be made with arbitrary merchants, leaving the game in their own hands.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS.

Board of Aldermen.

The Board of Aldermen met last evening, Alderman CLANCY, President, in the Chair. Several matters of more than ordinary interest were passed upon.

A CONVENTION TO EXPRESS THE VOICE OF THE PEOPLE.

The following preamble and resolutions were presented by Alderman WILSON:

Whereas, The time is approaching when the various enactments of the recent Legislature affecting this City are intended to go into operation, and when efforts will be made to give them efficacy and to carry out their several provisions and designs. It is, therefore, becoming in view of the magnitude of the interests involved, and the character of the legislation which it is sought to apply to us, to seriously deliberate and determine our duty; and

Whereas, The City of New York is unrivaled in every respect in the Western Hemisphere, and is the first commercial City of the world—the acknowledged metropolis of this nation, it may justly claim, in millions of wealth, by its population, about equal to one-fourth of the State, by its gigantic enterprise, hy its unequaled advantages, by its magnificent public works, hy its princely contributions to national and State purposes, and hy its fidelity and loyalty to the Federal Union; a large, if not controlling, voice in the affairs of this Commonwealth; the people of the State not only, but also of the whole country, take a just pride in its preëminence and greatness, and are reciprocally interested in its growth and prosperity; and

Whereas, It contains within itself all the elements of a separate State, of respectable strength and proportion, excepting as to its mere extent, and even that, were it essential, might be conveniently added from contiguous territory, which now thrives upon its growth and represents its overflowing expansion; and

Whereas, Its history as a City begins more than a century before the Revolution, and its vested rights and franchises then conferred, to whatever other political tyrannies it may be subjected, are as impregnable as the Constitution which has hitherto secured them, and will endure as long as the jurisprudence of the country; and

Whereas, The City holding this position in the affairs of the nation and of the world, has been subjected for a series of years to the continued and overweening domination of the rest of the State, until at length it is reduced to a mere dependency upon the central powers and Government of the State, having no voice, permitted no remonstrance, even in relation to its own interests; and

Whereas, The recent Legislature have carried this invasion far beyond all previous example and have imposed upon us a series of measures deeply affecting many of our most vital interests, and not only without the application bnt in defiance of the urgent remonstrances of this City and its inhabitants; and

Whereas, They have stripped us of the right to control our local, commercial, municipal and governmental affairs, and subjected us to a return in an unprecedented degree of the miseries and oppression of centralized power which the Constitution of 1846 studiously designed to break up and destroy; and

Whereas, These measures are imposed upon us in a tyrannical manner, because we are thereby taxed and governed without our consent—the City and County of New-York, in consequence of the criminal neglect and default of the Legislature of 1856 to re-apportion and re-district the State, as required by the Constitution, not being awarded its proportionate representation under the Census of 1855; and

Whereas, The New Charter, and the various measures enacted for our government, were passed without any knowledge of the wants or interests of this City, and without any regard for the will, or any attempt to ascertain the wishes, or obtain the assent of its Common Council or of the people themselves; and

Whereas, All classes of men, representing all the industrial pursuits of life, mercantile, mechanical, agricultural, and professional, are alike involved in this common invasion, and equally menaced in the common danger; therefore be it

Resolved, That the Electors of this City and County be requested and authorized to elect five delegates from each Ward to meet in a City Convention at the City Hall, to express the voice of the people as to the recent legislation of the State, as far as it applies to this City, and in case they disapprove it, to devise such measures as may seem wise and adequate to protect us from the aggressions of the State authorities.

Resolved, That in order that such Convention may be composed of men without distinction of party, that each elector be allowed to ballot for three delegates, and no more, and the five persons receiving the highest number of votes in each Ward to be declared duly elected, such election to be conducted under the direction of Inspectors to be hereafter designated.

Alderman TUCKER said there were statements in the resolutions in relation to City and State matters that nearly every school boy knew to be correct. But he knew that the resolutions had not been written by Alderman WILSON; although they contained his sentiments, they were written and presented for the purpose of creating a political excitement. He hoped members would not vote for the resolutions.

Alderman WILSON denied that the resolutions had been sent to him. He received his ideas from himself; he received nothing from anybody else. He sometimes secured the services of a clerk to smooth over what he wrote, and do it up nice. Therefore he hoped the gentleman from the Eighth would henceforward entertain a higher respect for him.

Alderman MCSPEDON said there was a similar convention held in 1846.

Alderman DRAKE contended that it became every member of the Board to be modest in the matter. There was an issue at stake, and they should be cautious—keep still and let the Courts decide it. There was one Judge Roosevelt who owned half of Broadway who would give a rich man's decision, and, perhaps, do something for the poor man. He had always acted about fair with the member from the First, and he hoped it would be laid over; if not, he could not vote for it. He did not want to get into a controversy with any of the Courts; he didn't want to be shut up in the little place down yonder. (Cells in the Tombs.)

Aldermen OWENS moved that the subject be postponed and made special order for Monday night. Lost.

Alderman WILSON hoped the resolutions would be passed without delay. He was sorry to see gentlemen favoring delay from fear of arrest—that he did not consider a good excuse.

Alderman DRAKE thought that remark came from an unkind hand. He wished the gentleman to understand that he was no snivel, and that, when the proper time came, he would stick to his frends as long as he had breath.

Alderman TUCKER moved an indefinite postponement.

Alderman WILSON moved the adoption of the resolutions.

Alderman OWENS moved to strike out "that a convention be held." Lost—14 to 8.

Alderman FULMER, before voting, asked whether the resolutions did not involve an expenditure of money.

Alderman STEERS (in the chair) answered that they did not involve an expenditure of money unless they should pass the Board of Councilmen and receive the signature of the Mayor.

Alderman FULMER was satisfied.

Alderman MONEGHAN moved the previous question.

After considerable wrangling as to what the main question was, the previous question was carried, as were the resolutions, hy a vote of 14 to 8.

Noes—Messrs. Corwin, Tucker, Griffiths, Blunt, Fulmer, Valentine, Owens, Drake.

THE POST-OFFICE SITE.

Alderman BANTA offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That his Honor the Mayor be empowered to open a negotiation with the President of the United States, or the Post-Master General, for the cession of the land comprehended within the angle formed by Broadway and Park-row, or such portion of the upper part of the Park fronting on Chambers street, between Broadway and Centre-street, as may be necessary for the purposes of a Post-Office; and to ascertain whether an arrangement can be effected which shall meet the wants of the General Government for this purpose, and be advantageous to the People and Corporation of New-York, and to report the result to the Common Council.

After a few remarks, the resolution was adopted by a vote of 15 to 7.

FURTHER RESISTANCE.

The following was offered by Alderman COULTER:

Resolved, That the Comptroller be and is hereby requested to issue no warrants for or in favor of any person claiming or exercising any official position, hy virtue of the recent acts of the State Legislature of this State, relating to this City, namely, an act to build a City Hall in this City, an act to amend the Charter of this City, an act to create a Metropolitan Police, an act to regulate and improve Central Park; and that his Honor the Mayor, and the Clerk of the Common Council, be, and are hereby directed to withhold their signatures from any such warrants, if issued, until said acts of said Legislature are established hy the Courts of the State, before which the legality of said laws are now being determined.

The resolution was adopted.

CHIEF ENGINEER ON STEAM ENGINES.

The following communication was received from the Chief Engineer, and ordered to be printed:

OFFICE OF CHIEF ENGINEER,
No. 21 Elizabeth-street.
NEW-YORK, April 30, 1857.

To the Honorable the Board of Aldermen:

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned, to whom was referred the subject of Steam Fire Engines for the use of the Fire Department, in the extinguishment of fires, respectfully presents the following as his views of the subject:

The subject is one that has for years periodically come up for discussion, and many attempts have been made by parties interested to force Steam Fire Engines upon the City. The utter failure of the one in use some fifteen years ago, settled for a time the question, but new inventions and moneyed speculators springing up within the last three years who were foolhardy enough to invest their funds in a scheme that cannot but prove a failure in the end, the subject has again been brought forward, and the City asked to pay the money lost by parties who experimented on a worn-out idea, by purchasing machines that will be of no use whatever to the City. During the many years I have had the honor to be a fireman and an engineer, I have had ample opportunity to witness the performance of volunteer firemen, and I have yet to know where life or property could be saved or fires extinguished more speedily than by the use of the present apparatus, in the hands of such men as now compose the New-York Fire Department. You are doubtless aware that steam engines have been in use in other cities, and also know that in a majority of the places in which they were used, they were soon laid aside and their firemen returned to their old-style engines. Even had they performed the labor promised by their designers in other places, in this City they cannot but fail. These engines, it is conceded by all—even those interested in their manufacture—cannot be drawn to fires by steam; and with the streets in the condition they usually are in during the Winter season, it would be impossible to convey them to the scene of a fire in time to do any service. Two-thirds of the fires in New-York are extinguished, and the apparatus housed, in less time than one of these ponderous machines could be brought out for use. Another great objection to the introduction of steam fire-engines, that the city must employ men to do the duty of firemen, which is totally at variance with the organization of the Department, and such an act could not but be detrimental to its future prosperity. Acknowledged as it now is, the best organized and most efficient department in the world, I sincerely hope your honorable body will pause before taking a step towards making our cherished institution a band of hirelings. In Boston the Department is paid, and their acts, as commented upon by the press of that city, should act as a warning to yourselves. Boston had a steam fire-engine to perform the duty. On its first trial the building was, unfortunately, utterly destroyed, but the steamer was burned up in the fire it allowed to burn, after being deserted by its attendants.

In conclusion, I would state to your honorable body that they are wholly unnecessary, and it would be an extravagant waste of money to buy and keep steam fire-engines. I would respectfully recommend that the subject be dismissed, and that the money that would be spent for buying and keeping steam-fire engines, should and could be much better used in providing locations for engine companies Nos. 16, 20, 25, 27, 41, 56 and 58, as the leases of the property on which these Companies are located have or are nearly expired, and they will be without places of deposit. Those Companies are now located in the wealthiest part of the City. Should the amount raised be greater than the above expenses, the balance could be well spent in new hose for the Department.

Youre respectfully,

H. H. HOWARD.

THE MAYOR'S SALARY RAISED.

The Committee's report and resolution, in favor of raising the salary of the Mayor from $3,000 to $5,000 per annum, came up.

Alderman TUCKER said the Mayor did not want it, and would veto it if passed.

Alderman WILSON said it was toadying to the Mayor; that the Common Council were making fools of themselves, and becoming a parcel of toadies. The Mayor didn't want it. The Mayor was the right sort of a man. Like him (the Alderman from the First) the Mayor had seen the roughs and the lows of life, and knew all about them, therefore he liked him for Mayor, and he would support him, but he wouldn't vote to raise his salary. The Board of Councilmen had voted to raise Joe. Taylor's salary,—a pretty set of Democrats they were, to be sure.

Alderman FULMER favored the increase, because they would have a regular "Sam" there soon.

Alderman DRAKE had heard a great deal of eloquence upon other men, but he hadn't heard a word in favor of the Board of Aldermen. The Legislature had taken away their segar money—$20 a month—and as that little donation had been withdrawn, he would vote against an increase to any body else.

Alderman WILSON thought the Board lacked moral courage, which he had in abundance, and which he considered was greater than physical courage. In his opinion, a man with moral courage could overcome another man, he didn't care how big he was.

The resolution was passed by a vote of 15 to 6.

Noes—Messrs. Wilson, Corwin, Tucker, Blunt, Owens, Drake—6.

The Board eat until about 9 o'clock, and then adjourned to Monday next.

The Sound and North River Steamboats.

The Special Committee of the Board of Aldermen, appointed to take into consideration the propriety of removing the landing of the East and North River steamboats, met yesterday afternoon in the City Library—Alderman STEERS in the chair. The owners or agents of the lines threatened with removal were, hy advertisement, invited to report themselves, and state their views on the subject. With the exception of the representative of the Fall River Line, who was out of town, they did so. Capt. HEYWOOD represented the Troy Line; Mr. DANIEL DREW represented the People's Line to Albany, and the Stonington Line to that pretty little town in Connecticut en route for Boston; Mr. NORTON, the Norwich and Worcester Line; Mr. PECK, the Hartford and New-Haven Line; Mr. SAXTON, the Bridgeport Line; Mr. LOCKWOOD, the Stonington Line, in connection with Mr. DREW.

At the invitation of the Chairman, Mr. HEYWOOD, of the Troy Line, was the first speaker. The boats of the line, he said, were the Francis Skiddy, the Commodore, and the Rip Van Winkle. The owners of those steamboats, and he was one of them, had great objections to urge against the removing of the slips for the reception of those boats, to any point above Canal-street. There were many reasons for these objections, hut the principal one was the fact that the consignees of the freight brought to the City by these boats, were located in the lower part of the City. Nine-tenths of the freight had to be delivered below Chambers-street, and four fifths of it below Warren. Moreover, the present landings were convenient in all respects for the temporary disposition of goods. Ample stowing room and sheds were provided, at a cost to the company of many thousand dollars. All such investments would be lost to them if they were compelled to remove, hut a still more important matter was, that they did not know where to move to. What with the extra expense of cartage, and the impediments to which they must be subjected hy such a change of position, Mr. HEYWOOD thought that the Troy line would have to stop running altogether if they were compelled to remove from the present location.

The Chairman asked Mr. HEYWOOD if the removal would not be eventually profitable to the owners, through their running less risk of collision with ferry and other boats. Mr. HEYWOOD thought not. They had had no collision with boats. There was no impediment to their moving as freely in the river as was necessary. The pier they occupied was private property—their own property in fact. There was everything against the proposed change, and nothing in its favor.

Mr. D. DREW, of the People's Line, occupying Pier No. 16, North River, between Liberty and Cortlandt-streets, agent, also, of the Stonington Line, Pier No. 2, North River, was next called. His objections were, in effect, the same as those of the previous speaker. If compelled to remove, their business, if not broken up, would be impeded almost to the point of ruin. All the merchants were against the change. He would like to see the first merchant who was in favor of it. The New-York and Erie Railroad station might as well be removed as the People's Line steamboats. In a few years the Company had spent more than $30,000 on their pier, in dredging out the slip and in building wharves. In relation to the Stonington line, Mr. DREW had similar objections to interpose to the removal. They brought freight to merchants whose warehouses were all in the lower part of the City, within a quarter of a mile of the landing-place. He did not believe that there was any danger of collision with ferry-boats in the transit of the steamers. The Plymouth Rock and the C. Vanderbilt were the principal boats now running on this line. If the landing-places were removed to the East River, any distance up town, Mr. DREW did not know what would become of the Stonington Line.

Mr. NORTON, of the Norwich and Worcester] line, whose steamers, the Commonwealth, the Connecticut and Worcester, are located at Pier No. 18, North River, coincided with the previous remonstrants. The large hulk of the freight brought hy that line was delivered below Chambers-street. Moreover, they brought goods from the New England States to be forwarded to the South, which had to be shipped for Philadelphia, or other places, the piers where such shipmeat was to be made being, in the present location, quite convenient of access. The merchants in New York did not desire the change. It would annoy, and even injure them considerably. The chances of collision with ferry boats, if the ferry boats took ordinary care, were altogether too remote to be taken into account.

Mr. PECK, of the Hartford and New-Haven line, whose boats occupy Piers No. 24 and 26, East River, spoke to the same effect. He said, in addition, that if the landing places were removed up town, the extra charge to shippers for carriage of goods to the consignees down town would so increase the cost of freight that manufacturers would choose some other mode of conveyance, and packet ships and tow-boats would, at cheap rates, enter into competition with the steamboats. The consequence would be that the steamboat lines would be broken up.

Mr. HAYWOOD indorsed that opinion. The goods would have to be landed down town and the freight traffic would be taken away from the steamboats. They could not subsist merely on the conveyance of passengers, and would therefore have to be discontinued.

Mr. NORTON wished to state that a remark in a daily paper that the speed of the East River Boats, in passing up or down the East River, was from 14 to 20 miles an hour, was incorrect. The speed of those boats was from 8 to 11 miles only.

Alderman STEERS remarked that he had seen the East River boats going at a much greater rate of speed than that himself.

Mr. SAXTON, of the Bridgeport Line, occupying Pier No. 24 East River, was the next remonstrant. He said that not one-tenth of the freight brought by that line was delivered above Chambers-street, and to his knowledge, the majority of merchants were adverse to the removal.

Mr. LOCKWOON, of the Stonington line, spoke to the same effect.

The Chairman said he understood that a Committee appointed by the cartmen of the City was in attendance, to express the opinion of that body on the proposed memorial.

Ex-Alderman BRIGGS therenpon rose and presented the following resolution:

At a regular meeting of the American Cartmen and Expressmen's Association, held at their rooms, No 187 Bowery, Wednesday evening, April 29th, 1857, on motion of E. SNETHEN the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That this Association appoint a Committee of three to confer with the Committee appointed by the Common Council in regard to moving the Albany and Boston steamboats, and to request of them that the Albany boats be kept where they now are; and the Boston boats are to be removed, that they may be located at a point between Catherine and Pike slips, in the slips now occupied by the floating and screw docks.

A. G. REYNOLDS, President.

JOSEPH E. KELLY, Secretary.

Mr. SNETHEN said that 5,000 cartmen were opposed to the removal of the boats.

Mr. BRIGGS said that the cartmen wished the East River boats moved to the place now occupied by the floating and screw docks, hnt did not, as in the terms of the resolution, wish the Albany boats removed.

Ex-Alderman KELLY spoke for some time against the removal of the boats.

The Council tee adjourned to Tuesday next, at 2 o'clock P. M. In the course of his remarks as Chairman, Alderman STEERS said that it would be shown at a subsequent meeting that a majority of the merchants of the City were in favor of the removal.

The Quarantine Commissioners.

At a meeting of the Board of Quarantine Commissioners, on Wednesday, the following proposition was submitted for consideration:

NEW-YORK, Wednesday, April 29, 1857.

I will sell the lease of Coney Island Point with all the improvements, containing about fifty acres, for $17,000—lease to run ten years from the 1st day of May next; said Point being leased to me by the Commissioners of Common Lands of the town of Gravesend, rent $400 a-year. B. HENDRICKSON,

Mr. BOWNE offered for the consideration of the Commissioners the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Commissioners abandon the contract made with THOMAS R. LUSH, for a part of the farm of JOEL WOLFE: First, for the reason that the title to said property is believed to be defective; and, secondly, for the reason that a part of Coney Island can now be leased for the term of ten years—the above facts not having been known to the mover of this resolution until this day.

Mr. BENSON offered a substitute for the resolution presented by Mr. BOWNE, as follows:

Resolved, That we deem it inexpedient to entertain any proposition for the location of the Quarantine establishment on Coney Island, believing it to be unsuitable in every respect for that purpose, and that we carry out the contract made with THOMAS R. LUSH, trusting from the examination made by our legal adviser, that the title thereto is perfect.

Mr. BOWNE insisted upon the adoption of the resolution offered by him, relative to locating the Quarantine at Coney Island. Up to this time he had understood that Coney Island could not be procured for such purpose; but to his astonishment he had just learned that it could be without any difficulty, and being far preferable to the location proposed to be purchased by Mr. LUSH. He therefore urged in the strongest terms the adoption of the resolution first submitted by him. On the conclusion of Mr. BOWNE's remarks, the question was taken upon the substitute offered by Mr. BENSON, and adopted by the affirmative votes of Messrs. HALL and BENSON.

At the meeting yesterday, a letter was read from Mr. HENDRICKSON, stating that in consequence of arrangements made by him since his offer to sell the lease of Coney Island to the Commissioners, he would withdraw his proposition to sell.

Messrs. BENSON and HALL considered this as settling the question of Coney Island; whereupon a very lively discussion sprung up between these two gentlemen on the one side, and Mr. BOWNE on the other. Mr. BOWNE contended that the State Executive officers were altogether ignorant of the possibility of obtaining Coney Island, and beyond doubt would have selected it had they supposed it to be within their power to purchase. Whereas, it had been represented to them that Coney Island was a part of the town of Gravesend, and under its exclusive control, and that a Quarantine would not be allowed there under any circumstances.

Mr. HALL remarked that the Governor and his associates were not favorable to Coney Island as a hospital station, and would not have accepted an offer for it had the same been made. He added that, in his opinion, the locality was a totally unfit place for a Quarantine, and should not receive his support. At this point Mr. HALL discovered that our reporter was present, and requested him to leave, the subject under consideration, he said, being of a private nature.

Yesterday was the last day allowed for the purchase of Seguine's Point, and the owner of that property was to have been present with his deed, and receive his check.

Meeting of the Central Park Commissioners.

The Commissioners being duly qualified met on Thursday at 3 o'clock. The whole Board was present. The following officers were unanimously elected:—President, JAMES E. COOLEY; Vice-President, JOHN A. C. GRAY; Secretary, CHARLES W. ELLIOTT.

Messrs. DILLON, BUTTERWORTH and HOGG were appointed a Committee to report at the next meeting of the Board:

First: As to what steps are necessary to secure the arsenal grounds included within the boundary of the Central Park, under the provisions of the law lately passed.

Second: To inquire and report as to the rents of buildings included in the Central Park grounds; also, as to the terms of the leases.

Third: To confer with the Croton Aqueduct Board respecting the new reservoir about to be built.

Messrs. GREENE, RUSSELL and HUTCHINS were appointed a Committee to inquire and report to the next meeting of the Board as to the present condition of the affairs of the Central Park, and especially with respect to officers, plans and employees.

Messrs. GREENE, HUTCHINS and FIELD were appointed a Committee to prepare and report suitable hy-laws.

Enforcement of the License Law.

The Executive Committee of the New-York City Temperance Alliance met last evening at No. 461 Broadway, and resolved as follows:

I. That although the recently enacted license law is not what many of the strong friends of Temperance wished or expected from this Legislature, yet as it is the law of the land, and if faithfully enforced, will do much to eradicate the evils of the dramshops and tippling houses: we are impressed that it is the duty of friends of temperance, morality and good order, to secure its enforcement.

II. That we ask the coöperation of the citizens of New-York in the following proposed efforts:

1. To apply to the Judges who appoint the excise commissioners for the selection of men that will carry out the true intent of the law.

2. To appear before the Commissioners at all their meetings and, if possible, prevent the licensing of improper men.

3. To appeal, if necessary, to the Grand Jury for the indictment of the Commissioners, if they give licenses contrary to law.

4. To gather up evidence of the illegal sale of liquor, inform the public officers, and prosecute all violations which they neglect.

5. To call upon our citizens, who annually pay nearly ONE MILLION DOLLARS on account of the pauperism and crime caused solely by intemperance, to assist us in bearing the pecuniary burdens of this work.

III. That the Corresponding Secretary be directed to address a respectful letter to Judges OAKLEY and INGRAHAM and Recorder SMITH, declaring in behalf of this Alliance, that while we do not ask them to appoint as Commissioners of Excise, men who would in no case license the sale of intoxicating drinks, we solemnly protest against the appointment of men who would reduce the rate of license to the lowest figure, and thus give license to all who would pay that sum, regardless of their character or qualifications, or of the public good.

IV. That the Corresponding Secretary be directed to prepare an Argument or Memorial to be presented to the Excise Commissioners, at their first meeting, setting forth the provisions of law, urging the necessity of restricting the licenses within very narrow limits, and assuring them no efforts will be spared to secure the due enforcement of all the provisions of this law, relative to those who give license, or who may receive license, or who may engage in the sale of liquor without license.

The Committee then adjourned to meet in the same place on Saturday evening, at 8 o'

BOOKS OF THE WEEK.

If we were asked to name the author of the nineteenth century whose writings are the most likely to make a permanent impression upon the mind of the age, we should unhesitatingly reply—JOHN RUSKIN. JOHN RUSKIN is almost the only earnest writer of the present day, but his earnestness is not of the fanatical kind; he utters no opinions at second hand, nor advances any theories which he does not at least attempt to sustain by logical argument.—There is nothing of the dry-rot of skepticism about him. He says what he says from an earnest and religious conviction of its truth, and, like all earnest men, he makes proselytes of the crowd by merely appearing to believe in himself. He has affected the mind of his readers as DICKENS has affected the style of his cotemporaries. It must be a perversely strong will that can read RUSKIN'S books and not be influenced by them. His opinions are often grotesquely absurd, but his manner of utterance is always eloquent, his temper serious, and his style fascinating. There never was a new author so laughed at and ridiculed by critics and the literati as RUSKIN, on the appearance of his first volume of Turnerian criticisms. But, in spite of the laughter and sneers by which he was greeted, he soon began to be talked about, and his second volume was looked for with interest. Nothing could have seemed more hopeless than for an unknown man to set about achieving a reputation and reforming the world, by publishing a costly book devoted wholly to criticisms upon the works of one landscape painter. But that was what RUSKIN attempted, and he did not seem to be at all conscious that he was not engaging in a perfectly legitimate, reasonable and popular work. He simply announced that TURNER was the greatest artist, in landscape, that had ever lived, and that the great masters whom the world had been worshiping were incompetent ignoramuses. But he was a bold and vigorous downward-striker; a false idol was a falsehood to him, and it never entered into his thoughts that gold, ivory and precious stones were entitled to any more respect as objects of worship than clay or marble. He was in search of truth, and all falsehoods were alike to him, so he let fly his shafts at the long-worshiped Claudes, Poussins and Salvators, just as fearlessly as though they had been the commonest images of clay. A terrible outcry immediately arose from the worshipers of the old idols; and the old story of Diana of the Ephesians was once more rehearsed. But the Oxford Graduate was not the kind of man to be turned from his purpose by the hootings of owls and the jabberings of parrots. He kept on issuing his volumes, and instead of softening his tone, or modifying his opinions, he grew more vehement, more dogmatic, more serious, and more eloquent, and he found time to produce that splendid piece of criticism, the Seven Lamps, in which architecture was, for the first time, scientifically and religiously treated. Although RUSKIN aimed to criticize art, and to expound the true principles upon which all artistic effort, to be successful, must be based; yet he has done infinitely more than this by teaching more eloquently and impressively than any other man inspired author had done before, that there is nothing noble in life which is not true and earnest. The effects of his teachings may be seen in all the art-products of the present time, in architecture, as well as in painting, and, to a great degree, in the elevated tone of thought now discernible in the rising generation of artists. The last volume of this original and powerful writer, forming the fourth volume of Modern Painters, has been republished by WILEY and HALSTED. The volume is devoted exclusively to "Mountain Beauty;" a noble theme nobly treated. There is a brief appendix on "Modern Grotesque" and "Rock Cleavage," which are independent essays not properly belonging to the subject of the volume. In "Modern Grotesque" he discusses the subject of caricature with his accustomed ability and gravity, and he pays his respects to "Old Ebony" in a truly charming style. Such a man as RUSKIN, who is so keenly alive to nobleness of action, could not entertain any other feelings than those of contempt for such a heartless, irreverent and scurrilous joker as "Old Ebony" has always been, from the time of the "Noctes" downwards. In alluding to a caricature in Punch, which had offended "Old Ebony," RUSKIN says,

"Thus, Blackwood's Magazine—which from the time that, with grace, judgment and contortion peculiarly its own, it bid the dying KEATS back to his gallipots, to that in which it partly arrested the last efforts, and shortened the life of TURNER, had with an infallible instinct for the wrong given what pain it could, and withered what strength it could, in any great mind that was in anywise within its reach, and had made itself, to the utmost of its power, frost and disease of the heart to the noble spirits of England,—took upon itself to be generously offended at this triumphing over the death of England's enemy," &c.

With all our admiration for RUSKIN, we cannot help thinking that he draws a rather long bow in asserting that the jeers of Blackwood had in any way shortened the life of TURNER, who had reached the appointed age of man when he laid aside his pallet and brushes.

The name of SWAIN is not an eminent one in English literature; and unless it should acquire new lustre from some one besides CHARLES, the Manchester poet, we fear that it will become altogether unknown to English readers before many years. But that is no reason why Messrs. WHITTEMORE, NILES & HALL, of Boston, should not publish a complete collection of his writings in a pretty little gilt-edged volume, with cobalt covers, uniform with Ticknor's edition of TENNYSON and LONGFELLOW, if they consider the speculation a safe one, and the public taste justifies the enterprise. The world, if no better or wiser for SWAIN'S poems, is certainly none the worse for them. If they do no good they can do no harm, and it is quite possible that there are human hearts to be softened by reading his Essays in Verse. Mr SWAIN'S career has been anything but poetical. He entered the dye-works of his uncle in Manchester at the age of fifteen, and continued at that employment fourteen years, when he became a partner in a calico-engraving business, at which he has continued until the present time, writing verses occasionally for periodicals and annuals. Mr. TUCKERMAN visited the poet at his home in Manchester, and was so lucky as to find him at lunch with his family. It was a pleasant moment to drop in upon a poet, and our countryman was most favorably impressed. He says that "all around and within indicated comfort and taste," which is most pleasant to know; also that "the rooms were hung with choice engravings." Mr. SWAIN must have been equally pleased with his visitor, for he has dedicated this volume to him. Mr. SWAIN'S poetry is precisely of the kind that we should expect from a well-to-do, respectable Manchester mechanic. The first stanza in the volume is a good indication of the quality of all that follows:

"Oh! there's a power to make each hour
As sweet as Heaven designed it;
Nor need we roam to bring it home,
Though few there be that find it!
We seek too high for things close by,
And lose what nature found us;
For life hath here no charms so dear
As Home and friends around us."

TICKNOR & FIELDS have published, in a volume uniform with their beautiful editions of LONGFELLOW and TENNYSON, Mrs. JAMESON'S Characteristics of Women, a work that is too well known to need any comments at this time.

The art of talking is, no doubt, one of those arts that can be cultivated, like dancing and singing, and, as everybody talks, nothing can be more desirable than that everybody should talk well. A good talker, however, is almost as rare as a good painter, or a good anything else; and there can be no doubt that there would be many more good talkers if every one did not take it for granted that talking comes by nature, and therefore no schooling is needed to make one perfect in the art. FOWLER & WELLS have published a manual of conversation, or a hand-book of the art of talking and debating, in which all the rules are given for speaking correctly, and conversing pleasantly. Some of the axioms in the manual we should question: as for instance, "to talk well one must think well." So far from this being true, there are many good talkers who never think at all, and who, like Juliet, speak yet say nothing. It is laid down as a canon of conversation, that "in the interchange of ideas, as in material commerce, we are bound to recognize, first of all, the grand fundamental principle of equity. We must be willing to give an equivalent for what we receive." This is quite true in one respect; but most good talkers will be quite satisfied if those to whom they talk will give their attention, as an equivalent for what they receive. COLERIDGE, who was the most eminent talker of his time, praised Dr. CHANNING for being a good listener.

THE MORMON OUTRAGES.

The Murder of Captain Gunnison—Interesting Correspondence with Judge Drummond.

BETHLEHEM, Penn., Tuesday, April 14, 1857.

JUDGE DRUMMOND: You will please recognize in me the widow of Capt. GUNNISON.

I have just finished your letter of resignation to the Attorney-General, and see confirmed by you the impression I have always held myself that the Mormons were the directors of my husband's murder; (notwithstanding, I have both from BRIGHAM YOUNG and CARRINGTON received the kindest letters of condolence, &c.)

Pardon me then, my dear Sir, for thus intruding myself upon you. But, if you can find the leisure, you would confer a lasting favor upon us by giving us the particulars of such information as you have gleaned.

You can better imagine than I can by words express, the feelings that thus influence me to impose this much upon your time. Beepectfully, &c.

M. D. GUNNISON.

Judge Drummond's Reply.

CHICAGO, Ill., Monday, April 27, 1857.

Mrs. M. D. Gunnison, Bethlehem, Penn.:

MY DEAR STRANGER FRIEND: Your kind note of inquiry, under date of the 14th inst., was duly received at this place on the 21st inst., but owing to personal matters, I have been wholly unable to reply to your letter until this day, for which delay I trust your generous heart will find no fault. You ask me "to give the particulars of such information as I have gleaned" in connection with the murder of Capt. JNO. W. GUNNISON, who was most foully and inhumanly murdered on the Sevier River in Utah Territory, in A. D. 1853. This information I will cheerfully give you not only as a sence of duty to you as the wife of a good man who fell prematurely at his post doing duty, but as a matter of fact which should go to the world as a portion of the history of that barbarous transaction.

In the month of November, A. D. 1853, Capt. GUNNISON and eight others (one of whom was a Mormon) were murdered on the Sevier River in Utah Territory, and the report was quite current that they were murdered by the Indians; subsequently, at a session of the Grand Jury in Juab County, Utah Territory, Hon. JOHN F. KINNEY presiding, twenty-six Indians of the Parvante Tribe were indicted for the said murder, and by some arrangement between Colonel E. J. STEPTOE, of the United States Army, and KANASH, the Chief of the Parvante Tribe—eight Indians (some of whom were Squaws, and one old blind Indian man) were put upon their trial for murder at Nephi City, and strange to say, a Mormon Jury found the Indian warriors not guilty, and as against the old crippled and measurably blind Indians, three in number, found a verdict of manslaughter, and they were sentenced to three years imprisonment in the penitentiary of Utah, being the full length of time prescribed by for such offences. These verdicts and the finding of the juries under the law and the evidence, so wounded and mortified Judge KINNEY that he at once adjourned the court, unavoidably coming to the conclusion that there was false dealing somewhere, and in fact not only he, but Col. STEPTOE, Gen. HOLMAN, the Government Attorney, Hon. GARLAND HUNT, the Indian Agent of the Territory, Capt. JAMES B. LEACH, the mail contractor between San Diego in California and Salt Lake City, and COLUMBUS L. CRAIG, all of whom were cognizant of the influences brought to bear on the trial, arrived irresistably at the conclusion that the Indians were found not guilty by order of the church, and that DIMICK B. HUNTINGTON, an Indian interpreter, and spiritual brother-in-law of Gov. BRIGHAM YOUNG, was the man who bore the decree and order of the church to the jury, who implicitly found the verdicts according to the mandates of the church, as is now the universal rule and order of jury trials "in the peaceful valleys of the mountains."

At the November term of my Court, held at Fillmore City, in the year 1856, one LEVI ABRAMS, a Jewish Mormon, was put upon his trial for the wilful and unprovoked murder of TOEBE, a favorite warrior of the Parvante band; and during that trial, much was said by both Indian and white witnesses relative to the murder of Capt. GUNNISON and his party, which raised strong presumptions in my mind that certain white men were participes criminis to that cruel murder, hat not wholly conclusive. In this case, the Jury—true to the Law of the Church and basely false to the Law of the Land—found ABRAMS not guilty. At the same term of the Court, a favorite Indian warrior of Governor YOUNG, by the name of ENRIS, was put upon his trial for the murder of Capt. GUNNISON and others, to which I particularly allude in this letter, and at this time and upon this trial, I became convinced beyond the possibility of a doubt, that the whole affair was a deep and maturely laid plan to murder the whole party of engineers, or surveyors, and charge the murder upon the Indians, who, by the way, have the credit for killing a great many persons. In the trial of the warrior ENRIS, the evidence disclosed the fact that he was the property of Governor YOUNG, that he could speak English quite fluently, and that when he left the city of Salt Lake, he went under the order of Governor YOUNG and the Church. Again, it was repeatedly proven that ENRIS was in company with several white men on the day before the murder, and that they were all on their way toward the engineer's camp.

Again, it was proven on the same trial by a number of Indian witnesses, that only four shots were fired by the Indians, and that all the rest were fired by the Mormons; and that by order and direction of the Mormons, the Indians sprang out of the ambush, where they lay disguised during the night before the firing, which occurred about sunrise in the morning, and went across the river to scalp and otherwise maltreat the men in their agonies of death, but more particularly to save the Mormon who fell in the fight, provided he was not fatally wounded, and told the Indians how they could recognise the Mormon from the Americans, which was by certain peculiar marks on the garment which he wore next his body; but the poor fellow, with the other eight, had received a fatal shot, and died on the ground with his priestly robe worn next his body. The white men were so accurately described that any one acquainted with the principal men of the Mormon Church, could quite readily select the men as described by Old PARESHONT and HEAP OF ELK, as well as several others equally as honest and intelligent, who were the principal witnesses in behalf of the Government; and right here I beve no hesitation in saying who some of them are and were, and this I do for the benefit of those men who may go to Utah as appointees under the present Administration, viz.: William A. Hickman, Anson Call, Alexander McRay, Ephrelm Hanks, James W. Cummings, Edwin D. Woolley, George Peacock, Lovi Abrems, and —— Bronson, all of whom are in good fellowship and standing to this day in the Church; and although the evidence on behalf of the Government against ENRIS was clear and conclusive, and no rebutting evidence, the Mormon Jury, true to the order of the Holy Priesthood, found a verdict of not guilty. And here, my dear friend, painful and revolting as it is, the true history of that sad scene requires me to say that the evidence disclosed the fact that several Indian warriors crossed the Sevier River immediately after seeing that they had accomplished the work for which they were set apart, and proceeded to cut off the legs and arms of the men while in the agonies of death; also to scalp them and then rifle their pockets of their contents, and take off their clothes and put them on themselves, and that ENRIS, the then prisoner at the bar, cut Capt. GUNNISON'S body open and took out his heart while he was yet alive, and the heart so full of blood that it bounded on the ground after being taken out; and not content with that, they cut out his tongue and otherwise cut and mangled his body. True it is, my dear friend. I know that this dark and bloody picture will prostrate every nerve of your tender form, and painful and heart-sickening as it is to me to think of, let alone pen anything in connection with that revolting murder—but duty to you, duty to the country, duty to a broken and violated law, duty to bleeding and downtrodden humanity, duty to a correct history in connection with the dark and bloody ords of the order of the High Presthood of the Utah Mormons, and, above all, duty to the fair name and reputation of a brother officer, engaged in the faithful discharge of his duty, and one who fell in the noonday of life at the hands of an organized band of systematic pirates, robbers and murderers, and whose blood yet cries to heaven for a witness to attest in thunder tones the dread, but sad and solemn truth connected with his tragic fate, all seem to require that when I answer his wife, the companion of his youth, who so naturally applies to the man above all others possessed of the legal truths connected with this history, that I should tell them precisely as they are, and not suppress any part thereof. I can well imagine, Madam, your long sufferings and anxieties relative to the death of your husband, and I most truly assure you that your conclusions relative to his death were well founded. I leave you and all others to conclude whether I am not fully justified in my conviction in the premises, and whether I could rationally have come to any other conclusion than the one to which I here refer, as well as in my letter of resignation to Attorney-General BLACK.

With an ardent desire that you may live to a ripe old age, enjoy all the blessings which this life can afford, (and above all, in that list of blessings, good health) live to see the day when the foul stain of Mormon oppression and tyranny shall be effectually smoked in this our happy country, your husband's untimely death vindicated by the courts and laws of the land, and after death in that grand Lodge above be reunited to the partner and companion of your youth.

I now remain, dear Madam,
Your friend and ob't servant,
W. W. DRUMMOND.

KANSAS AFFAIRS.

Address of Hon. F. P. Stanton, Secretary and Acting Governor, to the People of Kansas Territory.

FELLOW-CITIZENS: Hon. ROBERT J. WALKER, present Governor of the Territory, accepted his appointment from the President upon condition that he should not be required to leave Washington until the first of next month, and circumstances beyond his control render it impossible for him to start before that day; he may therefore be expected here about the middle of next month, and will then assume the Executive authority of the Territory.

During the absence of the Governor, by the organic law of the Territory, the whole duties and responsibilities of the Executive are devolved upon me, by virtue of my commission as Secretary. On assuming to exercise the functions of this high office, at this critical juncture in the affairs of the Territory, it is not inappropriate that I should briefly indicate the course which I shall pursue.

The Government of the United States recognizes the authority of the Territorial Government in all matters which are within the scope of the organic act of Congress, and consistent with the Federal Constitution. I hold that there can be no other rightful authority exercised within the limits of Kansas, and I shall proceed to the faithful and impartial execution of the laws of the Territory, by the use of all the means placed in my power, and which may be necessary to that end.

The Government especially recognizes the Territorial act which provides for assembling the Convention to propose a Constitution, with a view of making application to Congress for admission as a State into the Union. That act is recognized as presenting the only test of the qualification of voters for delegates to the Convention, and all preceding repugnant restrictions are hereby repealed. In this light the act must be allowed to have provided for a full and fair expression of the will of the people through the delegates who may be chosen to represent them in the Constitutional Convention. I do not doubt, however, that in order to avoid all pretext for resistance to the peaceful operation of this law, the Convention itself will in some form provide for submitting the great distracting question regarding their social institution, which has so long agitated the people of Kansas, to a fair vote of all the actual bona fide residents of the Territory with every possible security against fraud and violence. If the Constitution be thus framed and the question of difference thus submitted to the decision of the people, I believe that Kansas will be admitted by Congress, without delay, as one of the Sovereign States of the American Union, and the Territorial authorities will be immediately withdrawn.

I need scarcely say that all the power of the Territorial Executive will be exerted with entire impartiality to prevent fraud, to suppress violence, and to secure to every citizen a fair opportunity for the safe and peaceful exercise of the election privilege; and it will be no less the duty than the earnest desire and great pleasure of the Governor, or acting Governor of the Territory, to carry out in good faith, the policy avowed by the President of the United States, in his recent inaugural address, in which he declares it to be "the imperative and indispensable duty of the Government of the United States to secure to every resident inhabitant the free and independent expression of his opinion by his vote. This sacred right to each individual must be preserved," and "that being accomplished, nothing can be fairer than to leave the people of the Territory, free from all foreign influence, to decide their own destiny for themselves, subject only to the Constitution of the United States."

Nothing is wanting but to secure the confidence of the people of all parties in the sincerity of the declared intentions of the Territorial Executive to carry out these principles in good faith, in order to induce the coöperation of all good men in the pending measures for adopting a State Constitution. The principles themselves cannot fail to be acceptable to the sober judgment of the people, and I ardently hope, for the sake of the paramount interests involved, that the necessary confidence will not be withheld.

The deplorable events which have marked the history of the Territory up to this, have doubtless left their natural results of enmity and heart-burnings among the people, as also upon the criminal records of the Territorial Courts. Indictments have been found against many of those who acted in a military capacity under the authority of the Territorial Government, for acts and excuses alleged to be wholly illegal and unjustifiable. On the other hand, similar prosecutions have been instituted against those who resisted the Territorial authorities, and who undertook to retaliate for the alleged wrongs committed against them. It is my deliberate opinion that, in order to promote peace and harmony, and to secure the future repose of the people, there ought to be a general amnesty in reference to all these acts on both sides, which grew out of the political contest, and which were not corruptly and feloniously committed for personal gain and to gratify individual malignity. These measures, if adopted at all, ought to be adopted generously, without any consideration of the origin of the difficulty, or without question as to the party which may be responsible for the wrong. It will involve no concession or advantage to either party, but will be merely an act of clemency, designed to obliterate, as far as possible, from the hearts of the people all memory of the disastrous and lamentable contest which has heretofore desolated this unhappy Territory. It it shall have that effect, though it may pardon some instances of gross wrong and outrage, it will tend to calm the excited passions of the people, and to prevent similar occurrences in the future. It will be a measure of conciliation and peace, but will leave the people free from apprehension in the future; so they can securely devote themselves to those important labors which are destined to make this Territory a great, prosperous and happy State.

FRED. P. STANTON,
Sec'y. and Ac'g. Governor.

LECOMPTON, April 17, 1857.

Letter from a New-York Republican in Kansas.

From the Rome Sentinel.

LEAVENWORTH CITY, Tuesday, April 14.

I am glad to assure you that I have no doubt but that Kansas will be free. She may possibly form a Slave Constitution, as the Pro-Slavery party have the entire "running of the machinery" in their hand, but I do not deem even this certain. But, in any event, the immense free emigration to the Territory settles the question; and should Kansas form a Slave Constitution, and be admitted as a Slave State, she could not one year remain so. Even the Pro-Slavery men, many of them concede that the Free States have five to their one in the Territory; and could a fair vote be taken at the June election, I have no doubt that result would be apparent. The vote for the election of Mayor in this city yesterday, resulted in favor of the election of a Free-State man by over 200 majority, no receiving about two-thirds of the vote cast, and this too, by excluding all who had not resided here for six months, which was decidedly to the disadvantage of the Free-State men. This has always been regarded as a Pro-Slavery place, and may therefore be looked upon as an index to the vote in the Territory. Furthermore, I will do the Administration the justice to concede that I do not believe they mean to interfere in behalf of the "Ruffiene," and which, as you know, I could not say of its predecessor. At least I will say this as far as regards Secretery STANTON, who came in with us yesterday, addressed us on the boat before arriving here, and also the citizens here after his arrival. If he acts as the index of the Administration, I repeat I think they mean to act fairly and impartially between the Free State and Pro-Slavery voters of the Territory. In saying this, do not understand me as relinquishing my conviction that Congress in the proper body to legislate for the Territories; but as that can not now be hoped, it is to be left for the people of the Territory to decide as to the character of their institutions, it is gratifying to believe that they will have a fair opportunity of doing so, and which has heretofore been denied them.

This, as I have said, I believe Secretary STANTON is in favor of having them do. He said he should regard it as particularly unfortunate if any large class of citizens should abstain from a participation in the election in June, as by so doing the will of the people could not be known; and he as strongly urged and advised that the Constitution which should be framed by the Convention in September, should contain a single clause upon the subject of Slavery, allowing or prohibiting it, and that that clause alone be submited to the people for their ratification or rejection, to be incorporated into their Constitution, as they by their vote should thus determine. By this means they would be speedily admitted into the Union with a Constitution which the people of the Territory favored; and unless such a clause were inserted and submitted to the people, he didinot believe the country would be satisfied, and that there again would be "a return to those lamentable scenes of violence and disorder which had crimsoned their rivers with blood."

He spoke quite at length, but these are the main points upon which the people of the North, or indeed the people of the Territory are interested. All seem to be very well pleased—satisfied, at least—except the Free-State men, with the portion of the address advising them to participate in the June election. They concede that if the plan of Mr. STANTON was fully carried out, they could make no objection; but they did not want to compromise themselves by acknowledging the validity of the present laws, and thus be bound by them, while at the same time there was no certainty of a provision being inserted in the Constitution of the character which he recommended. So I still think it doubtful whether the Free State men participate in the June election, but will cheerfully vote upon a clause rejecting or allowing Slavery, provided they can have a fair opportunity to do so.

Another reason why I think Kansas will be free, is, there is an immense rush here for the purpose of speculation—some remaining permanently, others temporarily, but all more or less engaged in it, Pro-Slavery men as well as others. The Pro-Slavery men, or many of them, perceiving and quietly acknowledging that the emigration to the Territory will be vastly greater if it be free, and that they are thus to be benefited more than they could be in any way through Slavery.

More maple sugar will be made this season in Vermont than was ever before known to be produced. The run of sap has been somewhat retarded during the late spell of cold weather, but it is now running again freely, and buckets are at a premium.

The New License Law and the Duty of Temperance Men.

From the New-York Tribune, April 30.

"The Executive Committee of the New-York State Temperance Society" inform the public that said Committee disapproves the new Liquor law of our State and will do nothing to secure its enforcement. We thank the gentleman for this pronunciamento, though neither its propriety nor its modesty is unquestionable. Let it everywhere be distinctly understood that Mr. EDWARD C. DELAVAN & Co. condemn the new Liquor law, tried to defeat it, and are now doing their best to persuade Prohibitionists not to aid in its enforcement. We trust neither the popularity nor the efficiency of the new act will suffer from the general dissemination of these facts.

We, on our part, urge every Temperance man, no matter of what stripe, to accept the new law as it stands and try to make the best of it. If it be defective, this course will indicate its faults and lead to their correction, while it will give the public the full benefit of whatever good it may embody. Let us take the law as we find it and call for its faithful application and enforcement. Any other course seems to us at once factious and suicidal. We trust it is not in the power of the Liquor interest and the Executive Committee combined to deprive the new act of that fair and full trial which its importance and the possibilities of good results from its enforcement unite in demanding for it.

Judicial Construction of the New License Law.

From the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser.

SUPERIOR COURT.—The Criminal Term of this Court was organized this morning, (April 27)—CLINTON, J., presiding.

The Grand Jury was empaneled. In charging them, Judge CLINTON stated that although Section 24 of the "Act to suppress intemperance, and to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors," passed at the last session of the Legislature, provides that the act shall take effect immediately, yet that it could not take effect so as to make persons liable to punishment for selling intoxicating liquors without a license, until the "Commissioners of Excise" of the county had met, in pursuance of Section 2, on the third Tuesday of May, and had set ten days for the purpose of receiving and passing upon applications for grocery and tavern licenses. His honor remarked that, at common law, any one had a right to sell liquor as an article of commerce, or in small quantities to be drank upon his premises; that this right had been regulated by the excise laws, which for many years prior to and until the act of 1855, "for the prevention of intemperance, pauperism and crime," were comprised in title 9 of chapter 20 of the first part of the Revised Statutes; that the better opinion was that the act of 1855 being unconstitutional, it did not repeal the Excise Laws, and that they remained in force until the passage of the act of the last session, when, by sec. 33, they were expressly repealed; that, apparently the intention of the Legislature was to leave the sale of liquor free and unregulated, except by the common law, until citizens desiring to keep taverns or groceries should have an opportunity to procure licenses under the new act; and that, if its intention was to prohibit the sale of such spirits prior to such opportunity, and such intention could be inferred from the act, the act would probably be so far void, upon the principles which it is understood were enounced by the Court of Appeals in pronouncing the act of 1855 unconstitutional. He, therefore, instructed the Jury not to entertain complaints against persons for selling liquor without a license, at any time subsequent to the passage of the act; and also advised them, in consideration of the confusion in which the law had been involved, not to entertain such complaints at all. But he also instructed them that, if houses where liquor was sold were so kept as to disturb the neighborhood, or to tend to the injury of the public morals, the keepers of them ought to be indicted for keeping disorderly houses.

City Movements Against the Law.

From the Journal of Commerce.

THE EXCISE LAW.—The liquor dealers of this City are organizing thoroughly, and preparing to make a long and strong legal resistance to the Excise Law. Many new members were admitted at the regular meeting of the Association in Metropolitan Hall, Hester street, last evening. The proceedings were private. The Excise Commissioners are to be appointed on or before the second Tuesday of May; but it is rumored that one or more of the Judges with whom the appointing power rests, will refuse to exercise it, on the ground that this is no part of the duties which they were chosen to perform, and that the Legislature had no business to designate them for the purpose without previously consulting their inclinations. They are certainly entitled to resent it as a piece of impertinence, if they choose.

More Lynching in Jackson County, Iowa.

From the Chicago Press.

The murder and lynching in Jackson County, Iowa, is not yet over, and there is still a sequel to the sad tale of murder and outrage which we gave in the Press of last Saturday. It appears that after hanging GRIFFORD, a portion of the crowd started in pursuit of the fleeing JARRETT, who had fifteen minutes the start of them; that he was arrested, tried and found guilty of being accessory to the murder of INGLE, and that the jailor of Andrew refused to receive him into the jail. After which the crowd started for Bellevue, where it is rumored there were two hundred men determined to take JARRETT and hang him. It is rumored that he has been hung, but we have no particulars. JARRETT, it appears, has a large family of grown-up daughters. The third victim, MCDONALD, it is said, has also been pursued, and caught, who will probably meet the same fate as the others. It will be recollected by our readers that GRIFFORD confessed, before his execution, that JARRETT and MCDONALD had hired him to murder INGLE. The sad affair had created great excitement in the surrounding counties.

ARSENIC INSTEAD OF MAGNESIA.—A mistake of a distressing and fatal character occurred on Friday night last. Mrs. MARGARET MACFARLAND, being of a plethoric habit, accustomed herself to taking magnesia and like aperients for the purpose of preventing a rush of blood to the head. On the night in question she felt unwell, and was advised by a female friend to take some magnesia, and she accordingly sent to the house of a neighbor to obtain some. The supposed magnesia was procured, and she swallowed it. For a time she felt quite comfortable, but at midnight she was seized with vomiting and severe cramp in the stomach. Dr. O'DONNELL was called, and he pronounced the symptoms to be those of poison.—Everything possible was done for her, but she died shortly after in great agony. The bottle from which her neighbor had taken the medicine proved to contain arsenic, there being another of the same description containing magnesia, and thus the mistake occurred.—Baltimore Sun.

KENTUCKY NEGROES TO BE BOUGHT AND THE STATE FREED.—The Newport (Ky.) News says: A proposition is in contemplation to buy the land and negroes owned by slaveholders in Kentucky at their present valuation; and if three-fourths of the slaveholders in the State will agree to sell, the proposed company will advance a sum of money equal to one-half the estimated value of both, and in one year after pay the whole balance. The slaves will be set free and the land sold at an advanced price, in view of the State becoming free in one year after the first payment to the masters, and the State becomes settled with real industrious, enterprising free people. Will three-fourths of the slaveholders agree to sell at present valuation? If so, the State will soon be free.

THE SIOUX HALF-BREED LANDS.—We hear incidentally that the Secretary of the Interior has now under consideration the plans prepared in the Indian Bureau for carrying out the law of 1854, for the division of the common lands of the Sioux half-breeds among them, individually. The encroachments of the whites upon these lands led to trouble and difficulties which have up to this time necessarily postponed final action under the provisions of the law in question. General JAMES SHIELDS is now engaged in arranging those troubles.—Washington Star.

AN ILLINOIS SHERIFF SELLING A MAN AT AUCTION.—The Sheriff of St. Clair County advertises a negro men for sale at public auction, he being guilty of the "high misdemeanor" of having come into this free State of Illinois and remaining here for ten days, for which offence he was fined $50, as provided by the infamous Black Law framed by the Democratic Legislature of 1853, and in default of paying which fine, the Sheriff of the county in which he was found is directed by the same Black Law to sell him to anybody willing to pay the $50.—Chicago Journal.

MURDER TRIAL.—The third trial of BRADLEY upon an indictment for the murder of FOOT at Woodbury, was terminated on Wednesday at Litchfield. The Jury again disagreed and it is understood that nine of them were for acquittal, and three for conviction. Upon a nolle prosequi, the prisoner was discharged. The accused belongs to a very respectable family, who have been much distressed by the suspicion which has rested upon him, and by the repeated trials he has been compelled to undergo.—Hartford Times.

DOLLARS AND CENTS IN CANADA.—The bill requiring the public accounts to be kept in dollars and cents has passed both Houses of the Canadian Legislature. It will come into force on the 1st of January, 1858.

The State Printing Contract.

From the Albany Evening Statesman, April 28.

A letter from this city appears in the NEW-YORK DAILY TIMES of to-day, in which it is stated that J. C. DANE, Esq., of Buffalo, and DENNIS BOWEN of the same city, were interested in the successful bid for the State printing, and are the owners of one-half share in that contract. It is also stated that they were made so at their own request, through the influence of the American State officers, with a view to reimburse those gentlemen for the money they had expended in the recent Presidential election. There is not the slightest foundation for the slanderous statement.

Messrs. DANE & BOWEN, large creditors of the late firm of THOMAS & LATHROPS, received upon the failure of that firm an assignment of property to secure them partially against loss. Among the property thus assigned was the one-half share of Messrs. THOMAS & LATHROPS in the State Printing contract. It is just as false to say that prior to the suspension of Messrs. THOMAS & LATHROPS, and the assignment to which we allude, their creditors, Messrs. DANE & BOWEN, were interested in the State Printing contract, as it would be to say that they were partners in the job-office of THOMAS & LATHROPS, if that was also a part of the assignment.

The Statesman office never had, directly or indirectly, any connection with or interest in the State Printing contract.

following review of the Wool Trade, during April:

"The market for all kinds of Native Wools, during the month of April, was very quiet; the stagnation being general—caused both by the depression of woolen fabrics and the opinion that the new tariff (which changed the duty from 30 to 24 ₱ cent. for woolen goods, and the better grades of Wool above 30c.) will have a bad effect with our manufacturers, who say already, that they cannot afford to pay more than last year's clip prices. There has been so little doing, in fact, that it is difficult to ascertain to what extent the prices have declined. Our quotations, with the exception of low Foreign Wools, are, therefore, nominal. Although we can buy some kinds of fleece and pulled Wool at 5c. ₱ lb less than we could two months ago, yet we cannot alter our rates to that effect, as there are Wools still in market that would bring the prices within the range of our quotations. The stock of fleece and better kinds of pulled Wool is very small, while the lower kinds of pulled are in better supply and offered freely at less prices. We have no doubt that buyers will act very cautiously with the new clip, as prospects for business are not so favorable as they were last year. Fine Foreign Wool continues in demand, and is held pretty firm, as but little is expected, and prices are a good deal higher abroad than they were at the time of shipping our present stock. Several lots of Cape Wool have been sold at from 26c. ₱ lb. below former rates. Low Foreign Wools for carpet yarns and low blankets, have been in fair demand. The transactions have mostly been made in bond—the Wool to be delivered after July 1. Prices are quite firm at our quotations, and the stock is a moderate one. With some desirable kinds we are not supplied, but hope soon to have an arrival of them. We want hinture kips, and similar kinds from Buenos Ayres and Smyrna, as there are none in market."

FREIGHTS—Varied but little. For Liverpool, Cotton 3a. 6d @3a. ₱ bale; Flour, 6d. ₱ bbl.; Grain, nominally 9d.@10d. ₱ bush.; Beef, 6d.@1s., with some lots reported as having been taken for ballast, as low as 3d. ₱ ton.; Resin, 3d.@4d ₱ bbl; and Heavy Goods 7s. 6d @10s. ₱ ton. For other ports, proportionately low quotations.

The attention of the traveling community is called to the following extract from a letter to the Saturday Evening Gazette:

"Within the past six months, business or pleasure has called me into one-half of the States of the Union, and over several thousand miles of railroad, and I have never arrived at a depôt ten minutes late, nor lost a connection—thanks to my pocket companion, "Appleton's Railway Guide," a work corrected and published semi monthly, which is a model for accuracy, and may be relied on most implicitly. A study of its contents has beguiled many miles of their tediousness, while the information it imparts reflects the greatest credit upon the publisher."

THE ELVES.
LEGEND.—The mountain forests of Pastoria are inhabited, it is said, by Pixies, Sprites and Elves, who, like the Phantom Dancers of Germany, delight to entrap travelers into their realms and torment them with their mischievous antics. Having the power of transforming the spirit, they often, in their malicious gambols, give life to the newly dead. Statues, rocks and trees are seen fantastically moving in the forest, but it is only during the DAY they retain their fictitious existence; at the approach of NIGHT they resume their immobility.

MISS LAURA KEENE'S BENEFIT.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The selection of a new location for Quarantine, is assuming a shape which renders it eminently a matter proper for public notice, as the proceedings in regard to it are such as to excite a suspicion that private considerations are overriding the public good. When the Commissioners came down to examine the several localities, they were very generally of opinion that upon the whole, Coney Island was the best,—but they were assured in the most positive and peremptory manner, by two of their number, Ex-Alderman BENSON and Mayor HALL, that it could not possibly be procured. They accordingly abandoned all thought of it and entered into a stipulation with Mr. LUSK for the purchase of Seguine's Point. The money was to be paid and the deed delivered yesterday, after which date the bargain would not be binding. Subsequently to this arrangement, Mr. BOWNE, one of the Commissioners, ascertained that Coney Island could be bought—and indeed on Wednesday last, Mr. HENDRICKSON, the lessee, offered to lease it to the Commission, with the hotel and other buildings, for ten years, at $17,000 per annum. Mr. BOWNE thereupon refused to sign the draft for the payment of the money stipulated to Mr. LUSK, and the State Treasurer refused to pay the draft without his signature. A meeting of the Commissioners was held, yesterday, upon the subject,—at which, after an ineffectual attempt on the part of Mr. BOWNE to change the action of the Board, a letter was read from Mr. HENDRICKSON, withdrawing his offer to lease Coney Island to the Commissioners;—whereupon Messrs. BENSON and HALL endeavored to constrain Mr. BOWNE to acquiesce in the action they had already taken. So far as we are aware, however, they were unsuccessful. There cannot be the least doubt that, for all the purposes of Quarantine, Coney Island is a far better location than Seguine's Point. So far as accommodating the Commerce of the port is concerned there is no comparison between them,—as at the latter point ships cannot come up to the wharves for lack of water, and cargoes must be transferred by lighters,—which would cost the Commerce of this Port very nearly a million of dollars every year. At Coney Island ships could unload at the wharves without unnecessary trouble or detention of any kind. We trust that no private interests or local jealousies or prejudices of any kind will be allowed to influence the decision of a matter of so much interest to New-York Commerce as this.

The dispatch published in yesterday morning's TIMES, announcing the steamer Circassian as below Quebec, proves to have been a mistake. The Caledonia is now fully due there, but had not arrived at a late hour last night. The steamship Africa is also due at this port, but had not been signaled at Sandy Hook at 1 o'clock this morning.

The brigantine Helen, a low, rakish craft, in command of Capt. VAN VECHTEN, a New-York man, was seized yesterday, at 3 P. M., while passing through the Narrows, by Capt. FAUNCE, of the revenue cutter Washington, at the instance of the United States Marshal, upon the suspicion that she was departing upon a slave voyage. The brig had on board powder, whisky, cotton prints, &c., but having no other articles to fix suspicion upon the vessel. She was towed back to the City by the steamtug Satellite, and anchored under the guns of the cutter. There were seven in the crew, one of whom was a Portuguese supercargo. The parties arrested on board the alleged slaver Merchant were to have been examined yesterday, before U. S. Commissioner MORTON; but in consequence of the absence of the District-Attorney, the hearing was postponed until to-day.

The Board of Aldermen held a long and very interesting session last evening. Some resolutions were passed, with an effecting preamble, ordering the election of delegates to meet in convention in the City for the purpose of expressing the voice of the people in relation to the acts of the late Legislature. They directed the Mayor to negotiate with the General Government in the matter of a site for a post-office, and concurred with the Councilmen to raise his salary to $5,000 per annum. They also directed the Comptroller not to draw warrants in favor of any person exercising any official jurisdiction, by virtue of the recent acts of the Legislature, until their validity shall have been established by the Courts. A communication was received from the Chief Engineer, objecting to the introduction of steam fire-engines.

The Committee of the Board of Aldermen appointed to consider the propriety of removing the landing-place of the Sound and North River steamboats above Canal-street, met yesterday, and heard remonstrances from the agents and owners of the various lines interested in the proposed change. The cartmen of the City also presented a resolution, adopted by them at a special meeting held on Wednesday, which was only partially and conditionally favorable to the removal.

The only Committee that was appointed to assemble on Thursday was that in reference to the Battery Enlargement. The members got together and had a few minutes' conversation on the subject, but did nothing.

Mayor WOOD expresses his intention to leave unenforced that stupid, antique, and unrepealed ordinance which makes it a crime to bring oysters into town, or to have them here, under penalty of $5 a hundred, from the 1st of May to the 1st of September. The Mayor's determination merits the thanks of everybody who eats. Why do not the Common Council repeal the law? They would, in haste, if the State had enacted any such tyrannical rule.

The Attorney-General of the State is to be associated with the District-Attorney of the City, for the prosecution in the trial of Mrs. CUNNINGHAM next week. Mr. DEAN and Mr. CLINTON are engaged for the defence. BUTLER has retained Mr. JOHN GRAHAM as his counsel. The prisoners will be tried separately, Mrs. CUNNINGHAM being first placed at the bar.

The City Temperance Alliance, while regretting that the Legislature did not give us a Prohibitory instead of a License law, is preparing, and invokes the aid of all good citizens, to see the law enforced in the City as far as possible.

The argument in the Police Commission case was continued yesterday afternoon and evening. Judge EDMONDS continued his argument for the plaintiff. He complained of the delay in the argument of the real question of the case, by his opponents, and proceeded to argue the unconstitutionality of the law. Mr. FIELD will close for the defendants to-morrow afternoon at 3 o'clock.

JOHN B. GOUGH lectured as eloquently as ever before a large audience, in Rev. Mr. BEECHER'S Church, Brooklyn, last night.

The skeletons of three of the prisoners of the Jersey Prison-ship (probably) were dug up at the Navy-Yard, while excavating there for the foundation of a new building, a day or two since.

Politicians vs. The People.

A public meeting is called in the Park for Tuesday next to denounce the new Police Commission, and generally the recent State legislation concerning the interests and affairs of the City. This is thoroughly and exclusively a party movement, and is intended quite as much to revive the failing political fortunes of Mayor WOOD as for any object in which the public at large has a deeper interest. The whole controversy between the New and the Old system of municipal government is pending in the Courts of law, where it properly belongs. If Mayor WOOD and his partisans were honest in their affected regard for the public welfare, they would leave the contest to be settled by the judicial tribunals whose aid they have invoked. The fact that they resort to mass meetings and the ordinary clap-trap of political demagogism, in order to affect the decision of a question of Constitutional law now before the Courts, shows conclusively that they care far less for laws and constitutions than for power and place.

But it is useless to pretend that, in this unhappy contest, which sacrifices the Public good to the schemings and wranglings of Partisans, the blame is all on one side. The fact cannot be concealed, that the extremely partisan character of the new Commission has greatly impaired public confidence in the attempted Reform, and given its opponents a strong hold upon popular sympathy in their attempts to break it down. Previous to the passage of the bill, we took occasion to warn the public against the dangers which menaced the system from this direction. In the TIMES of the 10th of April, we expressed our convictions upon this subject, by saying:

"The practical operation of this important law will evidently depend entirely upon the character of the Board of Police Commissioners:—and the Governor owes it to himself, as well as to the vast interests concerned, to see to it that this most important and responsible Board is not handed over to any political party or made the instrument of political faction,—and that none but men of the highest character, who command the respect and confidence of the whole community, and who are not conspicuous as political partisans, are intrusted with its delicate and difficult responsibilities. The whole community will regard with surprise and alarm any indication that in a matter of such vast importance the Governor's personal judgment is to be overborne by any party pressure or any political emergency whatever."

The event has more than justified these apprehensions; and although any Commission which the Governor might have appointed, would undoubtedly have been resisted by Mayor WOOD and his adherents, much of the public sympathy which supports his present crusade would have been avoided by a more scrupulous regard, on the part of Gov. KING, to the character and complexion of the new Board of Police Commissioners. The great body of our people hoped to see the Police Department taken out of the field of politics; and, when they saw that the result of the whole movement was merely to take it from one political party and hand it over to another, they not only felt that the public good had been sacrificed to partisanship, but that they themselves had been made the tools of a political trick. Such a popular conviction is sure to revenge itself.

This whole contest, as it now stands, is simply a struggle of political partisans. It illustrates forcibly the truth of the remark, that "party is the madness of the many for the benefit of the few." How it will end, no body knows, and, it is to be feared—so benumbed by indignities is the public mind becoming—very few care. The management of this City is beginning to be regarded by the mass of the people—as it has long been regarded by the men in power—as a matter of interest only to the holders of office. It is understood, and seems to be accepted and acquiesced in, by the community at large that—no matter who is in, or who is out—the City is to be governed by a set of reckless and unprincipled adventurers, exclusively for their own profit—and that all the people are expected or allowed to do in the premises, is to vote them in and then submit, in peace and patience, to be neglected, insulted and plundered. The effect of this skepticism, which is the growth of long and hard experience, is to create the general impression in the public mind, with regard to this contest between the rival Boards of Police Commissioners, that it is of not the slightest consequence to the people at large which shall succeed—that one is as thoroughly partisan as the other, and that nothing substantial, or worth the contest, will be gained by a change. Every body asks, who will be the better off when the question shall have been decided—"injunction" or "no injunction?" In either case will Policemen attend to party duty less, and to public duty more? Will there be a murder, or a burglary, or a ticket-swindle the less? Will street ordinances, or any other ordinances, be better enforced, or rowdy gongers, policy office black-mailers, gambling-house swindlers, brothelers, runner panelers, grog-shop anti-licensers, et id genus omne, be more efficiently kept in subjection under one régime than the other? The public doubts it. That FERNANDO WOOD was reelected Mayor of New-York, was notoriously owing to the system of corruption and tyranny which he had introduced into the Police. He hopes to perpetuate his power by a continuance of the same infernal and tyrannical system. The modernized Albany Regency took a lesson out of his catechism, and have homœopathically endeavored to cure "like with like." So, if the decision is in favor of injunction, it will be a continuation of past abominations. If the recent statute carries the day, and SIMPSON DRAPER & Co. come into power, everybody says there will be a kaleidoscopic change; but without the change of a color, an element, a man, for the real benefit of the community.

Probably not one in a hundred of the citizens of New-York appreciate properly how wretchedly the interests of this City are protected, and at what enormous expense disorder and misrule are paid for. We are nearly a million of people, and we suffer ourselves to be annually taxed very nearly a million of dollars, to feed several hundreds of vicious satellites of whatever happens to be, for the instant, the appointing power. WOOD or anti-WOOD, Republican or Democrat, Sam or Sambo, the lucky dogs that succeed, are none of them more patriotic, order-loving or philanthropic than their predecessors, and the City meanwhile suffers, and pays. The Police has so entirely ceased to be a "terror to evil doers," that, provided a man has rendered good party service, a black criminal record, eye-gouging antecedents, rum-hole proclivities, and an itching palm for bribes, are regarded rather as recommendations than otherwise. No chain, said a worthy now in high power, is "so sure to hind, as a man's own passions." And of what use are protests? If gamblers, prostitutes, bullies, and drunkards can enlist, at primary meetings, a greater physical display than the "pious sentiment," however expedient it may be to cater, occasionally, to the latter, why should an unprejudiced Chief Magistrate sacrifice sagacity, and the wholesome odor of antecedents, for a mere name? Or why, on the other hand, should justice and equity be deemed of moment by an anti-Democratic State Executive, when party demands the manufacture of anti-Democratic political tools? "Here we go, there we go," is the moral of the past, present and future. Different hands may sway the pendulum, but its quality bids fair to remain unchanged, until reform becomes a reality instead of a mere word, and the might of this Metropolis vindicates itself differently from what it has done in the past.

The Captured Slaver.

The story of the slaver captured off the Cuban coast, as published in the TIMES of yesterday, has doubtless attracted the attention of our readers. We hear enough of the iniquities, of the horrible atrocities, committed in the prosecution of the trade. We know that in despite of treaties, laws, and armed cruisers, it still continues to flourish, but it is seldom that the guilty are detected flagrante delicto, or that the details of the monstrous crime are brought to light.

The slaver to which we refer was a schooner of only 150 tons burden; and yet, within the narrow limits of this diminutive craft, five hundred human beings were crammed. Each captive was allowed a space of eighteen inches "to turn in," and, once a day, the unfortunate wretches were driven in herds to the deck, there to breathe for a passing moment the pure air of Heaven. They were stolen from their homes on the African coast, and were to be sold as slaves in Cuba: and the robber and murderer, who thus trafficked in the souls and bodies of men, doubtless calculated that by the sale of this cargo he would make up for others he had lost—for slaves will die on such a terrible voyage. The horrors of the middle passage have been often told; but, until some special case like the present is brought home to us, we are apt to regard the stories related as some hideous invention. We find it impossible to believe that lust of gain should so utterly possess the souls of men, that they could become so debased as to live under the weight of such damning guilt. Among the five hundred Africans captured on this occasion, very few had reached the age of twenty; there were many females among them; and, during a voyage of twenty-nine days, no less than one hundred and twenty-seven had died from close confinement and starvation. The remainder, when the schooner was so fortunately captured by the British brig-of-war Arab, were found packed closely together—all naked, and imbedded in dirt and vermin, a picture of wretchedness, and misery, and suffering, to excite the compassion or indignation of any one but a slave-trader. The starving wretches were brought into St. Anne's, and, unable to control themselves, they fought for the food placed before them with the ferocity of famished brutes.

It is not merely to the atrocities and horrors of this, as an isolated case, that we would direct attention. These iniquities are of frequent occurrence. The slave trade is almost as flourishing now as it ever was in its palmiest days, and the partial watchfulness of cruisers only heightens the cruelties inflicted on the captives. The vessels engaged in the traffic are built flat-bottomed, so that they can be driven into shore when pursued, and the slaves then left to perish. It is notorious that a large number of schooners are employed in the trade, and with impunity land their cargoes on the coast of Cuba. Almost every letter that we receive from Havana announces the arrival of some fresh instalment. The authorities of the Island are unable or unwilling to stop the practice, and existing treaties are openly violated.

We see it stated that the continuance of the slave trade will be brought before the British Parliament as soon as it assembles. We trust that the subject will receive the serious attention of that body. And we earnestly hope that our own Government will not remain idle, but will lend all proper coöperation towards the suppression of this great wrong, still openly encouraged by Spain, to her own disgrace and the shame of our civilization.

It is only just to say that the United States authorities at this port have always been commendably vigilant in their efforts to detect vessels fitted out here for the slave trade, and that the new Marshal (Captain RYNDERS) has been especially active and resolute in this service. Our columns this morning record the details of another capture effected by this officer yesterday.

BOGUS WALKER-VICTORIES.—The Nicaraguan news, received by the Illinois, demonstrates pretty clearly to what extent the American public has been gulled and humbugged by parties interested in the Fillibuster cause. We have no disposition to sum up all the purely fictitious victories achieved by WALKER over the Central American allies. Life is too short for such laborious exercises. But one "crowning victory" appears rather prominent just now, and will be a sufficient illustration for our purpose. Our enterprising cotemporary, the Herald, after a note of warning and preliminary flourish of trumpets announcing important and exclusive intelligence, published on the 9th inst., several letters purporting to have been written by Gen. HENNINGSEN on the day succeeding that great victory of the 16th of March. "The loss of the enemy," wrote HENNINGSEN, "is ascertained to have been upwards of 400 killed. Our victory is decisive and breaks up the allies completely, and in a few weeks all fighting within the boundaries of Nicaragua will be over." "American Minié rifles," says another letter writer, "and Henningsen howitzers and cannon did the business. The allies are finally used up, and the reign of the greasers in this Republic wiped out." Such was the tenor of the letters, real or imaginary, upon the authority of which we were told that Gen. WALKER had obtained such a glorious victory at San Jorge, and had slain the Costa Ricans with such very great slaughter. The boot is now on the other leg. The lie was of such a wholesale stamp that it is just worth while remembering in order to contradict. By the news received yesterday WALKER was the party defeated; his were the men so frightfully cut up; and his the reign that has been "wiped out." Our decayed cotemporary of the Herald is as reliable a historian of this Nicaraguan war as he was of Parker Vein and Potosi Lead.

The Pulpit and the Stage.

That a citizen of New-York, well and favorably known to our community as the faithful pastor of a respectable Christian congregation should have been invited by a few friends of the drama to deliver a discourse on the relation of the theatre with public morality, and that he should have accepted such an invitation, is certainly a very interesting indication of the general advance of liberal sentiments and sound practical sense among our people. For the courage of the pulpit, like the morality of the stage, is rather a barometrical fact than an atmospherical force, and rather reveals than controls the condition of the public mind. The preacher's license, like the player's prosperity, is in the ears that hear him. When Père VENTURA thunders his anathemas at Imperial misrule and courtly corruption through the chapel of the Tuileries, it is less the boldness of the clerical DEMOSTHENES that attracts our attention, than the mysterious calmness of the pale and silent TIBERIUS, who tolerates those fierce fulminations of Italian faith. And so when a clergyman of New-England extraction, educated within the circle of New-England prejudices and occupying a prominent place among the leaders of a denomination which can hardly be said to have any existence in America out of the limits of New England, advocates with earnestness and with eloquence a theory of public life and private morality utterly opposed to the doctrines and inconsistent with the practices which have obtained for now two centuries and a half throughout the length and the breadth of New England herself, and have been carried by her sons into all quarters of the Republic, we find less reason for dwelling upon the spirited conduct of the orator, (commendable though it be,) than for felicitating ourselves upon the good sense and intelligent liberality of the community in which such a phenomenon is possible.

In his speech delivered at the Academy of Music, on Tuesday night, Dr. BELLOWS unquestionably reflected the opinions and vindicated the convictions of a majority of the educated and respectable inhabitants of this metropolis. In New-York, as in London, Paris, Berlin, St. Petersburg, the drama is sanctioned by the laws, and supported by public sentiment. The press is ready to analyze and to applaud—multitudes of quiet and respectable citizens are ready to patronize and to pay for any thing which at all approaches the standard of dramatic excellence. But in New-York, as in all the other leading Christian cities of the world, a very considerable number of persons claiming to be regarded as the specially and conspicuously "religious" portion of the community, look upon the theatre as only one of many evil devices for turning away the attention of men from the great and solemn interests of immortality to the fleeting enjoyments of this transitory life, and are consequently prepared to visit with their severest censure any minister of religion who shall venture to commit a sin so heinous in their eyes, as any countenance given to such an institution must necessarily be.

These persons are sustained in their position by many discreditable facts connected with the actual administration of the theatre. How far it is true that modern players in general live in a disorderly and disreputable way, may well be a matter of inquiry, but various circumstances combine to favor the belief that many of them must indeed lead such lives as no one can approve. Very few of them ever succeed in rising above the temptations of poverty: they are all of them condemned, by the nature of their occupation, to an almost entire exclusion from general society in a community which works by day while they must work by night, and they are exposed to all the dangerous influences of continual and excessive excitement, both physical and mental. Then, again, as the theatre depends for its support upon the public, the manager of the theatre must often stoop to the periodical vacillations and vitiations of the public taste, and put upon the stage plays which the refined instincts of cultivation must condemn quite as sharply as do the simpler emotions of morality.

Specious arguments, therefore, are never any more likely to be wanting to the modern enemies of the drama, than they were to the worthy Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London, when they protested, in 1575, against the license granted to the players by the Lords of the Privy Council, and summed up their hostility in the trenchant proposition that "to play in plague-time was to increase the plague by infection, while to play out of plague-time was to draw the plague by offending of God upon occasion of such plays." That, in the face of the stern prejudices and ancient prepossessions of the "religious" public, a clergyman should venture to come forward in support of the divine ordinance of recreation, and of the absolutely imperative necessity of such orderly provision of public amusement, as shall secure to our people the best amusement possible, and the most possible of that best, proves conclusively, as we have said, that the people of New-York, as a body, are prepared to sustain every honest and hearty endeavor that shall be made to organize the public life on more wholesome and rational principles than have heretofore prevailed in American society. Upon the particular class of persons to whom Dr. BELLOWS addressed himself it is not likely that his remarks will make much impression; for by the majority of the "religious" public he himself and the sect to which he belongs are already regarded as being little better than the people of the world, and whatever good may be done among them by his observations will be effected in consequence of the indorsement and reproduction of them by the leading journals of the City. Thousands of people who read the speech of Dr. BELLOWS in the columns of the Tribune, the Herald and the TIMES, will forget that they are imbibing the objectionable sentiments of a minister who has come down out of the pulpit to defend the stage from the boards of an Opera-house, and will carry away from the perusal only the good sense, the sound philosophy, and the warm practical philanthropy which distinguish the address.

For the managers and actors who graced the occasion of this oration with their presence, we trust that they will lay well to heart the significant moral which we have deduced from it. It can afford them but a mild kind of gratification to believe that a particular clergyman and his particular friends are disposed to think as well of them as circumstances will permit, and to look with favor upon an institution which ancient sages and Christian bishops have consulted to approve, which numbers among its patrons the greatest sovereigns of history from the days of PERICLES to those of VICTORIA, among its philosophers the profoundest intellects of the race from the times of ARISTOTLE to those of CHATEAUBRIAND; and, among its poets the very kingliest of writers, whose names neither our own space nor our readers' patience will suffer us to enumerate; but they may take large comfort and serious instruction from the reflection that they will be cordially sustained by the general intelligence and good-will of the community in the boldest efforts they shall make to elevate the tone of the stage which they control, and to contribute their full share to the "sober and serious interests of society," by providing more fully and more fitly for the gratification of human nature's absolute need of wholesome relaxation and positive enjoyment.

If, as Dr. BELLOWS charges, the "religious world" be really responsible for the slow development and unsatisfactory character of popular amusements in this country, then have those worthy people a serious account to settle with the State. If it is their fault, indeed, that no adequate excitements of a legitimate kind have been provided for the most excitable race on earth—that no entertaining and refining amusements are in any sufficient measure offered to a people who do more work and earn more leisure than ever any people did, or than any other people now do—that the vast wealth of nervous life and fallow time accumulated in this City alone so runs to vice and to excess for want of agreeable relief in the monotonous channels of our existence—then it is high time that the wisest and best of the teachers of American Christianity should take all these questions gravely under consideration, or become practical and earnest and unprejudiced men.

But however this may be, the business men, who are now concerned in the conduct of the amusements which we actually possess, and particularly of the theatre, should mark this proceeding of Rev. Dr. BELLOWS as an unmistakable sign of the times. They will easily know what value to set on the particular dramatic criticisms of a gentleman who confesses himself to speak "haud expertus," and passes judgment on plays which he never has seen; but they cannot so easily estimate the value of the fact that a prominent member of a class which lives by the breath of public opinion, has given utterance to the voice of public opinion, when he demands of the stage that it shall regard itself as really a great power in the State, and look to its influences as closely as to its profits. For them as for all the world it holds true that "Honesty is the best policy," and they may depend upon it that the most exalted conception which they can form of the public taste will be justified in the palpable shape of larger gains and a steadier support. We have no desire to multiply the numbers of the already innumerable race of the "Elijah-Programs," and the idea of a "heaven-supported" manager vindicating his "mission" is intolerable to us; but we do hope that the sounding of trumpets and waving of banners which took place at the Academy of Music on Tuesday night, may herald something more satisfactory than a cortege of circus-riders on piebald horses, and introduce a positive and manly attempt to elevate the character of the Metropolitan Stage.

Mexican Anarchy Again.

Mexico presents a most pitiable spectacle—one calculated to excite the sympathies of all who are interested in the progress and triumph of liberal principles. She is so wasted and worn out by civil strife, that even the impending danger of a Spanish invasion is insufficient to rouse the people from their apathy. They seem most indifferent to the issue; and, helpless to check dissensions within, they are wholly incapable of defying their enemies without.

When the ambition of SANTA ANA was foiled, and the Republic was relieved from the burden of his Dictatorship, many believed or hoped that a new and prosperous era had dawned. In JUAN ALVAREZ or IGNACIO COMONFORT, they recognized statesmen worthy of public confidence, with genius enough, if backed by popular support, to redeem the country from its disgrace and degradation. President COMONFORT has not betrayed the trust confided in him. He has labored earnestly in the cause of Reform, and his last act—the promulgation of a new Constitution—is the most advanced move that any Mexican Administration has yet had the boldness to make. This Constitution may be found imperfect by political critics in many particulars, but upon one point—the most important of all—it strikes the nail upon the head. A complete separation is effected between Church and State, and the latter is declared supreme in all matters of temporal interest. The law is clear and decided on the subject, and it further abolishes many of those Church privileges, which, in Mexico as elsewhere, have been a drag on social and political progress.

President COMONFORT, by inaugurating this radical reform, has created many enemies, who are also the enemies of order and good government. We fear they will prove too strong for him. Foremost among them, is the Church, which commands the omnipotence of wealth and an unbounded influence over the minds of a superstitious people. During the past year it has used all this wealth and influence to instigate rebellion against COMONFORT, and scheme for the restoration of SANTA ANA, or any one else who is ready to be its obedient tool. Under special orders from the Archbishop, the minor Clergy have so far abused their high office as to threaten with the darkest terrors of their creed, all who swear to obey the laws of the land. There have been some honorable exceptions—a few instances where individual priests have been sufficiently enlightened and courageous to ignore the authority of their superior when it countenanced treason, and to withstand with manly independence the unwarrantable assumptions of a bigoted Prelate. But it is not to be supposed that a crusade of this kind, originating in the highest ecclesiastical authority of the land, will be unattended with injurious consequences. In a country like Mexico, where the more extravagant dogmas of the Papal religion still find ready credence, and where the clergy are not loth to use popular weaknesses and popular ignorance to strengthen their own power, and to maintain their ascendency in political as well as in religious affairs, this hostility between Church and State bodes no good to the latter. The intelligence of the country is hardly prepared for such a contest. The people have an appreciation of liberal principles, but they want self-confidence. In all questions where the Church interferes, they discard reason and common sense, and give blind obedience to their spiritual pastors and masters. And so, when anathemas are fulminated and absolution is refused to those who recognize the new constitution or venture to obey it, we can scarcely look for any other result than the destruction of all confidence in the Government and the overthrow of that free action upon which its existence depends.

The Church, then, is the chief enemy that has sapped the foundations of General COMONFORT'S once popular Government. Without an army and without other resources than the integrity of his course and the liberality of his policy, the President stands a bad chance. The country is overrun with robbers, who commit all sorts of depredations with impunity. There is no security for the life and property of any—native or foreigner. And amid the general anarchy and confusion that prevail, petty factions take advantage of the federal weakness to issue their pronunciamentos; party chiefs avail themselves of the opportunity to advance their selfish ambition, and party politicians to rob the public treasury.

Such is the aspect of Mexican affairs on the eve of a foreign invasion. Even that event does not seem to unite the people. The national spirit is dead, and a common danger makes no common cause. What hope is there then for Mexico? Statesmen of ability and patriotism have so often attempted to regenerate her and lift her up to the position she should occupy among nations, that the accomplishment of such a task seems now to be utterly impossible. The change to be effected is too radical, for it must be a change in politics and in religion—even in the manners, customs and habits, of the people. We do not pretend to prophesy when such a change will, if ever it does, take place; but every thoughtful Mexican who has the prosperity of his country at heart, must see that it never can take place until the Republic is more assimilated to our own by an infusion of American laws, religion, spirit, energy, and enterprise.

Mormon Outrages.

In the TIMES, of May 18, 1855,—very nearly two years ago—we published a report of the trial, in Utah, of three Indians, named ANKLE JOINT, SANDY HAIR and WHITE TREE, for the murder of Captain JOHN W. GUNNISON, and seven other citizens of the United States, on the 23d of October, 1853. This report was received from a Special Correspondent of the TIMES, who accompanied it with a letter, setting forth the clear and unmistakable fact that the verdict of manslaughter which was returned by the Jury was, in the language of the learned Judge who presided at the trial, "contrary to the law, the testimony, the instructions of the Court, and in violation of their solemn oath before God;"—and, also, setting forth the grounds for believing that the Mormons, who composed the Jury, had returned this verdict at the command of BRIGHAM YOUNG, who had protected the Indians, and who, there was reason to suspect, was really the instigator and author of the massacre of GUNNISON and his party. This letter and report have constituted, thus far, the only full and reliable report of this remarkable and startling trial. The statements and conclusions of our correspondent, however, are now confirmed by very high authority.

In another part of this morning's TIMES we publish a correspondence between the widow of Captain GUNNISON and Judge DRUMMOND, whose letter of resignation as one of the Federal Judges of Utah was recently given in our columns. In his letter to Mrs. G., Judge DRUMMOND gives very full details of the massacre and of the trials that were had of various Indians who were charged with its perpetration, and states that in his opinion, "the whole affair was a deep and maturely laid plan to murder the whole party and then charge the murder upon the Indians." The Judge's letter is one of decided interest and sets forth very strongly the character of the Mormon inhabitants of Utah and the difficulty of the task which our Government has to perform in dealing with them.

PROGRESS OF FRATERNIZATION.—The examples of Dr. BELLOWS proves contagious. In Boston, on Wednesday evening, Rev. EDWARD E. HALE, pastor of a Church in that city, gave the public the benefit of his views in the matter of Amusements, especially regarding the Theatre. His ground was very much the same as Dr. BELLOWS',—that the public need amusement he considered an undeniable proposition; that they would have it, he thought equally indisputable; that the Theatre could be made either dangerous or beneficial, was, in Mr. HALE'S view, incontrovertible. The reverend gentleman, however, had a new plan to propose to make theatres respectable. The remedy lies with the public authorities, and so the City Governments should assume the control of the public amusements, license them as anything else is licensed, and appoint Committees vested with powers of censorship. By this means, Mr. HALE argues, improper pieces may be kept off the stage, and the public morals be saved from taint.

A single paragraph sets forth Mr. HALE'S argument in brief compass:

"The drama, he believed, would, when controlled by the pure, be pure, and bad when controlled by the vicious. But it may be said that such control—proper control—of the drama has never been attempted; but this he should dispute. There was never a period ny in England which did not at first signal exhibition entertain its friends with a play. And nobody feared any injury from seeing "Box & Cox" there performed. And why? Because the play was controlled by respectable persons. Now, what shall be done? Let every city government appoint a committee to take the matter in hand; let the committee have the full police power, and be as responsible as your school committee: let them have the entire control of all public amusements—and these places will be properly controlled. If, when an immoral play is presented at one of your minor theatres, an alderman and a councilman were impeached and thrown out of office, there would be no more impunity upon the stage.

Mr. HALE's address was delivered in the Warren-street Chapel, and is spoken of as an eloquent production, though but few of the Bostonians went to hear him.

THE POLICE WAR.—A New-York correspondent of the National Intelligencer says that he has "good reason for believing that if the Courts sustain Mayor WOOD in the position he has taken in opposition to the new Police Law, Governor KING will immediately call an extra session of the Legislature for the purpose of defeating the machinations which are now at work." If the Courts sustain Mayor WOOD it must be upon the ground that the new Police Law is unconstitutional, and that any Commission for the Government of the City Police that may be created by the Legislature must either be elected by the electors, or appointed by such of the authorities, of New-York City, as the Legislature may designate. The statement that Gov. KING will call an extra session for the purpose of taking the Police ont of the hands of Mayor WOOD affords anything bnt an encouraging prospect as to the duration of the controversy that is now in progress.

AN ITEM FOR OLD BUCK.—On Wednesday night at the Opera, Col. FREMONT and Ex-President FILLMORE eat elde by side in a front seat, listening to GAZZANIGA in "Norma," apparently entirely forgetful that there had been a Presidential election last Fall. If Mr. BUCHANAN could have looked in and seen how perfectly satisfied and placid these two rivals of his appeared in their defeat, we are not sure, but that he would have envied them their happy escape from the toils and tronbles of the White House.

Italian Opera.

To-night DONIZETTI's admirable opera of "Linda di Chamounix" will be played, with Mme. GAZZANIGA, Miss ADELAIDE PHILLIPS, Signors BRIGNOLI, AMODIO, ASSONI, &c., in the cast.

We have seen many better performances of "Norma" than that given on Wednesday night. Mme. GAZZANIGA was less effective than on any previous occasion, and afforded but few points of comparison with her illustrious predecessors, GRISI and PARODI, in the same rôle. The Adalgisa of the evening was Miss C. RICHINGS, a lady who will be remembered as having sung at the Broadway Theatre some years ago. Miss RICHINGS has made much progress in her art, and sings carefully. But her voice is of limited compass,—and very unwilling to be,—and very harsh when,—forced. Signor A. ARNOLDI—a new basso—also made his début as Oroveso. He has a voice of medium quality and power, and is destined to become a respectable member of the company. The orchestra, under MAX MARETZEK, was particularly prompt and efficient.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.—An amusing little piece called "A Decided Case," was produced at this excellent establishment last night. It is, of course, written by Mr. JOHN BROUGHAM, and like scores of other pieces from the same prolific pen, is full of pleasant gossip and stage neatness. The story on which it is founded is of French origin, and has already been used for a piece similar to the present one. (We refer to the "Young Widow," by Mr. FRANK CARILL, produced at Barnum's Museum last year.) Mr. BROUGHAM has, however, added so much to the original outline, that he has succeeded in weaving together, from very slim materials, an elegant, summery little play. The plot can be indicated in a few words. A young and beautiful widow goes into the country to recruit her health and her fortunes. During her absence her steward is instructed to let several rooms. A gallant captain, who has seen the widow, and knows that she is eccentric as she is beautiful, becomes the temporary tenant. When the time for the widow's return arrives, he is requested to find apartments elsewhere, but impudently refuses to do so. He makes the house his own; arranges a lawsuit for the widow, and lends his purse to her benevolent schemes. She arrives, and to her horror discovers a strange gentleman smoking a meerschaum pipe in her boudoir. An altercation conducted on the warlike principles of landlady and boarder ensue. Her indignation is laughable; his impudence immense. A stage courtship, composed of equal parts of Deportment and Impudence, leads to a better understanding. Finally the widow becomes acquainted with the real character of her tormentor, and succumbs. There is an excellent tag, or telk at the audience, and the curtain descends merrily.

The principal characters are sustained faultlessly by Mrs. HOEY, Mr. LESTER, and Mr. GEORGE HOLLAND. Mr. PETERS and Mrs. SYLVESTER also assist creditably. We would suggest to the latter lady that a light satin dress, heavily flounced with lace, is scarcely the costume of a gentlewoman in impoverished circumstances. Mr. LESTER announced the piece for repetition.

That roaring extravaganza, "Po ca-hon-tas," has been revived here, with the old success.

CONCERT.—The Pine and Harrison tronpe give their last entertainment in America, this afternoon, at Burton's New Theatre. The proceeds of the Concert (a very excellent one) are to be handed over to the Widow and Orphans' Fund of the Fira Department. The occasion merits liberal patronage.

Personal.

Lieut. Col. JOHNSON, of the First Cavalry, is in St. Louis, busily employed in making all needful preparations to run and mark the Southern boundary of Kansas to the eastern boundary of New-Mexico. He will start from the western boundary of Missouri, on a parallel of 37°, and thence continne his labors.

A plucky gentleman is Gen. WM. T. HASKELL, Opposition candidate for Governor of Tennessee. The question having been raised, whether the General was not ineligible to office in consequence of his recent visit to Arkansas, he proves that he never intended to forsake Tennessee, and gives his reasons for his journey—as follows:

"In the Spring of 1854, overwhelmed with debt, disappointed because sudden professional success did not come with my settlement in Memphis, chagrined and mortified at what I then considered the injustice of political friends, but have since thought better of, I left Memphis with my family, with the hope of finding better fortunes elsewhere. I daparted, however, animo revertendi—if I could find no place abroad, not to resign my right of citizenship in Tennessee. I started to go to no particular place. I had a vague idea in my mind, about looking at Fort Smith and Van Buren in Arkansas, the Indian Nation, Texas or anywhere else that I could plant myself, make money, pay my debts, and recover my personal independence."

THE POLICE COMMISSION.

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

CONTINUATION OF THE ARGUMENT ON THE SECOND INJUNCTION—POINTS FOR THE COMMISSIONERS.

The People ex rel. Fernando Wood vs. Simeon Draper et al.—This case was continued last evening. Ex-Judge Edmonds opened, continuing for the plaintiff. He briefly alluded to the circumstance surrounding the plaintiff; the public opinion, and the excitement attending it; the effects of the law on the public, and vindicated the course of his client from the censure which had been thrown upon it by many persons. He said that they would agree to have the case taken before the Court of Appeals within sixty days, if his opponents would refrain from interposing every technical point to delay proceedings.

The two questions involved were the constitutionality of the law and the question of points of practice. Four gentlemen had argued the case, and until yesterday, when his associate spoke on thet point, the constitutionality of the law had not been noticed, except by his opponents, saying that he would not discuss it.

The duty of Courts of Justice in reference to points of constitutional law was one of the most delicate which could be imagined. They were well defined in Kent, from which he read extracts, and cited various authorities to define the power of the Court in these cases. He also spoke to annihilate the opinion advanced by his opponent that a quo warranto was a criminal action. The Court did not acquire the right of injunction by a statute, bnt by the Constitution, which invested it with "general jurisdiction in law or equity." It, therefore, had the power to issue an injunction at any time. Mr. Edmonds quoted a large number of precedents to prove that the Courts had power to restrain, by injunction, public officers from executing an act of the Legislature.

At the conclusion of Ex-Judge Edmonds' remarks, Mr. Field arose to reply, bnt at the suggestion of his Honor the case was adjourned until to-morrow at three o'clock. We append the points for the defendants, which, although not yet presented, will constitute in enbstance the argument of Mr. Field.

POINTS FOR THE COMMISSIONERS.

1. The injunction was issued contrary to law and is void, because it was not issued at a General Term of the Supreme Court, after notice to the defendants, as is required by the act of July 10, 1851, chapter 488. That act provides that "whenever any duty shall be devolved by law of this State upon any State officer or board of officers, no injunction shall be issued to restrain such officer or board, or any person employed by them, or to prevent the execution of any such law, unless the same be granted by the Supreme Court sitting in the district in which such board shall be located, or such duty shall be required to be performed at a General Term of said Court." And a second section requires at least eight days' notice to be given before the application.

2. An injunction is not allowed by law in an action of quo warranto, under any circumstances whatever. This is a peculiar and exceptional action. It is a substitute for the old writ of quo warranto, and by the very terms of the code, section 428, is restricted in the remedies it may furnish to those given by the writ. The language is too explicit to be misunderstood: "The remedies heretofore obtainable in these forms may be obtained by civil actions, under the provisions of this chapter." No remedy, provisional or final, can be given, except such as were before given, and even these are limited by "the provisions of this chapter."

If all the provisions applicable to civil actions in general were applicable to the action of quo warranto, then the section 435, providing for an arrest, was unnecessary, as was also the section 444—providing for an injunction and receiver; and this further consequence would follow, that the plointiff could bring the action in the Superior Court or Common Pleas, and could unite with the claim to be admitted to office, a claim for the property taken and detained by defendants, and may have a delivery by the Sheriff, or an attachment, or a receivar as in other actions. Such a construction is contrary to the latter of the Code, at war with its spirit and with the rules of construction heretofore known and applied in our jurisprudence. (People vs. Jones, 18 Wend., 601.)

3. But if it was to be admitted that the provisional remedies are to be applied to actions of quo warranto as to civil actions in general, the plaintiffs would still be unable to maintain this injunction, because the complaint and affidavit fall far short of making a case for an injunction under the title of the Code regarding provisional remedies. The first portion of section 219 does not warrant it, because the complaint does not ask as a part of the relief that the defendants be restrained from any act. In that respect the injunction practically recites the complaint.

The second portion of the section does not warrant the injunction—because, first, the litigation was not pending when the injunction was granted; and, second, it is not shown or alleged that the defendants are doing, or about to do, any act respecting the subject of the action and tending to render the judgment ineffectual. A judgment excluding the defendants and admitting the plaintiff to the office would be just as effectual, whether the defendants exercised the functions of their office in the meontime or not. The provision in question, however, applies only to cases of waste or other intentional injury to property which is in controversy between the litigants.

4. Even if the Court at Special Term had jurisdiction to grant an injunction against the defendants, and if the action of quo warranto were to be treated like civil actions in general, and if the case made by the complaint and affidavit would warrant the injunction, supposing the act establishing a Metropolitan Police to be unconstitutional, every one of which positions we deny, still the injunction must fail, because the act is constitutional.

Whoever attacks a law as unconstitutional, must make out a plain case of unconstitutionality. He must show, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the law is void. (Clark vs. The People, 26 Wend. 605. Newell vs. The People, 3 Seld. 109.) We insist not only that the act is not thus shown to be clearly unconstitutional, but that it is clearly and unquestionably constitutional and valid.

The question which is to be considered is this: has the act to establish a Metropolitan Police District any constitutional obligation? To answer this question we have first to consider the effect of the act, and then the constitutional provision which it is supposed to contravene.

The act organizes a body of about fifteen hundred men, to keep the peace and enforce the laws in four contiguous counties, and places them in the charge of five State officers.

The constitutional provision which this act is supposed to contravene is the 2d sec. of the 10th art., which is as follows: "All county officers, whose election or appointment is not provided for by this Constitution, shall be elected by the electors of the respective counties, or appointed by the Boards of Supervisors, or other county authorities, as the Legislature shall direct. All city, town and village officers, whose election or appointment is not provided for by this Constitution, shall be elected by the electors of such cities, towns and villages, or of some division thereof, or appointed by such authorities thereof as the Legislature shall delegate for that purpose. All other officers, whose election or appointment is not provided for by this Constitution, and all officers whose offices may hereafter be created by law, shall be elected by the people or appointed as the Legislature may direct."

Now, it is very clear that these five officers, called Commissioners of Police, are not county or City officers, but State officers. They are appointed by the State, and their duties are not confined to a county or city. This act does not, therefore, directly or in terms, infringe the Constitution, in so far as it makes the Commissioners to be appointed by the Governor and Senate.

But it is said that it indirectly infringes the Constitution because it vests in these State officers duties which are essentially local, and pertain to the counties or cities within the district.

It becomes, therefore, necessary to examine—First, Whether the preservation of order and the enforcement of the laws is essentially a county or city duty; secondly, Whether, if it be essentially a county or city duty, the State may not, nevertheless, take upon itself this duty, whenever in the judgment of the Legislature the counties or cities fail to perform the duty.

It seems to me that the keeping of the peace and enforcement of the laws are in no constitutional or just sense county or city duties. By a city officer I understand one connected with the management of city affairs, and by a county officer I understand one connected with the management of county affairs. City affairs are those of the corporation called a city, and county affairs are those of the quasi corporation called a county. An officer is not a county or city officer because he is appointed by county or city authorities, nor because he resides in the county or city, but because his duties pertain to the affairs of the county or city. It is the confounding of this distinction which has led to the difficulty.

The Constitution itself distinguishes between judicial officers of cities and colleges and other judicial officers created therein by law. Art. 6, sec. 19.

It would be easy to enumerate a great number of offices usually filled by county or city authorities, which are not in fact local in their character, as it would also be easy to mention others which have a county or city designation, but whose incumbents have always been appointed by State authority. Take, for example, the offices of Harbor Master, Health Warden, Notary Public, Commissioner of Deeds, Governor of Almshouses, Commissioners of Emigration, Commissioner of Excise, Superintendent of Roads.

Let it be granted, however, that the preservation of order and the execution of the laws are county or city duties, are they not also State duties? Cannot the State exercise them as well as the county or city, whenever the State judges that the exigency is sufficient?

Those who conceive that the State has abdicated all its authority on this subject, must, of course, concede that the State has divested itself of all authority to execute its will. It is hardly conceivable that any frame of government set np by sensible men can have been left so utterly defective and weak as to be without the power to do anything but as its various parts may see fit, or even to do anything of itself—that the performance of the first duties of government depends upon the will of those who are to obey.

The old Confederation of States was a most imperfect system of polity, yet it had some of the powers of government, and some of the means of coercion. It could raise and support armies, and by force, in certain cases, execute its will, even if the State authorities refused or neglected to coöperate. But the notion that the counties or cities of a State are so absolutely independent that the State cannot take into its hands the preservation of order, which is the first duty of all society, is so extravagant that it is difficult to suppose it can be seriously entertained.

The proposition of those who deny the constitutionality of this act must come to this: that the State cannot in any emergency take into its hands the preservation of public order, for if it can do so in any emergency whatever, it must be the sole judge of the emergency, and no court can inquire into the reasons of its judgment.

Let us take the strongest possible case of a country in a state of insurrection; must the State refrain from bringing in its own officers, with its own force, to establish public order? If it may interpose through its own officers, then it follows that there are exigencies where the state may confide the keeping of the peace and the execution of its laws in a county to others than the officers of the county. If it may do so in one emergency, it may do it in another, for it must judge of the emergency for itself.

Let us suppose that in this instance the State Government found that the City or County of New-York neglected to preserve order and enforce the laws; that its police had fallen into corrupt hands; that after repeated elections it had grown worse and rapidly worse; that it refused to keep order at elections; that by its means many thousands of fraudulent votes had been put into the ballot-boxes; that so long as it was left in its present state there could be no election without riot and bloodshed, and no fair deposit of or casting of the votes—let us suppose more, that the people of the rest of the State who had occasion to send their property to the City, or come to it themselves, found that their property and their persons were not adequately protected; if the State Government found all this, could it not organize a body of men, call them policemen or what you will, under officers selected by the State to keep order at elections, to prevent fraudulent voting and casting of votes, to protect the persons and property of all? To this question, it seems to me, there can be but one answer, and that is that the State has such authority; that it is an essential attribute of its unity and sovereignty which has never been surrendered.

This view, it should seem, is decisive of the question put respecting the constitutionality of the act; but I am unwilling to pass over certain other considerations which affect some minds with more or less force.

The last sentence of the section of the article in question (art. 10, sec. 2) seems to have been designed to shut the door upon questions of this sort by leaving the legislature at liberty to create new offices for any purpose, general or local, and to provide for their election or appointment, as should be deemed most expedient. The phrase "all officers whose offices may hereafter be created by law" must be taken to include new county or city officers, as well as officers not local—such is the natural import of its language—and if such had not been the intention the word "other" which is inserted in the beginning of the sentence, could not have been omitted in the latter clause of it.

When the offices of Commissioners of Police were first created, they were not filled by the electors of the county or city, or by any county or city authority. They were created and filled by the Legislature, which enacted that certain officers, elected for other purposes and duties, should fill the new offices. That act was unconstitutional, if this be so, for it is no more competent for the Legislature to create a new office and fill it themselves, by designating an existing officer to fill it, than to fill it by designating a private citizen to fill it. In neither case has the person filling the office been elected or appointed to it by the local electors or authorities.

The history of our legislation, under the present Constitution, strengthens, if it does not establish, the construction which is here mentioned as the true one.

It has been urged that if this construction be right, the Legislature may change the county lines or establish new districts for civil government. That does not follow. The Constitution requires that there should be counties, but it does not require that the counties should remain the same in extent or in power.

The legislature may change the boundaries of counties and make new ones; it may increase or diminish the powers of counties or towns. What I insist upon is that the legislature may organize a force to keep the peace and execute its laws all over the State, and make this force a unit by placing it under State officers. And if the legislature may do this for the whole State, they may do so for a part of the State, and any part of it deemed by that legislature most proper.

It would be easy to show the absurdity of some of the arguments of the opposite view. Can any body tell whether the preservation of order is a duty of the county, or the city of the county, or the town? It is no more a duty of the county than a duty of the city, and no more a duty of the city than of the town; and I will add, no more a duty of either than of the State. Suppose, in the county of Kings, for example, the city of Brooklyn should neglect to keep the peace, might or might not the county do it? Or, suppose the county neglected it, might the city and the town undertake it? Surely, that which cannot be pronounced exclusively a county, or a city, or a town duty, cannot be claimed to belong to any of them.

It is said that if this construction be admitted, the Legislature may establish District Courts embracing several counties in each, and vest the appointment of the Judges in the Governor and Senate. The answer to this hypothesis is, that the Constitution in its judicial article has carefully defined the Judicial Department of the Government, and declared what Courts the Legislature may establish. But it has not defined the Executive Department, except in its head, nor enumerated the various offices which the Legislature may create.

And, lastly, it is said, that though the duties of police may not be strictly county or city duties—yet that the Legislature cannot create new offices unless their duties are bounded by county or city lines. This notion is so contrary to all that we have been accustomed to in legislation, that one would be startled with its novelty did it not appear on a moment's reflection to be entirely unsubstantial. Is there a word in the Constitution forbidding the Legislature to create offices whose duties extend to several counties? Not a word; but the argument is, that if the Legislature may create an office pertaining to several counties, it may, by the creation of a great number of offices, absorb all the functions of a limitation by officers created by the control authority, and thus centralize what was supposed to be decentralized.

This argument amounts to no more than this, that the Constitution has not provided against all abuses of legislative power. Certainly it has not. Much is supposed to have been left to the respect of the representative for the will of his constituents. Constitutions do not of themselves preserve the people; their preservation depends upon their spirit and their watchfulness over all officers—legislative, executive and judicial.

The Constitution, it is true, mentions, or, to use a favorite expression of the day, recognizes counties, cities, towns and villages. All that could possibly be inferred from such recognition is this, that counties, cities, towns and villages must continue to exist with the limtie they had at the formation of the Constitution, or with the powers then held by them.

The Legislature may, in its wisdom, unite or dissolve counties, cities, towns and villages. To admit this, as it must be admitted, and yet to claim that the Legislature cannot appoint or provide for the appointment of any officer whose functions shall embrace two or more counties, cities, towns or villages, is an extravagance too great to be treated with serious attention.

If this act is unconstitutional, the following acts, passed since the Constitution of 1846, are also unconstitutional. There are, doubtless, many others in the same category:

1. Acts by which the Legislature have appointed Commissioners, naming them, creating their offices, and defining their duties:

Of the laws of 1847, chaps. 34, 41, 122, 140, 145, 160, 260, 295, 342, 435; of the laws of 1848, chaps. 310, 89, 43, 256; of the laws of 1849, chaps. 5, 172, 354; of the laws of 1850, chaps. 36, 249, 253, 271; of the laws of 1851, chap. 50.

The Police Commission—The Injunction and the Quo Warranto.

From the Brooklyn Eagle, April 30.

The lawyers engaged in arguing the case, as brought by Mayor WOOD against the new Police Commission, seem unable to find any precedents, pro or con., as to whether an injunction will lay in a case of quo warranto. The question was raised and decided by Judge MOSES in this city some seven years ago.

When the new Charter of Brooklyn—previous to consolidation—came into operation, it provided that one of the Aldermen in each ward of Brooklyn should act as Supervisor, and it legislated the then acting Supervisors of Brooklyn out of office some months before the term for which they were elected would have expired. When the new Supervisors, including CONCKLIN BRUSH, FRANK SPINOLA, and other noted politicians of the day, undertook to take their seats, an injunction was applied for, and a writ of quo warranto issued to test their right to the office. Judge MOSES decided that an injunction was not applicable in a case of quo warranto, which was not an action, properly speaking, but an inquiry. But the merits of the question at issue were not affected thereby; for it was also decided by Judge MOSES, on the quo warranto, that the new members had no right to their seats until the original term of the old members had expired, and they were prevented from entering upon the duties of the office. As the case was somewhat similar to that now before the New York Courts, it may interest the lawyers to know how it terminated.

MARINE MATTERS.

The clipper ship Swordfish, Capt. CROCKER, arrived at this port on Wednesday, from Manila, and reports that on the ontward passage, July 11, while lying to in a heavy gale she shipped a sea which washed overboard CHARLES WOONSLEY, the carpenter of the ship, an Englishman, and CHARLES SMITH, a seaman, both of whom were lost. On the 19th J. H. PORTER fell from the mizzentopsail yard overboard, and was also lost. The same ship reports, April 24, lat. 33° 33' N., lon. 71° 10' W., saw a ship, cotton loaded, on fire and burned to the water's edge; was about 600 or 700 tons; sent a boat to her and found her shandoned; could not ascertain her name; April 25, lat. 34° 16', lon. 71° 15', saw a ship or bark, cotton loaded, on fire and burned below the lower decks; apparently had yellow metal on her bottom, and the letters I. or J. H. and the word Port on her stern was all that could be ascertained.

The amendments to the Pilot laws passed by the Legislature, at its last session, are not likely to work any material—certainly very few—objectionable changes in the system. Under the new regulations a class of shipowners who formerly required their captains to stend their own pilots, are now obliged to pey pilotage like their neighbors, who were always accustomed to employ them: this pleases the latter class, and also relieves many captains, who were sometimes found fault with for not knowing the way in and out of the harbor as well as others. No vassels under 300 tons sailing under a coasting licenee are affected by the change; but all above that tonnage must either employ a regular pilot, or obtain a license to pilot their own vessels. Some twelve ceptains heve applied and obtained these permissions under the new law, and a general acquiescence is manifested in the new order of things. Penurious captains, who formerly hired a tug with the understanding that he should be towed down channel-way, making the steamboat captain stand pilot, can no longer evade the pilots' fees by this dodge, as that point is carefully guarded.

The old Harbor Masters went out of office on Tuesday, and, with a few exceptions, have surrendered their portfolios to their successors with a good grace; but it is rumored that there are one or two who intend to follow in the wake of Mayor WOOD, and contest the legality of the new appointments. Mr. PIERSON has served, personally, a notice upon his successor, not to interfere with his jurisdiction. One of the old Harbor Masters, after surrendering his place to the new comer, and wishing him success in his new vocation, remarked that he had thoughts of getting out an injunction against him, as he considered it unconstitutional for another man to take any office which he wonted himself.

The steamer City of Washington, Captain WYLIN, sailed yesterday for Liverpool with 90 cabin and 150 steerage passengers.

Judge MOSES decided that an injunction was not applicable in a case of quo warranto, which was not an action, properly speaking, but an inquiry. But the merits of the question at issue were not affected thereby; for it was also decided by Judge MOSES, on the quo warranto, that the new members had no right to their seats until the original term of the old members had expired, and they were prevented from entering upon the duties of the office. As the case was somewhat similar to that now before the New York Courts, it may interest the lawyers to know how it terminated.

NEW-YORK, Jan. 31, 1857.

OFFICE OF THE ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY.—NEW-YORK, April 9, 1857.—Notice is hereby given, that the Directors of the ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY have resolved to increase the Capital Stock of the Company, from One Hundred and Seventy Thousand Shares, to Two Hundred and Fifty-five Thousand Shares, which new shares will be allotted to the holders of the present stock, at the closing of the books on the 20th June next, and to such persons as may become stockholders by the conversion of Optional Rights, which expire on the 1st day of January, 1858, in the proportion of one share of new stock, to two shares of the old stock.
The Transfer Books will be closed on the 20th day of June next, and reopen on the 1st day of July next.
The holders of the present Stock are required to receive one-third the number of shares to which they may be entitled on the 1st day of July, 1857, and to pay an installment of $30 per share thereon. Optional Rights for the remaining two-thirds will be issued—one-half convertible into the stock of the Company, on or before the 1st day of February, 1858, and the remainder on or before the 1st day of July, 1858; such installments as may then have been called in, on the present Stock to be paid to the Company at the time of conversion.
Those persons who shall become stockholders by the conversion of the present Optional Rights into Stock, on or before the second day of January next, and after the first day of July next, will be required to receive, and pay for one-third of the new stock to which they may be entitled, at the time of such conversion. Optional Rights for the remaining two-thirds of the new Stock to which they may be entitled, will be issued to them, of the same tenor as those issued to parties who shall appear as stockholders, at the closing of the books on the 20th June next.
Parties converting Optional Rights will be required to pay to the Company all accrued interest on the installments from the time that interest shall have been paid on the installments to the holders of the present shares.
All stock which is not applied for before the 10th day of July next, and the installment paid thereon, will be forfeited to the Company, together with all rights which attach thereto.
The Directors have resolved to extend the time for the conversion of the existing Optional Rights, which, by their terms, expires on the 1st of January, 1858, so as to include the 2d day of January, 1858.
Information, pertaining to the details of this issue, can be obtained by inquiring at the office of the Company.
Interest will be paid, as usual, upon the Stock of the Company, on the 1st of July next.
By order of the Board of Directors,
J. N. PERKINS, Treasurer.

CONTINENTAL BANK, NEW-YORK, April 4, 1857.
CAPITAL STOCK $1,500,000, TO BE INCREASED TO $2,000,000.—The Board of Directors of the Continental Bank, in view of its increasing business, and in pursuance of the authority conferred on them by the articles of Association, have unanimously decided to increase the capital stock by an issue of 5,000 additional shares, of $100 each, which shall be subject in all respects to the stipulations, conditions, and limitations in said articles contained and declared with respect to the shares now existing.
The officers of the Bank having been duly authorized by the Board, hereby give notice that in accordance with such decision, and with the said articles, they will open books of subscription, and receive subscriptions, on the 15th day of June next, between the hours of 10 o'clock A. M. and 3 o'clock P. M., at the said Bank in the City of New-York, from all persons who shall appear to be registered on that day on the books of the Bank as shareholders in the said Continental Bank, in the proportion of one new share of the increased capital stock at par, to every three shares then held by them respectively.
The amount subscribed, and not paid at the time of subscription, will be payable on the 1st day of July next, when certificates will be issued.
Such portion of the additional 5,000 shares as shall not be taken by the shareholders within ten days after the said 15th day of June, will be disposed of for the benefit of the Association.
The transfer books will be closed from the 15th day of June to the (5th) sixth day of July, both inclusive.
W. T. HOOKER, President.
B. F. WARNER, Cashier.

OFFICE OF THE PITTSBURG, FORT WAYNE & CHICAGO RAILROAD CO., PITTSBURG, Saturday, March 20.
NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, THAT THIS Company are prepared to issue their new Stock, in exchange for that of the Ohio and Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana, and Fort Wayne and Chicago Railroad Companies, upon the terms, and in the manner, prescribed in the Articles of Consolidation, viz:
Ohio and Pennsylvania, Interest to July 1, 1856, and 20 per cent premium.
Ohio and Indiana, Interest to July 1, 1856, at par.
Fort Wayne and Chicago, Interest to July 1, 1856, and 6 per cent premium.
Stockholders in either of the old Companies, who may have assigned any portion of their stock, previous, or subsequent, to the consolidation, (Aug. 1, 1856,) without having had such stock transferred on the books of the old Companies and parties holding the certificates for such stock, are notified that this Company will not recognize the transfer of such assigned Stock, as the full shares of the Interest to July 1, 1856, and premium, have been credited to the original holders. Scrip certificates will be issued to such original holders, in cases where fractional amounts of interest and premiums on the old stock exist.
T. D. MESSLER, Secretary.

ROMAN EYE BALSAM.
For Weak and Inflamed Eyes. Read the following testimony:
BINGHAMTON, Jan. 7, 1854.
MESSRS. A. B. & D. SANDS.—Gentlemen: Your Roman Eye Balsam, which I was recommended to use for my daughter's eyes, has acted on them like a charm. Her eyes, which had for several months been very much swollen and inflamed, after a few weeks' use of the Balsam, were perfectly cured and well as ever.
Yours truly, M. FOLEY.

J. R. STAFFORD'S OLIVE TAR.—WE COPY the following from the editorial columns of the Boston Daily Ledger, of Feb. 19, 1857. Mr. Barnard, the gentleman alluded to, is a prominent citizen of Boston:
J. R. STAFFORD'S OLIVE TAR.—In the multitude of curatives that are almost daily offered to the public, it is very difficult to make a selection of any one that will prove valuable for all the purposes for which it is recommended. But in our opinion ONE specific has been discovered for complaints of the Throat and Lungs that seems to be of inestimable worth. It is J. R. STAFFORD'S OLIVE TAR. From a pamphlet setting forth its many claims on those inflicted with the diseases above named, we learn that this Remedy is not to be taken internally, after the ordinary methods, but is used by INHALATION and APPLICATION. In this subtle way it performs its soothing and healing offices on the THROAT, LUNGS, NERVES, MUSCLES, JOINTS, and SKIN. OLIVE TAR, it is claimed, contains an electro-magnetic power, which is capable of restoring to the system its lost VITALITY; and this is performed alike by the inhalation of its odor, and the outward application of its fluid. Several of our Physicians often employ it for SPECIAL INHALATION, and its curative properties they well understand. We know of many cures it has performed in cases of Bronchial difficulties in Coughs, Colds, and complaints of a similar character, and we are able to give it our full recommendation.
"We are informed by our fellow-citizen, John M. Barnard, Esq., that during a fit of sickness last Winter, he had occasion to make use of the OLIVE TAR, and found it even more efficacious than he had ventured to expect. He caused about three table-spoonfuls to be placed in a saucer over a basin of boiling water, heated by a night-lamp, and found that its odor was not only a real DISINFECTANT of the sick room, but a most pleasant soother of the irritation of his Throat and Lungs. He improved immediately in his health, and now uses the OLIVE TAR as occasion may require, in the reservoir of his furnace, satisfied that its volatile odor is of great service in rendering the atmosphere of his house both sweet and healthy at all times."
The above assertions are also fully verified by Testimonials from the following well-known persons:
THURLOW WEED, Esq., Albany.
WM. B. TOWNSEND, Esq., Staten Island.
ISAAC POWERS, Esq., New-York.
Dr. EDWARD DELAFIELD, Esq., New-York.
CHARLES VAN WYCK, Esq., New-York.
Rev. Dr. LEONARD, Exeter, N. H.
Gen. DUFF GREEN, Washington, D. C.
Hon. ELI COOK, Buffalo, N. Y.
A. B. BARNEY, Esq., Cleveland, Ohio.
JOHN F. WARNER, Esq., Chicago, Ill.
And of many others equally eminent.
J. R. STAFFORD'S OLIVE TAR is sold at 50 cents a bottle, by the STAFFORD OLIVE TAR COMPANY, No 16 State-st., (East side Battery,) New-York, and by all druggists.

RHEUMATIC, NEURALGIC, AND ALL other pains cease when J. R. STAFFORD'S OLIVE TAR is applied. Because it contains electro-magnetism, which it transmits to the body, increasing its VITALITY.
These assertions are verified by testimonials from
JOSEPH L. LORD, Esq., No. 11 Wall-st., New-York.
ROBERT B. COLEMAN, Esq., Astor House.
SIMEON DRAPER, Esq., cor. Pine and William-sts.
SAMUEL HENRY RUSSELL, Esq., South-st., New-York.
EDWIN R. YALE, Esq., Mansion House, Brooklyn.
Gen. THOMAS J. GREEN, Texas.
Gen. W. CAZENEAU, Texas.
And from many others who are equally well known to the public.
OLIVE TAR is sold at 50 cents a bottle, by the STAFFORD OLIVE TAR COMPANY, No. 16 State-st., (East side of Battery,)
And by all druggists.

THE GRE

NEW-YORK CITY.

THE MAYOR PERMITS OYSTERS.—The majority of oyster eaters of this good island of Manhattan are not aware that the following ordinance, passed in 1820, and still unrepealed, may, if the Mayor pleases, be put in force from the present date, and for four months held in terrorem over them:

"No person shall bring into the City of New-York, or have in his or her possession in the said City, any oysters, between the first day of May and the first day of September, in any year, under the penalty of five dollars for any quantity not exceeding one hundred, and the further penalty of two dollars for every additional hundred."

During the first year of his office the Mayor was disposed to enforce this ordinance. The Board of Councilmen of that time appointed a Committee to consider the necessity of repealing it, but nothing was done, beyond hearing the testimony of oyster dealers, in opposition to it. When the ordinance was passed, the business of transplanting oysters was hardly known, but since that time it has grown to be of great importance, and now over a million dollars worth of oysters, all of them transplanted, are sold in this City, during the Summer months. Oysters are only unhealthy when they spawn, but for the first year after they are transplanted, it is said, they do not spawn. The Princes' Bay and Chincaroras do not spawn at all, after they are transplanted, and to this circumstance are ascribed their fatness and flavor.—The transplantation of oysters from Virginia is now so large that a very large proportion of these bivalves eaten in this city, are natives of the waters of that State, and are pronounced by many judges of oysters to be as healthy in the summer as those that are marketed from our own waters during the winter months. There is, however, some difference on this point.

But oyster dealers and oyster eaters may, for the present summer, unless an epidemic should break out, keep themselves unshaken in their shoes. His Honor the Mayor will not interfere with roast, fried, stewed, or raw on the half shell. A man's own taste shall be his counselor. If he chooses to eat oysters during the months that have not the eighteenth letter of the alphabet in them, he does so at his own proper peril, but the Mayor will not interfere.

A NEW BETHEL SHIP.—The old Bethel ship John Wesley, which from time immemorial has been moored off one of the piers of the North River, is about to be torn to pieces and sold for old lumber.—Here Swedish sailors and others of the Wesleyan Methodist faith have assembled Sunday after Sunday for over fifteen years past to hear preaching in English and in their own tongue. A new vessel, the Carrier Pigeon, is being fitted up to take the place of the old Bethel ship. They lie side by side at Pier 11, North River. The Carrier Pigeon will be a much more convenient place of worship than the John Wesley when the alterations and improvements are completed.—The lecture room and Sexton's rooms and Minister's offices are built on the deck, while in the old ship they were between decks; the lecture room is about 75 feet long and 30 feet wide, arranged in a neat, tasteful style, painted with bright colors, light, airy and cheerful. The pulpit is at the further end of the room and two rows of pews fill the space between it and the place of entrance. A singular little temple on the fore-deck with eight pillars is intended for the belfry. The expense of altering the vessel is between $3,000 and $4,000. The work was to have been finished by May 1st, but it will probably not be completed for three weeks yet.

THE PILOT COMMISSIONERS.—These gentlemen have not yet organized, and will not until they hear from the Chamber of Commerce and Board of Underwriters, to both of which bodies they have applied on the subject of the expense of their department. Although allowed by the new law all fines and penalties collected by them not exceeding $10,000, to defray expenses, it is generally believed that when the provisions of the law come to be rigidly enforced, there will be few infractions, and therefore a very small amount of funds deducible from that source. They accordingly apply to the appointing power to provide for the expenses of a Superintendent, Secretary, office rent and incidentals. The Commissioners receive no remuneration.

THE UNION BANK BUILDING OPENED.—The fine marble-front building, just completed for the Union Bank, a little below the Assay Office, in Wall-street, was opened Wednesday for business. It is fire-proof, and cost $36,000. The main banking room is so arranged as to occupy the rear portion of the building. It has a lofty ceiling, covered by a dome of glass and iron. In the rear, and elevated, are the President's room and other private offices. The counters are of black walnut, and are inclosed at the top by plate glass, set in walnut frames. The floors are paved with tesselated marble.

THE OPPOSITION FERRY.—The Brooklyn Ferry Company promises to commence running their ferry from James-slip, New-York, to South Fourth-street, (Williamsburg,) by Monday, the 4th of May. Pity they couldn't have commenced operations by the 1st, for commuters are already buying up tickets over the Peck-slip route, and they will be slow to commute over the new route until they are satisfied that everything is going to work smoothly and well. The rates of commutation indeed are not yet published, but will be by the 1st prox.

☞ The number of vessels in this port, yesterday, was 722,—including 34 steamers, 164 ships, 110 barks, 104 brigs and 310 schooners. Seamen are less inquired for, and they are getting smaller advances. The Shipping List quotes the present currency thus:

	Wages.	Advances.
To Liverpool, per month	$20	$20
London	20	20
Havre	20	20
North of Europe	18	20
Mediterranean and South America	16	20
West Indies	18	18
East Indies and California	15	30
Coasting	20	10

Freights,—especially for Great Britain,—are extremely dull, and rates are very low. Hence the declining tendency in Seamen's wages and advances.

☞ Hoop-skirts, that have taken possession of our houses, sidewalks, and churches, have gone at last into Court. DOUGLAS & SHERWOOD have brought suits in the United States District Court against several parties in this City and Brooklyn, for alleged infringement of their patents for hooping ladies in.

"A MEDITATIVE DOMESTIC WANTED.—One of our patrons in Kalamazoo, Mich., wants a female domestic in the family, who is meditative and would be willing to sit in the family circle for communion with Spirits."

☞ CHURCH'S magnificent picture of Niagara, just completed, is on exhibition (free) for a few days at WILLIAMS & STEVENS'. It will not be in the Academy Exhibition, as was expected, but will be sent to Europe next month.

☞ Three whales have been killed by Staten Islanders, just out of New York Bay, within three weeks.

The Young Men's Christian Association.

At the recent meeting of the New-York Presbytery in this City the affairs of the Young Men's Christian Association were brought up for consideration by Mr. E. J. BROWN, who stated that the organization had originally aimed only to promote a healthful and edifying intercourse among its members, to provide mental recreation, and moral and religious improvement, to throw around young men from the country a kind and salutary influence, which would preserve them from the temptations of the great City, assist them in procuring appropriate places of residence and employment, and encourage them in attendance upon the religious duties of the Sabbath and the house of God. As such it had been recommended by the clergy. But recently subjects foreign to this design had been brought into the Association and had occasioned a good deal of strife and dissension, the history of which was detailed,—for the purpose of inviting those clergymen who were life members to take such action in the matter as they might deem necessary.

Mr. HORACE HOLDEN said he considered the whole system of Young Men's Christian Associations wrong and unnecessary, as they undertook to perform a work which was never committed to them, and as all the good they aim to effect could be better accomplished by individual action.

Rev. Dr. POTTS said that while he favored the organization at the beginning of it, he had become satisfied that its operation was to draw away the young men from their duties as church members.

Dr. STRONG said that the Association has been organized, really outside the Church of God, ostensibly to aid the church, but in reality aiming to do the church's work. And in this position it is likely to injure, rather than help, by drawing its members away from their proper duties as church members, and to alienate and divide, where they professed to build up and unite in the work of doing good.

Dr. PHILLIPS concurred in these remarks, and said he had always viewed the Association with distrust, believed it was unnecessary, and was not surprised at the result. As to the present posture of the Association, he had nothing to say. He was not disposed to take sides for or against the disputants, in the question brought before us. His objection went back to the whole Constitution of the Society. It was useless. The Mercantile Library furnished a sufficient accommodation for reading. The tendency of the times is to get up societies for everything; and Christian men are in danger of being ensnared with the delusion that all true religion and usefulness are to be promoted only in connection with them. Many persons make the whole of their duty consist in attending temperance meetings, and in promoting some scheme of "Reform." This Association had rather tended to interfere with the duties of its members, as to attendance on the worship of God, both on the Sabbath and during the week.

A PERSECUTED "DUTCHMAN."—JOHN WILHELM, "a Dutchman" from Jersey, is a persecuted man. He crossed the river yesterday for recreation, and soon afterwards got soundly drunk on lager bier. While in this position in a saloon in Rector street, some cruel fellows colored his face with charcoal. When he awoke he was astonished to see everybody present laughing at him. He couldn't divine the cause, and they wouldn't tell him, so he left in indignation. On reaching the streets he was dismayed to find that he was still an object of laughter. He walked hastily away, a great crowd following after. The excitement became so intense and the throng so great that the police were compelled to interfere and conduct poor WILHELM to the Tombs, where he was committed to get sober and his face washed.

Coroner's Inquests.

KILLED BY FALLING FROM HIS CART.

Coroner CONNERY held an inquest yesterday upon the body of MICHAEL COYLE, who came to his death from injuries received by falling off his cart in Nassau street, on Wednesday last. A verdict was rendered in accordance with the facts. Mr. COYLE was a native of Ireland. His age was 56 years.

The body of an unknown man was found yesterday in the river at the foot of pier No 45. Coroner CONNERY held an inquest upon it, but the jury were unable to determine positively whether the deceased came to his death from drowning, and returned a verdict of "Death from supposed drowning." The deceased was about 5 feet 10 inches in height, of stout build. He wore a goatee, but no whiskers; had on a drab frock coat, black pants and red flannel shirt.

SUDDEN DEATHS.

Dr. PERRY held an inquest yesterday afternoon, on the body of a man named FRITZ SCHLEBLE, who died suddenly at a lager bier establishment, at No. 51 East Thirty-eighth-street. He was a sober man, and had been for some time in the establishment where he died. Dr. WELTJE made a post mortem, and found the deceased came to his death "from rupture of the aorta."

☞ The only perfect Fountain Pen in the world. PRINOS'S PROTEAN FOUNTAIN PEN. N B.—A new and important improvement has been recently added to this invention, by which any writer can graduate the flow of ink. The fountain cases are warranted as incorrodible, and the points of the Gold Pens are warranted for one year.

This pen feeds itself with ink. PRINCE'S PROTEAN INK-FOUNTAIN PEN," is thus noticed in the New-Englander, by a remark that is, in itself, worth saving:

"We remember being counseled by the Professor of Rhetoric, in College, never, in writing, to arrest a free flow of thought, in order to look ant a word in the dictionary, but to write on, and correct the diction afterwards. The reason assigned was, that a writer should take advantage of the concentration and glow of his mind, and not suffer it to become cooled and distracted while he investigates a question of language. For the same reason we prize "PRINCE'S Fountain Pen." It helps us to avail ourselves of the mind's best moods for composition. It is also an economist of time, soon repaying, by its saving in this respect, its original cost. A recent improvement has obviated our early objections to it, which arose from the insufficiency of the flow of ink. This difficulty no longer exists, the writer being able, by means of a new, ingenious contrivance, to regulate this flow at pleasure. No clergyman, we think, who gives it, as thus improved, a fair trial, could ever be induced to relinquish it: no man, indeed, whose literary or commercial pursuits require him to write hour after hour."

The public are invited to call and examine for themselves. Dépôt, No. 290 Broadway, corner of Reade-street.

THE CURIOUS NOVELTY OF THE DAY.—We have alluded already to the new enterprise in our City of the London Stereoscopic Company, whose active and energetic agent, Mr. CUSSANS, is attracting every day such a crowd to Gen. HALL'S music store, corner of Broadway and Park-place. It is quite a treat to step into HALL'S and hear the admiration expressed by all classes of people, but particularly by the refined and educated, in regard to this charming mode of exhibiting a scene of reality. By this little instrument, which is sold at so reasonable a price, the cold, dull likeness of your amie struts into life. She seems to gaze at you. You appear able to grasp her hand. Her cheek itself tempts the pressure of your anxious lips. Or take some scene you have witnessed abroad. How this instrument restores to it the vitality of a faithful remembrance? Every spot is there, inviting your approach, and rejoicing as was in your recollection. There will be no genteel family without one of these London cases before long, and handsome pictures to suit can be had of Mr. CUSSANS, in any quantity at a low price.

KNOX'S SPRING HAT.—There was a crowd at KNOX'S establishment, No. 212 Broadway, yesterday. We might say, and we will venture to say, a delighted crowd, for KNOX issued his Spring style of hat, and its beauty is of that striking character that it cannot fail to command universal appreciation. This artist-hatter may calculate upon an old-fashioned rush for the next thirty days, and if he has not prepared a greater supply of fabrics than usual, hundreds must be disappointed. Call in time.

LONG ISLAND.

DEATH OF JUDGE A. T. ROSE.—Hon. ABRAHAM T. ROSE, late County Judge and Surrogate of Suffolk, died at his residence at Bull's Head, (Bridgehampton,) L. I., on Tuesday last, after an illness of some months. Judge ROSE was an exceedingly popular man in the County; though being on the Whig side in a strongly Democratic District, he was oftener defeated than elected to office. He was several times nominated for Congress and always ran far ahead of his ticket. He has held the office of Surrogate and County Judge several times—being the successful candidate at his last election on an independant, American, and Anti-Prohibition ticket. He enjoyed a fine reputation as a public speaker, and when he fairly aroused himself, Juries had to brace themselves stoutly not to be seduced by his oratory. His health failing him some months ago, he resigned his office, and about a fortnight since Hon. GEORGE MILLER, of Elverhead, was appointed by Governor KING to succeed him. Mr MILLER, like Mr. ROSE, has had a large, experience in the Surrogate's office, and no appointment could have satisfied better the people of Suffolk.

☞ A. S. MULFORD, Esq., having resigned the office of Cashier of the Mechanics' Bank, Brooklyn, on account of ill-health, the Directors presented him with a service of silver plate, and promoted the First Teller, Mr. GEORGE W. WHITE, to fill the vacancy.

ATTEMPTED SUICIDE BY AN INSANE MAN.—A man named DANIEL BLAIR, who has been insane for some time, attempted to destroy his life Wednesday night by jumping into the East River, at the foot of Jay-street, Brooklyn. He was rescued by Officer MCBRIDE, of the Second District Police, and will be taken to the Insane Asylum to-day.

☞ The late Teller of the Long Island Bank has been arrested on a bench warrant, for embezzlement, and held to bail in the sum of $5,000 to answer when wanted.

☞ The distinguished "weather-man," E. MERIAM, returned from Albany Wednesday evening to his family. He is in a feeble condition, but with the prospect of speedy recovery.

FIRES IN BROOKLYN—ARREST FOR ARSON.—At 10½ o'clock on Wednesday night, the dry goods store No. 142 Fulton-avenue, occupied by J. M. FOSTER, as a dry goods store, was discovered to be on fire by some people who were passing at the time. Mr. JOHN SIEFKIN burst the door open and found Mr. FOSTER inside and fire in three parts of the store—in the front window, in a drawer and in the rear of the store.

Mr. FOSTER was arrested, and yesterday was brought before Justice BLACHLY and committed for examination, which will take place on Saturday next.

Two families resided above FOSTER'S store, and his own family had occupied apartments there until quite recently. He was to have moved his stock from the premises to-day. On his stock and furniture there is an insurance of $5,000,—$2,600 in the Phenix, Brooklyn, and the balance in the Firemen's Insurance Company, New-York.

At 12 o'clock, yesterday, the New-York Resin Oil Factory on Red Hook Point was accidentally sent on fire and in less than one hour the whole establishment, covering several lots of ground, was in ruins. The loss is variously estimated at from $10,000 to $20,000. Partially insured.

NEW-JERSEY.

THE NEW COMMON COUNCIL.—The first meeting of the newly elected Common Council of Jersey City will be held on Tuesday evening next. The Democratic members being in the majority, have held two or three caucuses, at which it was reported they had agreed upon the following appointments:

President of the Board—M. S. WICKWARE.
City Clerk—GEO. W. CASSEDY.
Street Commissioner—JOHN D. NOLAN.
City Weigher and Measurer—G. T. RILEY.

The caucus had some difficulty about the appointment of City Treasurer. ALBERT T. SMITH, Cashier of the Hudson County Bank, has been Treasurer for several years past, and an attempt is being made to substitute JOHN CASSEDY, President of the Jersey City Bank. An attempt is also being made to appoint Mr. BRADY Chief of Police, in place of Mr. KEESAM.

THURSDAY, April 30—P. M.

The California arrival of Gold imparts additional confidence to the Money Market. The demand from the Brokers is irregular, though generally dull, and the supply easy. Discounts are without alteration. The offerings at Bank keep up in some few quarters, while in others there is less choice paper presented this week than usual. The Havre steamer Fulton sails on Saturday, but succeeding so soon the mail dispatched by the Arabia yesterday, there is not much doing in Exchange, and the engagements of Bullion promise to be light. We hear thus far of $150,000 or $200,000. The Californiabars brought in by the Illinois find a good demand from the Bullion brokers, who are able to retain the gold in this shape until wanted for expert.

The Stock Market continues very active, and another heavy day's business was done. As usual on a strong upward reaction of 3 or 5 per cent., such as we have had for several days past in Southern Michigan and Cleveland and Toledo, there was some large parcels of Stock realized upon to-day, and prices were subsequently less buoyant; though the same parties who sold in the forenoon at top rates were buyers at the Second Board on the decline. The demand for New-York and Erie was a liberal one at the early call of the list, and about 6,000 shares sold. New-York Central steady, and Panama and Nicaragua firm and higher on the advices by the Illinois. Between the Boards the general market fell off and continued weak until about the close of the afternoon session, when prices left off steady. There was a reaction of 2 per cent. in the Harlem movement, the exact nature of which is not yet understood in the Street; though, if as rumored, the new direction, spoken of for the election next week, has been shaped with a purpose to bring the New-Haven concern to a sense of right and proper dealing, by determining the arrangement under which they are permitted to come into the City from Williams' Bridge, on the Harlem track, the change would be heartily welcomed. At present no good is being done by the New-Haven Directors for either their old or defrauded stockholders. It is now nearly three years since the Schuyler fraud, and the difficulty growing out of it, besides depriving all parties, except the lawyers, of the earnings of the property, is as far from settlement, we apprehend, as ever, unless the so-called "genuine" stockholders attend the May election in New-Haven in person, and demands speedy compromise. The following are the main fluctuations of the day:

The registered shipments of Bullion from San Francisco from 1st January to 31st March, to New-York, London, were $10,288,548 against $10,439,950.

The Onondaga County Bank has filed a notice with the Bank Department preliminary to closing up its business. It is an old Safety Fund Bank, of high credit.

The telegraph announces from Albany that Gov. KING has signed the bill passed by the late Legislature, against the "improper retention" of country bank notes by the City banks. We regret this as a step in the wrong direction, not unusual with the New-York Legislature, on the subject of the small note currency. The act was designed by its pertinacious movers—themselves engaged in country banking—to interfere with the Metropolitan system of cheap redemption, though we much donbt whether it is to result in real profit to this selfish interest. We have yet to hear that country bank notes have at any time been improperly or illegally retained by the Metropolitan or American Exchange Banks, and it is doubtful whether the present act will change the legal relation of the parties in whatever sums the notes may happen to be retarded or sent home. It certainly will not interfere materially with cheap redemption.

The death of Mr. SAMUEL NICHOLSON, of the Banking-house of BROWN, BROTHERS & Co., was announced this morning. He died at his residence in this City yesterday, at the age of 62 years. He was an able merchant and banker, and a quiet though much-esteemed citizen. For many years he had charge of the business of his house in New-Orleans. Mr. N., we believe, was a native of the North of Ireland.

The following official notice has been issued from the United States Mint at Philadelphia, touching the arrangements of the establishment under the recent act of Congress relating to foreign silver coins of the fractional part of the dollar and the new coinage of cents:

MINT OF THE UNITED STATES, PHILADELPHIA,
April 27, 1857.

The Director of the Mint gives notice of the following regulations for carrying into effect the "Act relating to foreign coins and the coinage of cents at the Mint of the United States," approved Feb. 21, 1857, a copy of which act is hereto appended:

1. On and after the 25th day of May next, applications may be made at the Mint for coins of the new issue, in exchange for "the pieces commonly known as the quarter, eighth and sixteenth of the Spanish pillar dollar, and of the Mexican dollar," at the nominal rates of 25 cents, 12½ cents, and 6¼ cents respectively; or in exchange for the copper cents heretofore issued; and the persons so applying will be attended to in their order, daily, between the hours of 9 and 2 o'clock.

2. The silver or copper coins thus offered must be in even sums of five dollars, by count, and, for the present, not exceeding fifty dollars; and in the case of silver, the sizes or denominations must be assorted and kept separate, so that any one package shall contain exactly five dollars, or a multiple thereof, of quarters, or of eighths, or sixteenths. Care must also be taken to exclude from the silver any other kinds of coin than those specified in the law. A memorandum or label must be presented, showing the value by count, of the pieces offered, and the denominations thereof; and in the case of copper, it must state that they are lawful coin of the United States.

Such pieces of silver as are mutilated or so much worn as to be illegible, or as have any appearance of being counterfeit, will not be received for the new cents; but packages containing the same may be exchanged at another office in the Mint for silver coins of the United States. To prevent uncertainty as to what parcels (containing mutilated pieces or such as are worn smooth) will be rejected, it may be stated, that if five dollars by count, of quarter dollars, shall outweigh $4 80 of United States silver coins of the present standard; or if the same amount, by count, of eighths shall outweigh $4 50; or if the same count of sixteenths shall outweigh $4 30, they will be received at their nominal value in exchange for new cents; and it may save disappointment if holders will ascertain this before offering them, which may readily be done by the use of an ordinary balance.

3. The reasonable expense of transportation of the new cent, in sums of fifty dollars, to any point accessible by railroad and steamboat, will be paid by the Mint.

4. Provision being made by the act for the receipt of the kinds of silver coin already specified "at the Treasury of the United States and its several offices, and at the several post-offices and land offices," at the rate of twenty cents for one quarter of a dollar, ten cents for one-eighth, and five cents for one-sixteenth, with a view to their transmission to the Mint for recoinage, the coins so transmitted will be received at the Mint at these rates, the silver coins of the United States returned therefor, and the expenses of transportation both ways will be paid by the Mint

The British Mail steamer Africa, from Liverpool at 3 o'clock on the afternoon of Saturday, the 18th instant, arrived at this port yesterday.

The Africa arrived out 7½ P. M., 12th.

The steamship City of Baltimore arrived out 5 P. M., 14th.

The Caledonia, of the Canada Line, sailed from Liverpool on the morning of the 16th, for Quebec.

The United States Mail steamer Arago arrived at Southampton P. M. Friday, 17th.

The only two items of English news by this arrival are the birth of another Princess (making the ninth Royal infant) and the ceremonies of laying the foundation of the Free Library and Museum, presented to the citizens of Liverpool by WILLIAM BROWN, M. P.

There was quite a lull in politics, awaiting the reassembling of Parliament.

From France the substance of the intelligence is that the Emperor proposes to visit Algeria after the visit to Paris of the Grand Duke CONSTANTINE; also, that the French Republicans intend to put up CARNOT, CAVAIGNAC, and others as candidates for the Legislative chamber. Reports continue to circulate of conspiracies against the Emperor's life, but they are mostly extravagant, as for instance that he was to be shot in his box at the opera.

It is reported, from Brussels, that the Four Powers, being wearied of the delay in the Neufchâtel affair, are about to draw up terms of their own, and call on Prussia and Switzerland to assent at once.

From Madrid we have a reaffirmation of the statement that England and France are actively mediating between Spain and Mexico. Prussia is mediating between the Western Powers and Naples.

Sardinia has proposed to the Pope to resume negotiations with Rome on the terms of a Cardinal's hat for Archbishop FRANZONI, and a concordat for Sardinia generally.

Wurtemberg has signed a concordat with Rome.

The elections for the Divans in the Principalities have commenced, with a prospect of a majority favorable to the union of the territories. The claim by Turkey for a restitution of Persian territory is to be submitted by Persia to the arbitration of France and England.

The treaty between England and Persia had arrived at Teheran, but five or six weeks would elapse before ratification.

The draft of a treaty of commerce has been agreed between Austria and Prussia, and said to contain the same provisions as the treaty between Persia and the United States.

Herr VON SCHMIDT has resigned as Danish minister of Foreign Affairs.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

LONDON, Friday night, April 17, 1857.

The intelligent British public having been told by the British intelligence par excellence, that a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull altogether would place PALMERSTON on the pinnacle of power, and therefore England in the Happy Valley, the aforesaid public did give the long pull, the strong pull, and the pull altogether—placed PALMERSTON on the pinnacle of power, and itself in the Happy Valley? Oh, dear no; the Slough of Despond. Who says so? Who but one? There wouldn't be no use in anybody else saying it, for none other would be believed. And this is that one—the omniscient oracle aforesaid. Yes, the Times of this morning, after having had everything its own way for nobody knows how long back, coolly acquaints the public that "the condition of the Money Market seems more perplexing than ever." "Seems, Madam? Nay, it is," as Hamlet had it, and as this British stereoscope-makers who have bought TOM THUMB now say all day long, and at night by illumination, in their advertisements. Why the condition of the monetary world should be perplexing nobody knows. Of course if anybody did know, it wouldn't be perplexing, and there would be no use in talking about it. But now the wonder is that there should be any wonder in it. However, there is no use in wondering at the wonder. The thing is, what is to be done? What is the cure for the despondency that now afflicts us? Worms? Good gracious! what can worms have to do with money? Everything. At least, so says the money oracle, and there is no gainsaying that. Yes, worms are to regenerate the British lion. This is the way of it: if the sickly silkworm recover its appetite, if it nibble its mulberry with its antique gusto, and digest the same with the regularity it ought, then silk will be plentiful, then profits will be remunerative, then the three per cents will be healthy, and the meteor flag of England, which has braved a thousand years the battle and the Yehs, will be the oriflamme of everything that's meritorious, magnanimous, miraculous. But let the worm continue the nasty little hungry, unsatisfied, unfattening grub it now is, and there will be no silk, no profit, no felicity, no nothing that is anything anybody cares about. Wise and philosophic Great Britain! Envy and admiration of surrounding nations! Giant-brained Bull has always a maggot in his head; and the maggot is always honey-combing that constitution which he tells the world defies the sharpest of old files, the tooth of Time. A few years ago a slug in the potato sufficed to turn up side down and inside out that Empire on which the sun never sets; and now it depends upon a caterpillar whether the Empire is to be worth shining upon much longer.

Oddly enough, however, but quite characteristic of our Anglo-Saxon idiosyncracy, while we are bemoaning and deploring our own condition to ourselves, wringing our hands before our faces, and enjoying that luxury beloved by grumblers, asking each other if we are not the most miserable people on the face of the earth, we are exulting in the assumed far greater debasement of the people—that people being our esteemed and respected ally, the French; for thus we are true to that maxim of ROCHEFOUCAULD, which says that in proportion to our intimacy with a friend, so do we relish his misfortunes. It appears, however, that the French are by no means disposed to be grateful for our commiseration. The articles in our journals on the decline of the population of France, and the strictures on the presumed causes leading to that decline, have been resented furiously by our polite neighbors, who point to our own admissions of the wholesale heathenism and hideous abominations of all sorts which abound in this beautiful Babylon of ours, portending a depravity that admits of no other purgation than that which befell the Cities of the Plain. We retort; they rejoin; we reply again; and then—conclusive argument—they asseverate that the rationals of all our irritation is jealousy of French valor, French skill, French fortune, French everything, at Sebastopol! There's a charming entente cordiale for you! There's a spectacle of philanthropy and reciprocal respect between the two great Western nations of the old world—brethren in arms, arts literature, civilization, fiddlesdeedee, and so forth. But, if the fury of the Gauls be now what it is, what will it not be when the inflammation is superadded of a most poisonous frothy rattlesnake article in the blue and yellow, just out—the Edinburgh Review. This once famous and still formidable publication, respected for its former service in the cause of the commonwealth, and now dreaded because of its being the tool of the Palmerston dynasty, takes up this ticklish theme of the census, and pursues it root and branch, through all its ramifications, the upshot being that the Louis Napoleon régime is proved to be a fraud, a delusion, and a snare, a tyranny as stupid as it is atrocious, hated, ridiculed, and despised by every man in France of the least character, and out of France of the least penetration, and depending solely on the ignorant peasantry, who, not knowing what to do with their universal suffrages, intrust it to one man, who uses it to coerce all the rest to his low and vulgar eggrandizement. Is not this also delightful, testifying to the solidarité of that Palmerstonian-Bonaparteism on which the affairs of this poor old wornout world of ours turn?

All this is sufficiently bewildering to the oldest observer of the signs and portents of the passing time, and is indeed amazing beyond all utterance to the universal herd, who, "thinking what o here think, fear to think" at all. Our press and public are in a most distracted state about the meaning, the double meaning, of every single thing they hear and see, and don't hear and see.

The refusal of your Government to join in the tripartite alliance against China is thus significantly animadverted on.

"This is to have a bad name, and to deserve it. To Lord Palmerston himself, it is doubtless a matter of little consequence, rather a subject for chuckling and congratulation, that he should thus be tabooed by the most advanced and advancing nation of the new world; that our own flesh and blood, the descendents of our forefathers, should thus, in the eyes of all mankind, repudiate association in our enterprises. It is the English people who are the sufferers; first in the disgrace of being thus 'cut' by the Americans; secondly, in the positive loss to which they will be put by this refusal of co operation. It is impossible to say that they do not deserve their fate, for scarcely a year has elapsed since the same minister who has now brought it upon them, very nearly succeeded in provoking a war between England and the United States, and did actually afford President PIERCE a pretext for suspending negotiations. Had the Government of the United States fallen into the trap laid for them they would have given a retrospective sanction to PALMERSTON'S proceedings, of which his parasites would not have been slow to take advantage.—The Emperor of the French too will have received another proof of the inconvenience of attending that English alliance which he so much cherishes. He is repudiated by America for no other reason than that he comes in company with the arch disturber of the peace of the world, although in consenting to join him in the proposed Chinese treaty he undoubtedly must have done so with a desire to rescue his ally from disgrace by converting a merciless outrage into a combined step in the march of civilization. Although we shall regret the decision of the United States we can scarcely condemn it. The cause of civilization will suffer should the combined operations in China become incomplete through the secession of one of the most powerful States in the world; and the English people will feel the mortification of knowing that this catastrophe will have been incurred through the evil repute of a minister whom the rest of the world regard, though erroneously, as possessing their respect and unbounded confidence.

The foregoing appears in the Peelite morning organ, and expresses the views of many who do not hold Peelite opinions on other points. PALMERSTON'S own organ pursues a very bellicose strain indeed about Yankee notions of things in general, particularly as regards Cuba, which it drags in apropos of nothing whatever, but merely to round some periods of epigrammatic smartness in reference to the fate, or supposed fate, of fillibusterism in Central America. But there is no question that, added to the cavalier treatment of Honduras and Mosquito business, this refusal of all participation in the Chinese matter is felt as a heavy blow to the Palmerstonians, who, however, are obliged to disguise their mortification as they best may, it being their instructions to cry up their patron as the pet of the whole human race, which he undoubtedly would be were he the best man alive.

The importance of the mission on which the British Plenipotentiary to China is entering, renders the antecedents of the gentlemen about to accompany him a matter of considerable interest. the more so as most of them, as well as Lord ELGIN himself, have at some time or other had some political connection with the United States. They appear to be exceedingly well chosen; and, inscrutable as the objects of the mission are, and notwithstanding Lord PALMERSTON'S assertion that it was his intention to support Sir JOHN BOWRING, it may be readily surmised that the latter gentleman, and his associates will have but a small share in the transactions contemplated, whatever they may be. The chief Secretary is Lord ELGIN'S brother, Hon F. W. BRUCE, who, though two years younger than his noble relative, (who is himself but forty-six,) has had considerable diplomatic experience in various parts of the world. In 1842 he was with Lord ASHBURTON at Washington, during the discussion and settlement of the Oregon boundary question. From 1843 to 1846 he was Colonial Secretary at Hong Kong, where he acquired experience that cannot fail to be of great value on the present occasion. He next spent two years as Consul-General and Chargé d'Affaires in Bolivia, and a like period in a similar capacity at Monte Video. In 1850 he was transferred to Alexandria, as Consul-General in Egypt, with a salary of £1,900 per annum, being rather more than double the sum allowed by the United States as a remunoration of an officer of the same rank in the same place. The first attaché is Mr. D. CAMERON, formerly attaché at Berne, (Switzerland,) and more recently at Copenhagen; the second Mr. FITZROY, son of Sir C. FITZROY, late Governor General of New South Wales, to whom he was private Secretary during his twelve years' occupation of that important post; the third Mr. H. LOCH, who has served in the Indian army, and is also personally well acquainted with China. Lastly, there is Mr. MORRISON, son of Dr. MORRISON, the famous linguist, who compiled the Anglo-Chinese Dictionary, and founded the Anglo-Chinese College, at which, we believe, Mr. MORRISON was educated. He succeeded his father as British Superintendent of Trade at Canton in 1834, an appointment which prevented him from fulfilling the paternal hope that the dictionary would be revised and corrected by him. The work is now out of print, and cannot be reproduced except at enormous cost, the blocks and types having been destroyed by fire. A copy of the work was sold lately at auction in London for £15, which price was considered very much below its intrinsic value. It is understood that, in addition to these gentlemen, an employe of the Foreign Office will accompany Lord ELGIN, as is usual in special missions like the present. For instance, when Lord JOHN RUSSELL undertook diplomacy at the Court of Vienna, he was attended by Mr. HAMMOND, permanent Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs; but that gentleman's duties are too important to admit of his being absent from Downing-street for such a period as must necessarily be occupied in the voyage to and from China, and the business of the mission, and the duties performed by him in the case of the Viennese negotiations will probably devolve on some official of minor consequence.

Mr. LAWRENCE OLIPHANT, the gentleman who filled the post of private Secretary to Lord ELGIN in Canada, and who himself administered the affairs of the Indian Department, now accompanies him to China in the same capacity. Although a young man, he has already gained considerable reputation as an author, his graphic description of Nepaul, written when a mere youth, having been several times reprinted, whilst his later publications have attracted a large share of public attention from the singular manner in which his views of the policy of Russia were confirmed by the events of the late war. On his return from Turkey in 1854, he pointed out, in various publications, the policy of assisting the Circassians, and predicted the fall of Kars as the consequence of such policy being neglected. His advice was unheeded, and Kars fell. Before that disaster occurred, however, he had joined the army OMER PACHA in Asia Minor, and was an eye-witness of the unavailing struggles which that gallant soldier made to retrieve the consequences of that period of enforced inaction in the Crimea which contrasts so strikingly with the vigour shown and glorious victories won on the Danube, and for which certainly the Ottoman general was not to blame, whosoever the shoulders may be upon which the responsibility rightly rests. Mr. OLIPHANT was under fire at the Ingour, and has written the history of that expedition, upon the chief incidents of which he has also lectured before a military audience in London, pointing out the grave error of allowing Russia once more to take possession of Anapa and the other Circassian poste on the eastern shores of the Black Sea. Lord JOHN RUSSELL has recently informed the public that he also, while at Vienna, warned the British Government of the consequences of not imposing checks upon Russia in that direction. Mr. OLIPHANT has lately made a second tour of the United States, with whose institutions and people he expresses himself much pleased. He returned home by way of Central America and the Panama Railroad, thus adding another chapter, as it were, to his varied experiences of men and things.

The incidental reference to the Institutions of the United States suggests the mention of a circumstance that may be acceptable to some of your legal readers. The law reformers of this country have often referred to the clearness and perspicuity of the New-York Code, as also those of the Continent, as contrasting favorably with the obscure and often ambiguous phraseology of British statutes. American superiority in this respect has been again brought out in the evidence taken by the Select Committee which, during the last session, considered the recommendation made by the Statute Law Commission, that an officer should be appointed to supervise all bills in their progress through Parliament, so as to avoid the oversights, ambiguities, unnecessary repetitions, and other defects so frequently found in our current legislation. Mr. W. EWART, Member for Dumfries, and brother of the honorable Member for Liverpool, in his examination of the witnesses, all of them eminent in the legal profession, drew attention to the codification of the laws of New-York, quoting with reference thereto the evidence given in 1836 by Mr. DUER. Mr. COLEMAN, who was a Member of the Statute Law Commission, recommended that the existing British statutes should be dealt with in the manner followed by Mr. DUER in his able classification and revisal of the laws of New-York. The dissolution of Parliament brought the inquiry to an abrupt termination, and the Committee did not feel themselves justified in offering any definite opinion on the merits of the question submitted to them; but the matter will probably come before a Select Committee of the new Parliament, and, though the main pros and cons renders it impossible to prophecy what the result may be, the example of New-York is not likely to be lost sight of in carrying out any plan for the classification of our statute law, which is a question altogether independent of the one submitted to the Committee. The daily organ of the Manchester party, in a leader on this subject in the impression of Tuesday, quoted the evidence of Mr. BELLENDEN KER, one of the Commissioners, with regard to the New-York Code, and referred to it eulogistically as one of the great models of legislative expression.

Another matter of a somewhat equally dry but not less essential nature invites an instructive paragraph. A Parliamentary return was issued yesterday, showing the alterations made in the customs' tariffs of foreign States since the 1st of August, 1855, with the dates, and the authorities whence the British Consuls abroad have derived the information. It appears from this document, which, strange to say, was moved for by Mr. NEWDEGATE, our almost only surviving Protectionist, and has been prepared in the statistical department of the Board of Trade, that most of the Continental States, and several of the transatlantic Republics, have made important modifications in their tariffs within the last two years. Russia has reduced the import duties on coffee and sugar; Sweden, those on silk, cotton, woolens, and linen manufactures, and admits rice and paddy, maize, potatoes, cheese and pork free. Belgium has abolished the duty on hides; and France those on timber, (except pine and elm,) besides reducing the duties payable on pine and elm timber, sugar, machinery, tools, hides, cotton and cocoa. Cotton from the United States, however, still pays a duty higher by 5f. in French vessels, and by 9f. 33c. in foreign vessels than that imposed on Cotton grown in French Colonies. Considerable preference is given also to the cotton of Egypt and India, as compared with that of the United States. Portugal has reduced the duties on breadstuffs; Austria those on cocoa, coffee, sugar, and cotton, woolen, and linen yarn; Sardinia that on India-rubber; and the Pope those on cotton manufactures, and straw hats. The category of articles in the Mexican tariff upon which the duty has been reduced occupies nine folio pages, and includes cotton, cocoa, agricultural implements, cotton cloths, clocks, and such a long array of hardware articles that the enumeration reads like the price-list of a Birmingham warehouse. Whale oil, timberwood, and iron horses, and steam engines are admitted free; tobacco is prohibited. New-Granada follows, with a list so long that it occupies no less than seventeen pages, and quite throwe Mexico into the shade. Cotton and cotton manufactures, cocoa, and coffee, India-rubber, hides, gun barrels, drugs, fowlingpieces, carpenters' tools, tin and pewter wares, iron sheets and nails, ice, saddlery, cutlery, casks, hats, tobacco, tea, and an infinite variety of other articles are included in the new tariff, which was promulgated in June last. The Government of Montevideo has established a scale of ad valorem duties on a long list of raw and manufactured articles, the principal of which, with reference to the trade of the United States, are boots and shoes, candlewicks, fowlingpieces, hatchets, lard, nails, pine planks, rice, sugar, tobacco, tea, wheat, and a variety of manufactured goods in cotton, silk and woolen. As regards tobacco, Bahia leaf, by the decree of July 17, 1856, is admitted at 20 per cent., while the duty on United States tobacco is 30 per cent. The Peruvian tariff has now been nearly two years in operation; it reduces the duties on iron nails, India rubber boots and shoes, hides and skins, rice, cocoa, flour, sugar, coffee, cigars, lard, cheese, tobacco, tea and wheat, and admits a number of minor articles duty free.

The papers by this mail will take you overflowing details of the ceremonies at Liverpool yesterday and the day before, in consequence of Mr. W. BROWN'S inauguration of the institution his munificence has founded there for the benefit of his poor townsmen. Mr. BROWN has been a fortunate man in most things, and not least so in having this event chronicled at a time when there is a perfect famine in the newspapers, and when, consequently, details are given with a minuteness which the doings of kings and emperors would not command a month hence, or half a month ago. The speech which will most interest Americans is that by Mr. MONKTON MILNES, M. P., a poet of tolerable repute himself, as author of Palm Leaves, but better known as the editor of KEATES. He gave the "Health of the United States,"—rather a strong metaphor, you will say, even for a poet, and very poetical indeed, inasmuch as he left out both the state of the health and the health of the State; but he brought in an "American man of letters, a man whose name ought to be written in red letters, the man of the Scarlet Letter, NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE, your Consul at Liverpool, who, of course, returned thanks, and of course, did it as he ought to do, complimenting very neatly the gentleman who had very neatly complimented him.

The republic of letters here, just now, is anything but in a condition of Arcadian unanimity. A Mr. LUCAS, who has followed the late Mr. SAMUEL PHILLIPS on the leading journal, is reviving the old virulent style of "slashing," or rather mangling articles, and has created considerable disgust by an ungenerous, ill-conditioned, and most unjust disparagement on the two first volumes of the Peninsular Historian's memoirs of his immortal brother, the Bearded Vision that Swept Scinde, all because Sir W. NAPIER has had a quarrel with the Times about the insertion or non-insertion of some letters on a passing topic. The concluding two volumes are cut to-day, and in them, as in the other two, the deceased hero, Sir C. NAPIER, pays many compliments, in his strange, rough way, to your countrymen. In one passage, written in 1853, he says, "What rubbish the Times puts forth about the wisdom and just conduct the Americans ought to pursue! We will not look truth in the face! Weak people and weak nations are always full of justice and right in quarrels; but strong people are full of wrong. The Yankee will conquer, right or wrong. Conquest is his watchword. To avenge his failure against Cuba, he will finally take Cuba and all else he covets, till he has a split at home." So spoke the man who annexed to Great Britain territory larger than the United Kingdom.

The New Members Returned to Parliament.

From the London Times.

* * * And now for the much maligned hundred and seventy odd whom the British public—no such bad judges of men—have given us instead of those who have been ousted from their seats. It is true that many are but little known, and that many are young—some very young. But, even to take the most superficial estimate, there are quite as many Lords, and Honorables, and Baronets, and great country names in the new as in the old House. The new names of this class cannot be a worse pick of the aristocracy than the old, and there is at least hope on the side of the young and the unknown. Some of the names are sufficiently well known to give a definite promise of novelty; there are enough radicals, and humorists, and literary men, and men said to be odd, to be some compensation for the less regular sort of talents thrown out in the general election. There are, too, many men of business, such as the new members for Manchester and for some other boroughs. Then there are old friends come back again, such as the member for South Durham. Otherwise the new list offers large scope for conjecture, and it is quite impossible to say what we may and what we may not expect in the new House. But the British House of Commons, as it was always supposed, does not depend chiefly on that sort of talent which a man brings from public meetings, from debating societies, from book-writing, or from any other special use of the mental or oratorical powers. It is a peculiar sphere, and has special requirements of its own. What it demands chiefly is common sense; and a man of common sense, good temper, and a clear and simple style of expression, is a far more useful man there than a declaimer, however fast and furious. We have that faith in the country, and especially in those feelings which have influenced the election, that we are sure the 170 new members comprise a respectable amount of character, good sense, and good manners. In such a lottery there must be more blanks than prizes, but they will not be all blanks. They will naturally start with more courage than the crowd which has submitted for years to the claims of louder and more forward speakers, and who are no longer able to break the spell of silence. One will encourage another, and before long we shall have to congratulate the country on the fact that the political soil is not wholly exhausted. In the general readiness to decry the new House we recognize little more than the uniform disparagement of a new generation by the old. What boy leaving a school ever thinks that the new comers can rise to the stature of the giants he can remember? Who, on revisiting his old school, does not think it lamentably fallen off? Who does not deplore the decay of his town, the felling off of his neighborhood, and the general degeneracy of society? Of course, the old members think small of the new ones. We can remember those old ones thought quite as small by the "old fogies" of their younger days. So it always has been, and always will be. We, however, beg to retain fresher views and hopes, and to believe that the new members will turn out at least as good as the old ones.

Grand Banquet to Mr. Brown in Liverpool.

SPEECH OF MR. HAWTHORNE.

The proceedings in connection with laying the foundation of the New Free Library and Museum, which is being built in Liverpool at the sole cost of Mr. WILLIAM BROWN, M. P. for South Lancashire, took place on the 15th ult. The ceremony passed off extremely well.

At the banquet given by the town to Mr. BROWN, as some mark of its appreciation of the princely gift, over 800 noblemen and gentlemen were present. The chair was occupied by the Depnty-Mayor of Liverpool, and among the guests were Lord Stanley, General Sir Harry Smith, Lord Talbot, Sir J. Pakington, Mr. Monckton Milnes, Mr. Nathaniel Hawthorne, the Bishop of Chester, Sir J. P. K. Shuttleworth, Major-General the Hon. Sir Edward Cust.

The distinguished member for South Lancashire answered in a brief and pertinent speech to the toast proposing his health, and, after other appropriate sentiments had been responded to, Mr. MONCKTON MILNES rose, and in the course of his remarks said: There is a large population far away over the Atlantic—our brothers in another hemisphere. [Applause.] I would call Mr. BROWN a citizen of both worlds, [hear, hear,] and in many a crowded city of our brethren on the other side of the Atlantic will the celebration of this day be read. It is he and such as he who have brought together the two great countries of England and America. It is he and such as he, before the electric wire had been laid down underneath the surface of the great Atlantic, lying on a rock which Providence seems to have raised for the special purpose of uniting the two great empires—it is he and such as he who have brought together those two nations by the electricity of common interest and common sympathy and feeling. It is my object to bring before you and to drink the health of a citizen of the great republic of the United States. That connexion which Mr. BROWN has established between the material interests of England and America, NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE has done much to cement. [Applause.] His Scarlet Letter has struck to the heart of every man with whom it came into contact. He has built his House of Seven Gables in every town in England, and as for his Twice-Told Tales, we will wish they had been told ten times. [Laughter and Applause.] Gentlemen, therefore, in giving you the health of that distinguished citizen of the United States, and that distinguished citizen of the literature of the world, I believe you will join with me, and that you will feel you are in no degree deviating from the special purpose for which we have met together. [Applause.] And those two great nations, speaking the same great speech, carrying out in the main the same great institutions, are the hope and the blessing of mankind—the hope of the future world, and, under Providence, a blessing to the nations. I give you; "The United States of America."

Mr. HAWTHORNE, United States Consul, said—Mr. Mayor, my lords, and gentlemen, I appear in this hall before you, not in any individual capacity of my own, but as the representative of my country, and especially of the literature of America; and I heartily wish the literary men of America had a better representative—one who has done more for the cause of literature than I have done, and one who could have acknowledged better than I possibly can the honor that has been conferred upon them. [Cheers.] The honorable gentleman who has alluded to me has made allusions also to some productions of my own. That praise, gentlemen, is the more valuable, coming as it does from one who is so eminently qualified to express an opinion when a thing is well done. His praise is very gratifying, for there is nothing in literary reputation so dear to an American as a knowledge that he is considered worthy of commendation in the land of his ancestors. (Loud cheers.) But, gentlemen, I must not forget that I am not speaking here in my own behalf, but on behalf of the literature of my country, and on behalf of the literary men of America; the poets, the historians, the novelists of America. I thank you, for I have no right to decline any applause which you may be pleased to award to them, how much soever I might feel inclined to decline that honor to myself individually. ("Hear, hear," and cheers.) The circumstances of our country have directed much of our attention to the rough side of life, instead of those softening influences which are favorable to literary productions; but it is something to me to think that we have accomplished an act of gratitude—of heartfelt gratitude—to England. It is something to my countrymen to know that they have yet maintained the old Anglo-Saxon spirit, and that it has some hold upon them now in their literary pursuits. It gives me happiness to believe this, because the more we return to you for the great measure of enjoyment that we have received from you the more we shall aid you in promoting peace and good will, in which I hope the two nations will ever continue, because every American who has written books which England is content to receive into her literature has contributed something to that excellent result. Having responded to the toast which has been proposed, I might sit down, but I cannot do so, and you will pardon me, for, as has been justly observed, had the ties been drawn but a little closer, America would have called Mr. BROWN her son. [Cheers.] At all events, he has the connection by blood, by friendship, by affection in all the interests of life, which we shall not certainly forget, neither will he. [Loud cheers.] It is good for our country that there should be such men—men connected with one country, and with another, and yet not the less true to their own beloved land. [Cheers.] It was proved, and not very long ago either, that it was good for both countries that he was here—[hear, hear]—that he grasped one in his right hand, and the other in his left. Sir, I assure him, on behalf of my fellow countrymen, that we are always as proud of him as if he were one of us; we are proud of his good deeds, of his illustrious life, and of his great acts of noble and enlightened beneficence. [Cheers.] This last is the deed conceived in the very spirit, and done in the very spirit in which an enlightened benefactor should seek to benefit his country—by considering the means by which he might best promote human happiness throughout the world. Gentlemen, I thank you. [Cheers.]

Mr. BROWN gave the "Health of the Deputy-Mayor," and that gentleman having responded the proceedings terminated.

Another Expedition to the Arctic Seas.

From the London Times.

We have for several years past most urgently and consistently opposed any further expedition to the Polar Seas in search of the relics of the Erebus and Terror. We are fully persuaded that many years ago the last survivor of the unfortunate expedition in which Sir JOHN FRANKLIN and his companions were engaged had ceased to exist. We rejoiced in the recent determination of the Admiralty not to throw away good lives after bad, and to refuse absolutely the countenance of the Government to any further explorations in the Polar Seas with the hope of recovering that which had long since perished. When we say thus much it will not be supposed that we are asking for any assistance from the public authorities, or even from the public, towards a new expedition which Lady FRANKLIN has set on foot. This lady, as we have been given to nuderstend, has embarked the last relics of her fortune in an ultimate expedition, which is to be directed towards that particular spot of the Polar regions where tidings may be expected from the Esquimaux of the lost voyagers. This expedition we believe to be a Quixotic one; but who will venture to speak with disrespect, or even with indifference, of the efforts—ay, of the desperation of Lady FRANKLIN in such a cause? Looking at the matter as one of plain common sense, we believe that speedier and cheaper access to the region in question might be obtained by overland and smaller excursions from the extreme settlements of the Hudson's Bay Company; but Lady FRANKLIN has resolved upon a final expedition by sea, and therefore we can only say "God speed" to the adventurers in so noble a cause. Public assistance to this bereaved lady might have been given in one way. What if the old Resolute had been handed over to her as a gift from the English public? The sea-battered and ice worn ship might thus have been turned to some account, and Lady FRANKLIN might possibly have been saved some expense. We can form no favorable expectations as to the results which may be looked for from this last Arctic Expedition; but, as far as Lady FRANKLIN is concerned, she has every right to the sympathy of her fellow-countrymen.

The "Great Eastern."

From the London Times, April 10.

Among the passions which belong to human nature we may recognize what may be called a passion for size. Those primitive works of fiction which feed the childish imagination appeal very boldly to this passion. They go straight to the point, and create without ceremony men, houses, and lions ten times bigger than actual men, real houses and live lions. But this is not the only quarter in which this appeal is made. Science, with all its gravity, copies fiction here, and appeals to the same passion exactly as the childish fairy tale did. What single ingredient in astronomy, for example, tells more in creating a taste for that science than the enormous distances in which it abounds? The figures which represent the distances of heavily bodies from us, or the speed with which light or the speed with which electricity travels have the same fascination for the scientific that the numbers in the banker's book have for the covetous imagination. The one set of figures constitutes the conventional symbol for space, and the other for wealth.

Whoever wants to feed this natural passion for size in the primitive way, and to see a true giant in its own line, must visit the bank of the Thames at Millwall. But before he goes we recommend him, unless he is very well versed in the Book of Genesis, to turn to the 6th chapter, and refresh his memory as to the dimensions of Noah's Ark and the "fashion" of its making: "The length of the Ark shall be 300 cubits, the breadth of it 50 cubits, and the height of it 30 cubits." So, reckoning the cubits at a foot and a half, we have a ship 450 feet long, 75 feet broad, and 45 feet high. While the visitor is collecting data as to ships, sacred and profane, he may turn out "Marlborough" in the Navy List, and there he will see that the largest line-of-battle ship in the British Navy is exactly of 4,000 tons burden. And now let him get on board a Greenwich steamer and be steamed through the picturesque Pool to Millwall. Just opposite Deptford he will be aware of something pre-Adamitis wallowing in the mud of the Isle of Dogs—a stranded saurian ship, to which even Noah's Ark must yield precedence, and to which all the Marlboroughs, and Wellingtons, and Merrimacs, and Niagaras in the world are mere cockboats. An iron hull of the burden of 23,00 tons, nearly 700 feet long, and 60 high, will meet his eye—the hull of Mr. SCOTT RUSSELL'S Great Eastern steamship. We must give a few more figures, for every figure is a monster, and worth looking at separately. One is a figure of 30,000—the number of the iron plates which compose the enormous erection, each weighing the third of a ton, and each fastened by 100 rivets. The ship will accommodate 4,000 passengers, 800 of whom are first-class. On an emergency she could carry 10,000 troops. She will contain 10 boilers, and 100 furnaces. The cylinder of every engine will be six feet in diameter, and will weigh five times as much as the great bell of St. Paul's. The screw propeller will be 24 feet in diameter, and the diameter of the paddle-wheels will be 56 feet, or considerably larger than the circuit at Astley's. The principal suite of saloons will be 400 feet in length, and a promenade round the deck will afford a walk of more than a quarter of a mile. This monster ship will combine steam power in both shapes, screw and paddle, with sailing power. She will carry 11,000 tons of coal, she will be lighted by gas made on board, and the electric light will flicker like St. Elmo's fire at night from her mast-head. She will spread 6,500 yards of canvas, and her speed is computed at 15 nots, or 18 miles an hour—a rate which will perform the voyage to India by the Cape, and to Australia, in little more than a month. Who would not wish to be the captain of this gallant ship?

With these principal figures, then, gone through, let us imagine the Great Eastern afloat, and on her road to Bombay or Melbourne, and with her ordinary complement of passengers on board. The first idea which strikes us in the multitude of faces on board. It will, in fact, be a whole town afloat, and much more than a town of 4,000 population, because it will be a floating town of 4,000 grown-up persons; at least, with comparatively few exceptions, each of them being what is called an "individual,"—by which we mean a human being of size to command notice, and having, to appearance, at least, a mind and will of his own, together with a formed air, tone, and manner peculiar to himself. In this sense even young ladies are individuals. All this crowd of individualities will be collected within the dimensions of 700 feet by 60. What a new shape of human society! Take the 800 first-class passengers by themselves, and what room does even this number afford for the formation of all kinds of different circles and sets, which will know nothing of each other, one man only just knowing another by sight, and hardly that! How many immeasurable social chasms will be collected within a few hundred feet! How many Mr. Smiths will there be who will not speak to Mr. Jones during the whole voyage because he is not in the same set! How many Mr. Joneses will pay back Mr. Smith in the same coin! Between how many "nice" young ladies and "proper" young gentlemen will there not be a great gulf fixed, because in the eyes of anxious mothers the said young gentlemen are not desirable persons, but mere penniless bipeds! What flirtations will there not be behind boats, what rivalries, and, if many Americans voyage by the Great Eastern, what duellings may we not expect on that ample deck! In short, what an epitome or camera-obscura of the world will the Great Eastern present! It will be worth any aspiring novelist's while to take his berth to Australia or India and back again, simply for the great convenience of having so much human nature brought before him within so small a compass. It will be the mountain brought to MAHOMET, the world condensing itself before his eyes, for the sake of being observed and examined. The rapid succession of faces will bewilder him at first, but individuality will come out in time, though he must be sharp about his work, otherwise the Great Eastern will have stopped her screw and paddles before he has got any results. If his material is enlarged, his time is much curtailed on the new system. Farewell to long voyages, with their appropriate quarrels and matches—their love-makings, flirtings, reconciliations and irrevocable unions; voyage life has entered on another phase. For what is a month?—it is gone before we begin to think about its going. How will the old voyagers look back to the romantic days when a room-full of persons were their own company for four months, gradually forming enmities or friendships, when attachments rose up among "young people" unconsciously, and by the mere passive influence of the scene! We are growing a hustler nation every year, and cannot afford time for more than one chapter of this sea romance.

But we must not let the appeal to imagination supersede the real, practical result of the grand experiment of the Great Eastern. The poet, as he surveyed this vast sublunary scene of restless industry and adventure, was struck by nothing so much as the triumph of man over the sea. He expresses himself as more than struck—as shocked:

"Nequicquam Deus abscidit
Prudens Oceano disseciabili
Terras, si tamen impie
Non tangenda rates transiliunt vada."

He argued that the sea was a providential appointment, and that it was impious in man to struggle against it—he had no right to unite what God had separated, and connect land with land when the divine power had inserted water between. We have long seen the weakness of this argument, and arrived at a much better doctrine of final causes than this. But if any one wants to see a good finishing blow given to the Horatian argument—at least on the solvitur ambulando principle—he may see it given by the Great Eastern. That mighty fabric indeed does not talk, but it acts—its act being a month's voyage to India or to Australia. That act, while it is a speechless, is at the same time the most powerful answer, that the religious scruples of the sweetest poet could receive. A reflecting mind will see in such a voyage a much more natural, proper, wise, and obedient fulfillment of the designs of Providence than any timid self-confinement and servile deference to a barrier of nature would have been. It will appear that the sea was made to alternate with the dry land, not that continents might be disconnected, but that man should have the opportunity of exerting his skill and invention in connecting them. The result of this great experiment in ship-building, if it answers, of which there is little or no doubt, will be a consolidation of the British Empire such as we have not yet seen. Half of the space which separates the various sections of it from the mother country and from each other will be annihilated. Our colonies will be brought comparatively close to us, and, what is almost of as much importance as the actual vicinity gained, they will be more than twice as near to us in imagination. The difference between a month's voyage and two or three months is all the difference to the imagination. We think of a place as within reach, and within a bearable distance, if it is only "a month off." The whole Empire is thus brought into a home compass, and obtains the addition of strength which so much greater union gives. We shall find ourselves paying visits to and receiving visits from India and Australia. Our friends will come over for the Summer with return tickets, and the British Empire will become, in virtual compass, a province.

The Alleged Conspiracies against Napoleon—Arrests.

Paris (April 15) Correspondence of the London Times.

A few more arrests were, it is said, made yesterday and the day before. I have not noticed the various stories, some of them extravagant enough, which have been current about these arrests. It is hardly necessary to say that secret societies never wholly disappear in France. They may be more or less quiet—more or less dangerous—more or less withdrawn from the public eye, but they do not cease to exist, and their influence is never wholly unfelt. When a certain time elapses, and when no movement is observable, the authorities think it useful to lay their hands on a few dozens. To do this, it is necessary to entice them out of their hidingplaces, as rats are coaxed out of their holes. In the meantime the traps are prepared, and as the conspirators become visible or tangible they are caught when least aware of their danger. The ratcatchers in the present instance have been rather successful, though it is probable that at least one-third of the arrested are agents of the secret police. I believe these arrests to be nothing more than one of those sweepings which take place every now and then. The principal charge against the persons now in custody is for conspiring with a view to an attempt on the person of the Emperor. M. TREMBARD is the Pacific and in Canada. The annexation of Texas, and the forced surrender of California, are other evidences of the same chronic policy of aggrandizement. In this one purpose the United States have spared no expenditure of money or blood. Our own prosperous and loyal colony of Canada has not been exempt from the sympathizing attempts of the citizens of the United States. But the Monroe doctrine received its full development when the present President of the United States put his hand to the Ostend manifesto. The acquisition of Cuba by purchase, or by force, has been for more than thirty years a cardinal point of American diplomacy. What LOPEZ and his followers failed in achieving may now apparently be accomplished by the United States, should Spain and Mexico engage in war. The President of the United States has pledged himself to this line of policy; and, "the pear being ripe," will the responsibilities and obligations of his present office stay his hand? But are the nations of Europe, the allies of Spain, to remain impassive spectators while this act of international policy is being consummated? We believe that their best exertions will still continue to be applied to the high and worthy object of arranging the existing cause of difference. That this wise and judicious policy may be successful must be the earnest hope of every person who wishes to maintain inviolate those great principles of public justice which exist not only for the protection of the weak, but to arrest the strong in the pursuit of lawless aggrandizement. It is unfortunate that the Ostend manifesto should stand before the world as an index of Mr. BUCHANAN'S policy; but the greater will be the merit of that gentleman if in his more influential position he should now openly disavow those principles which have attached so discreditable a name to this act of American diplomacy.

THE CHINA WAR.

Co-operation of England and France—The Concessions to be Extorted from the Emperor—Lord Elgin's Instructions—Aid from Portugal—Attitude of the United States—Great Defensive Preparations of the Chinese.

From the Paris Correspondence of the London Standard.

The coöperation of the French Government in the further English operations in China will be the heartiest kind, and that the Catholic Church, for the protection of its numerous missionaries there, has made urgent representation to the Emperor to take an active part in the war. It is said that Lord ELGIN will demand from the Pekin Cabinet a renewal of former treaties, with the following amplifications of some of their provisions. As regards commerce, the number of ports open to Europeans is to be nine instead of five; and diplomatic missions are to be established at Pekin on the same footing as those of Russia. As regards offence and defence, it is said that the English Government demands the right of establishing military posts wherever they have Consuls, and that vessels of war may enter any port whatever.

From the Paris Pays.

A letter from London gives us some details relative to the instructions given to Lord ELGIN for his mission to China. He is to have the superior direction of all affairs in that part of the world, and for that purpose he is to receive full powers from the English Government, with whom alone he is to be in correspondence. He is to decide on the opportuneness of all warlike operations, and to fix the time for commencing them. In case the authorities of the country should think fit to send prepositions of arrangement, he is to endeavor to obtain the following concessions: 1. The old treaties are to be renewed and extended to eight ports of China, in place of five; and, in addition, English trading vessels are to have the right of putting in, from stress of weather or for repairs, to every point on the coast. 2. England is to have, like Russia, a college at Pekin. The head of that establishment, which is to be composed of five members at least, is to be charged with all official relations with the Chinese Government. And, 3d, the English are to have military poste in all the towns in which they have Consuls ar agents. A piece of ground shall be conceded to them at Shanghae, and another at Canton, on which to raise forts and form military establishments, the strength of which shall be fixed by common accord. Independently of these principal conditions, other secondary points are left to the judgment of the English Commissioner.

PORTUGUESE EXPEDITION TO CHINA.

From the Paris Correspondence of the London Times.

A private letter from Lisbon, of the 10th, gives some information of the intention of the Portuguese Government with respect to the affairs of China. An expedition is in course of preparation in the ports of that kingdom. It is composed of a corvettee, a brig, a steam despatch boat, and a transport. The garrison of Macao will be raised to 4000 men, selected from the best troops of the army. Macao was ceded to the Portuguese in 1579, in the reign of HENRY, the successor of SEBASTIAN, in recompence for the services which Portugal had rendered to the princes of the dynasty of Taitsing. In virtue of that concession, which was renewed in 1725 by the Emperor YUNCHING, and again in 1796 by KIACHING, Portugal had the property of the establishment of Macao, which was administered by a Portuguese Governor, while the Emperor of China preserved the right of appointing a Mandarin to watch over the interests of Chinese subjects. For the last 50 years, however, matters have changed. The Mandarin was allowed to assume the right of administration of the settlement, and cruelly oppressed the foreign population, while the authority of the Portugese Governor dwindled into a merely nominal one. Some years ago the Portuguese Commander, AMARAL, who represented the Sovereign of Portugal, tried to enforce respect for the Portugese flag, and was assassinated by the Chinese. Portugal, supported as she will be by other and more powerful governments, appears determined to profit by the present occasion, and maintain her rights in China. The garrison of Macao will be placed under the command of a Governor, whose instructions are to re establish in the settlement the authority of Portugal.

THE UNITED STATES AND THE BRITISH DISPUTE WITH CHINA.

From the Manchester Guardian.

It is said, happily not on indisputable authority, that the American Government has refused to cooperate with England in the endeavor to bring the Cantonese and the Imperial Commissioner to reason, and to establish the relations of the foreign residents and merchants with the Chinese inhabitants and officials upon a satisfactory footing. If this is really the case, the part taken by Mr. BUCHANAN'S Cabinet is deeply to be regretted. The assistance which we might have received from the United States squadron in the Chinese waters would not, indeed, have been either necessary or important; but it would have been both satisfactory to the feelings and serviceable to the interests of this country to enjoy the support of the United States in compelling the Chinese to afford redress for their past offences, and in placing matters for the future in such a position as may effectually prevent the recurrence of such contests as the present. Had the Chinese Government found that the three most powerful nations represented at Canton were unanimously resolved to take vigorous measures for the repression of such outrages as those lately perpetrated there, and were prepared to insist conjointly upon the concession of full and sufficient guarantees against their repetition, and the establishment of a system which should insure a prompt and effectual settlement of all future disputes between natives and foreigners, it would probably have been found that even the obstinacy of the Celestial Empire was not proof against such a combination. It must be remembered that the Americans are also interested in the maintenance of peace and order in the ports opened to foreigners by the Government of Pekin; that their trade, as well as ours, suffers by the continuance of the present state of things; that the lives of their citizens are quite as much endangered as those of British subjects by the excessive fanaticism of the Chinese. The populace of Canton will care very little whether they immolate a free-born Yankee or a subject of Her Britannic Majesty; and the rabble of neighboring villages, when aroused to frenzy by the appearance of a foreign garb in their streets, will care very little whether the inoffensive foreigner whom they hunt to death for presuming to take a walk in the country was born under the union jack or the stars and stripes. The cause is one in which all civilized nations who have any dealings with the Chinese are alike interested—the cause of humanity and common sense against a ferocious barbarism. It is much to be regretted that under such circumstances there should be any doubt as to the sympathies of America.

We hope that the report which has reached us is not only premature, but incorrect, and that no personal ill will to this country which may be entertained by any member of Mr. BUCHANAN'S Cabinet will prevent the President from acting as he is imperatively required to act, for the interests of humanity and civilization, and for the protection of his fellow-citizens in China or engaged in the Chinese trade. It is manifest that the assent of America will be essential to any thorough arrangement of the difficulties which impede the communication between Chinese and foreigners; and, this being the case, it will be best that their course should be taken at once, and that they should insist, conjointly with England and France, on a final and satisfactory settlement of all matters in dispute, and the adoption of such regulations as may enable the foreign Powers to put a stop to the lawless conduct of the Chinese populace and the prolix excuses of officials. Should the Government of the United States decline to take part in this good work, it must be done without their assistance; but it would be more consonant with their national dignity, and with a true and far-sighted policy, to adopt a bold and energetic course, and to take that position and exercise that influence to which their interest in the question entitles them.

From the London Post.

We may also mention another instance of isolation on the part of the United States Government. The proceedings of Sir JOHN BOWRING in China have received the approbation not only of the American authorities upon the spot, but of the American people at home. The British Cabinet have sent out Lord ELGIN to Canton to negotiate a treaty, in the advantages of which (should any be obtained) the United States will not be denied participation. England and France have agreed to act in concert, but the Cabinet at Washington, according to the latest accounts, refuses to join in the proposed alliance. We are strongly impressed with the belief that the only means which European States can adopt for the purpose of regulating their intercourse with a people so singular and strange as the Chinese, will be by the establishment of mixed commission courts, like those which exist under the different slave trade treaties, to settle and determine disputes between Chinese and foreigners. To accomplish this object the consent of the United States Government is highly desirable, if not necessary; but, instead of adopting this course, it appears resolved to stand alone, ready to reap any advantage, but unwilling to encounter any trouble and inconvenience. All we can say is, that such a policy is totally unworthy of a great and enlightened nation, and that it is one not likely to meet with favor or approbation in England, or any other country in the world except the United States—and perhaps not even there, amongst the commercial classes.

Great Defensive Preparations of the Chinese.

The Moniteur de la Flotte publishes some further details relative to the war in China. The Chinese, it is said, are at present making formidable military preparations, which are not to be despised. Since the attack on Canton the Chinese have executed enormous works on the Peiho, a river which falls into the Yellow Sea, and by which a communication is maintained with Pekin. That river is now barred in 22 different places by dams built of stone, which completely intercept the navigation. These works are regarded as a curiosity. Moreover, the three branches of the Peiho canalized by the Emperor KIA-KANG in 1817 are cut, and the course of one of them, the Huho, has been turned off into the lake of Hoho tchi. When an army invades the Chinese Empire, the principal means of defence is to let the waters of this lake overflow the country. The system of defence, efficacious against an enemy, but most disastrous for the country, was first used against the insurgents in 1852. The City of Pekin is consequently perfectly safe from an attack either by land or sea, and the Emperor will in any desperate circumstance be protected by the fanaticism of the people, who will stop at no means to destroy the foreigners.

A circumstance has lately demonstrated the truth of this fact. The British ships proceeding to Canton have been in the habit of taking fresh water at Whampoa from a small river which falls into the Tchukiang. It was remarked that the sailors using this water lately have been attacked with colic, and after a careful investigation it was discovered that the water had been poisoned by the Chinese. They employed for this purpose the trunks of certain trees, which, after being prepared for the occasion, impart a deadly poison to the water. The Chinese are naturally malignant, and their wickedness is increased by their fanaticism, which is beyond description. There is but one way to subdue them, and that is to act on their senses and to terrify them by a display of force, and by a maritime demonstration on a grand scale, such as is about to be accomplished by the British Government. It appears, moreover, that some of the wealthiest Mandarins in the empire propose to revive the great commercial company founded in 1759 by TSONG-TOO. These great dignitaries, through personal interest, are highly favorable to an arrangement with the English, notwithstanding their warlike manifestations, and, as they are in direct communication with the members of the Nuy-Ko, or Cabinet Council at Pekin, they can bring their influence to bear directly on the Emperor's advisers. The revival of the company founded in 1759 will render it impossible in future for the Chinese Government to violate at will its treaties with foreigners. The Moniteur de la Flotte concludes that an arrangement of the difficulties at present existing between the Chinese and English is perfectly possible. For this purpose the British Government have merely to adopt the only means efficacious with the Chinese character, which is to make a formidable demonstration on the coast of the Chinese Empire.

THE VERY LATEST.

LONDON, Saturday, April 18—2 P. M.

We are indebted to Captain SHANNON, of the Royal Mail steamship Africa, for the following additional news, telegraphed from London to Liverpool just before the departure of the Africa.

Le Nord states that the Grand Duke CONSTANTINE will not visit England.

The cattle epidemic having reached the Prussian frontiers, a company of infantry has been sent to the Circle of Piesse to cut off all communications.

The Madrid journals state that the Queen will open the Spanish Cortes in person. Amongst the first measures to be brought forward, will be one for a reform of the tariffs. It was considered certain that her Majesty was enciente.

The officers of the Russian frigate Wiborg have given a splendid collation to the Empress Dowager. Her Majesty proposed a toast to the health of the King of Sardinia.

In the protocol of the Paris Conference, submitting a basis of a compromise between Prussia an Switzerland, the mediating Powers will declare they have no means of compelling the adoption of their views, but e hope will be expressed that neither party will proceed to any act calculated to disturb the peace of Europe.

Queen VICTORIA'S recovery goes on favorably. The infant Princess continues well.

SPAIN AND MEXICO.

The Paris correspondent of the Times expresses a strong hope that the differences between these two powers will be pacifically settled.

The Spanish Ambassador at Paris has had interviews on the question with Count WALEWSKI and Lord CAWLEY, and he was to see the Mexican Envoy yesterday.

If the attempts at pacification failed, the Spanish Government will probably address a note to the French and English Cabinets, and perhaps to the other powers, setting forth the moderation of its demand, and declaring that, in the event of hostilities, the Cabinet of Madrid is not to be held responsible for the consequences.

COMMERCIAL.

At noon, on Saturday, April 18, Consols for Money were quoted at 92¾@93, and for Account, 93⅛@93¼.

Liverpool Markets.

LIVERPOOL, Friday, April 17, 1857.

COTTON—The market has been quiet, if not dull, notwithstanding the accounts from Manchester are better than might be expected after the long depression there. The free imports of the past fortnight daily add to the stock, and being brought on the market as landed, have served gradually to depress prices, which must be quoted, ⅛d. ℔ lb. lower in the fortnight for "Middling" and above, and ¼d @⅜d. ℔ lb. for the lower qualities, the latter being almost unsalable. We quote—Middling Orleans, 7¾d.; Mobile, 7½d.; Boweds, 7½d. Present estimated stock 569,836 bales, including 402,493 of American. Stock same time last year, 535,453 bales, of which 394,961 were American.

TOBACCO—The Trade is slow—but regular in prices—the demand being principally for leafy samples. We quote—Virginia Leaf, 7½d.@10½d., Stripe. 11d.@14d.; Kentucky Leaf, 7¾d.@11d., Stripe. 11d.@13d.

BREADSTUFFS—In most of the Country Markets, as well as at London, there has been during the week a gradual stiffness of price, with a somewhat more extended demand for Wheat, and a better inquiry for Flour. Here the trade has been firm, holders evincing no disposition to sell except at full market rates. Wheat has been freely taken, the inquiry for Indian Corn has been fair, and the transactions in Flour, although somewhat limited in extent, have been fully up to quotations. The receipts from the United States within past week include some 9,000 qrs. Wheat, 29,860 qrs. Indian Corn, and 6,600 bbls. Flour. The delivries by Farmers for week ending 11th inst. were 98,845 qrs., at an average of 53s. 11d., against 98,772 qrs., at 56s. 7d., for corresponding week of last year.

To day's market was a decided improvement on any that had been held for some time—the attendence was good, and the demand for WHEAT animated at an advance of 2d @3d. Good FLOUR was more saleable, and for INDIAN CORN there was a free inquiry. We quote—WHEAT, White, 8s. 6d.@9s 3d.; Mixed, 8s 6d @8s. 10d.; Red, 7s 8d.@8s. 2d. FLOUR, Western Canal, 27s. 6d.@28s. 6d; Philadelphia, 28s.@29s.; Ohio, 29s @31s. 6d. INDIAN CORN, Mixed, 33s.; Yellow, 31s.; White, 32s 6d.@34s. 6d.

BACON—The firmness noticed at the close of last week has continued, and in some instances has resulted in an advance of 6d. ℔ cwt. on Bonelese and the better description of Ribbed Long Middles, as well as in higher prices for Short. The stock here is not large; that in London is still less; and as we, in addition to a good home demand, are likely to have an inquiry from France, holders appear sanguine as to future prices, and although willing to meet the market, are unwilling to press sales. We quote: Long Middles, Ribbed, 54s. 6d. to 55s. 6d., Boneless, 57s. to 58s.; short Middles, rib in, 53s.; Boneless, 60s. asked; Cumberland, 53s. to 54s. 6d.

BEEF AND PORK are in fair demand; choice BEEF will command 130s. to 150s.; and for good PORK 92s. 6d. to 95s. is paid.

LARD has been depressed by free receipts, and at present there are sellers on the spot at 70s. and for forward delivery at 68s. The stock is estimated at some 90,000 bbls.

TALLOW.—The prospect of early receipts from the Baltic has depressed the market. Butchers' Association ranges from 53s. to 55s.

JAMES HEWITT & CO.

A New Filibustering Enterprise on Foot.

PROPOSED EXPEDITION TO VERAGUA, IN THE STATE OF PANAMA.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

PANAMA, Saturday, April 18, 1857.

By the mail, which arrived three days since, comes a report that a filibustering expedition is organizing in New-Orleans to take possession of the province of Veragua, in this State, in order to make a diversion from thence on Costa Rica, in favor of WALKER. I opine that it will be rather too late to render that "busted up" individual any assistance, even if such an affair is seriously thought of. It is probably, however, nothing more than a threat thrown out to Costa Rica, to prevent her from sending away any more soldiers to Nicaragua. And it is a very foolish threat at that. It would be at least ten days' good march from the Atlantic side into that province; and when the fillibusters got there, if they ever did get there, they would need a much larger force than WALKER ever had under his control, to keep their footing a month on its soil. Veragua is now a pretty-well populated province; and the people are anything but cowards. Santiago, its capital, is a large city, of some 4,000 inhabitants, situated about 30 leagues west from Panama. It is separated from Costa Rica by the province of Chiriqui, also in this State, by more than 200 leagues of mountainous country; and the kind of merch a fillihustering force would have, to get into Costa Rica, may be gathered from the following account of the province, which I extract from ALCEDO'S Dictionary of America, printed at Madrid in 1774.

"Veragua is 70 leagues long from east to west, and 34 wide from north to south, [at this time Chiriqui was included in it,] this being where the Isthmus is widest. It is of a hot temperature, and for the most part mountainous and rough, some of the heights being inaccessible, although there are not wanting llanuras, wherein are found various estates and grazing farms, well stocked with cattle, from the abundance of excellent pasture. In the mountains are found various kinds of excellent wood and plenty of wild beasts, birds and animals. It rains almost continually in this country; and indeed there is scarcely a day passes but that there are showers, attended with violent gusts, and thunder and lightning. In the north part are the mountains, and the rains flowing down from these in various streams, from rivers and pools, render the province almost impassable at certain seasons. Here are many gold mines, from which great wealth has been extracted; but these mines are worked but little at the present day, owing to the excessive expense of conveying materials and provisions over those very craggy sierras, the carriage of an arroba of meel on the shoulders of Indiens being equal in its cost to the meal itself. Here are very large herds of cattle, especially of swine. It was originally well-peopled by Doracee, Gnaimies and Juries Indians, and with other nations, who lived in the mountains like wild beasts, going naked, both men and women, and subsisting on wild roots, of which there is an abundance; and particularly on a fruit which they call pirbaex, resembling dates, and which roasted, taste very well.

The capital of the Province, Santiago, has a hot and moist temperature, the vicinity abounding in maize, plaintains, yucas, and cattle, and particularly in swine. The natives spin cotton, and dye it in a durable purple by the juice of a snail, found on the sea-coast; and in this article, as well as in some gold which they extract from the mines, does this city carry on a trade with Panama, the capital of the kingdom, and with Guatemala, where both the one and the other article are highly esteemed. This city has a beautiful hospital (an interesting fact to fillibusters in a fever country) built at the instance of the inhabitants and of the Bishop of Panama, who made on that subject various representations to the King."

The foregoing geographical information and description is furnished gratis to the "provisional government already organized for the conquest of Veragua," unless the Government will please send me to Panama a chunk of Veragua goid—where ALONSO says "it is highly esteemed."

TRUCE BETWEEN THE EMPEROR SOULOUQUE AND THE DOMINICANS—OFFICIAL ANNOUNCEMENT—THREE FRENCH SAILORS RESCUED—COMMERCIAL AFFAIRS.

Advices from Hayti to the 4th of April are received. Hostilities are suspended between SOULOUQUE and the Dominicans, and the Moniteur Haitien of March 28 thus announces the fact:

"The Minister of Foreign Affairs, by his dispatch bearing date the 19th of February, announces to the Charge d'Affaires of France, and to Her Britannic Majesty's Consul, that, in compliance with their request, His Majesty the Emperor grants a truce to the inhabitants of the Eastern Department, to extend from February 14th of the present year to the same date in the year 1859. In consequence, orders have been immediately dispatched for the cessation of hostilities along the lines occupied by the posts and garrisons of the imperial government.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs, by his dispatch of March 19, announces also to the representative of France and England, that His Majesty permits the Dominicans to travel freely, and attend to all kinds of business, civil and commercial, in every part of the Empire."

Lieutenant-General GUERRIER DE PROPHETE, Count DE TERRIER ROUDZ, nominated Minister of the Interior by order of the Emperor, had arrived at the Capital, and entered upon his official duties on the 17th of March.

The Moniteur of March 21 says:

"On Sunday, March 8, a Haytian boat, at the distance of eight leagues from this port, picked up three sailors of the French ship Marie Felicite, who had been blown away in one of the ship's boats in a gale. After being tossed about at sea for several days, without the hope of reaching any port, and just as they were on the point of perishing of hunger, they were providentially rescued by a Haytian fishing boat, manned by two men. This fact coming to the knowledge of the Emperor, he sent for the two fishermen and publicly thanked them."

Port-au-Prince is well supplied with breadstuffs, and a general rise in most articles is noticeable. In Coffees, the receipts are 3,379 bags, which have found buyers at $135@$138. Doubloons are quoted at $246 @$248, and Exchange on Europe at $238@$240.

At Jacmel, two American vessels, the Agate and Golden Gate, of Boston, had arrived during the week ending March 31, with full cargoes. The place is well supplied with breadstuffs, which have slightly risen in price. Coffee is quoted at $116@$118, and Doubloons at $252.

The Religious Press upon Rev. Dr. Bellows' Address on the Theatre.

From the Christian Intelligencer.

UNITARIANISM AND THE THEATRE.

Should we state that a distinguished clergyman of this City had recently made a speech in favor of dissipation, licentiousness, and general popular demoralization, we would probably be thought by many guilty of slander; and yet we do not see how the advocacy of theatres by a noted Unitarian divine can, in effect, be regarded as anything else than an attempt to recommend a form of amusement which, in all times, and in all lands, has uniformly proved detrimental to morals and inimical to virtue. For actors, as a class, we have no words of unkindness. Many of them have been eminent for private moral worth, and more might be, in spite of their profession. Nor will we do so much injustice to Dr. BELLOWS as even to intimate that he would favor the attendant vices of theatrical attainments. He, doubtless, wishes a drama so free from taint, that he and other clergymen might occasionally visit it, and, probably, take part in its performance. But whatever his ideal drama may or may not be, his speech is interpreted as a defence of the theatre as it now is.

The papers that pander most to the worst passions of the populace are jubilant in praise of the Unitarian smile demitted from the benignant face of the reverend patron of theatricals, and correspondingly violent in their abuse of that Puritanic fanaticism that blindly refuses to aid theatres in promoting drunkenness, profligacy and impurity. The actors have found themselves included in the commiserating sympathies of the "All-Souls" pastor, and they seem to be having a pretty good time of it together. But as one swallow does not make a Summer, it may be well to obtrude a warning word upon the reluctant ears of those who have undertaken to persuade the public that clergymen all should make haste to follow the satisfactory performance of Dr. BELLOWS, and leap into the pit with him, to encore half-naked artists and profane jesters, and mimic-mockers of virtue and piety. We have not the slightest expectation of seeing a very general competition among clergymen for a share in that bubble of notoriety in which the "All-Souls" luminary is now swimming alone. Nor do we think that any considerable portion of the Christian community will be drawn into any fervent admiration of these schools of vice which have now put themselves under the wing of the Unitarian Apollos. If he wants to go to the theatre, they must allow him the quiet indulgence of his tastes; but so long as thousands of young men, and as many women, are annually initiated into courses of vice and subsequent ruin through the voluptuous enchantments and corrupting accessories of our theatres, there will be a deep conviction among thoughtful people that a clergyman ought not to allow himself to become a decoy for those moral slaughter-houses.

The most significant feature of Dr. BELLOWS' position is the incidental exhibition it affords of the nature and genius of Unitarianism. His speech shows what his notions of religion are. It is a tasteful culture of art, of the softer sciences, and a gentle sentimentality, floating along azure skies, borne by zephyrs, and wafted on by pleasure. How strange that a religion so ungreasable to human nature should be so slow in gaining its confidence!

From the New-York Observer.

DR. BELLOWS ON THEATRES.

Rev. Dr. BELLOWS delivered a lecture on Tuesday evening at the Academy of Music, in defence of the theatre as a public amusement. The novelty of the thing, the excitement produced by the extraordinary course of the speaker, the notices in the papers, the posters on the walls, it was presumed would draw a crowded house. To the disappointment and chagrin of those concerned, not more than twelve hundred people assembled. Mr. BRADY introduced the distinguished orator of the occasion, "Mr. BELLOWS." He was surrounded upon the stage by several of the well-known actors and actresses, who had come to honor their clerical champion.

Dr. BELLOWS spoke two hours and a half. His argument was that amusement is a necessity and duty of life: the theatre affords the highest and best amusement: it has become corrupt because the church has frowned upon it: if religious people would attend they would reform it, and make it what it should be.

His censures upon the church, the clergy, and "tightly-laced Christians," were severe, and his hits at them, were received with great applause. His gentle rebukes of the stage were for the most part received in grim silence. The audience relished keenly all that was bad, they rarely applauded anything good. It was the saddest moral spectacle we ever looked on: a professed minister of morals, pandering to the diseased appetites of the play-going public; ridiculing and denouncing Christians; receiving applause with greediness from the hands of those who hate the Gospel, and spending his strength in exhorting people to go to the devil's house. The speaker's logic was sophistry, several of his premises absurdly false, his conclusions forced, and the moral effect shocking to the Christian heart.

If we find time, we shall support these charges by reference to passages of the lecture, next week.

From the New-York Evangelist.

DR. BELLOWS' ATTEMPT TO REFORM THE THEATRE.

Dr. BELLOWS seems to think that he should become a mark for all sorts of unkind reflections on the part of the religious press. We cannot insure him exemption from such attacks. In some quarters doubtless his expectations will be realized. A minister of the Gospel defending the Theater, is a novel spectacle, and for those who like an object for their ridicule, is high game not to be overlooked. He may expect many sharp shots at the clergyman whose love of vanity and folly is so inveterate that it cannot be restrained even by the decencies of his sacred profession!

But whatever treatment he may receive from others, he will receive none from us but perfect courtesy and respect. We know him too well to believe that he is actuated in the expression of his opinions by a love of singularity or a desire of attracting attention. He is above all that. However erratic his notions, we give him full credit for his sincerity, and even for more, for uncommon boldness in the expression of unpopular opinions. On his part, we trust he will do us, and the religious public generally, the justice to believe that our hostility to the Theater does not proceed from bigotry or narrowness of mind. It is not merely dark-browed priests and Puritans who have declaimed against it. The most eloquent condemnation of the Drama ever written was by an infidel and a Freethinker. When it was proposed to establish a theatre at Geneva, JEAN JACQUES ROUSSEAU protested against the attempt, as tending to corrupt the simplicity and morals of the Swiss Republic. At this day the most complete exhibition to be found in the world, of the Theatre, is in Paris; and there the keenest observers, those, too, who have no sanctimonious cant, and who are soured by no gloomy fanaticism, and biassed by no religious conviction, tell us that the exhibition of vice on the stage tends to vice in the streets and in the saloons. The acting of tragedies, in which a wild career ends with suicide, familiarizes the mind with this ready cure of "all the ills that flesh is heir to," and leads to many a dark deed of self-murder.

These facts argue against theatrical representations from their natural and unavoidable influence. But if we consider the actual state of the theatre, the argument is much stronger. At present our theatres are not only associated with vice, but live by it, and can hardly be supported without it. And we are afraid the miracle of a pure theatre is not very likely soon to be witnessed. The project of purifying the drama is not new. Social reformers have often dreamed of its regeneration, but have at last given it up as hopeless. Nor can we believe that Dr. BELLOWS will be more successful in an undertaking, which some of the wisest and best men have attempted in vain, and have at last abandoned in despair.

One of Dr. Bellows' Mistakes.

SOUTHPORT, Conn., Thursday, April 30, 1857.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

The following sentence presents the strongest point made or essayed in behalf of theatrical amusements, in Dr. BELLOWS' apology of two hours and a half:

"It is a terrible fact that the first hundred years of Puritanism in New-England was marked alike by ascetic public manners and the prevalence of vices almost unheard of in our free and more indulgent society; and it is even now asserted that the soberest of our sister States contributes more than any other State in the Union to the sad catalogue of female frailty. [Sensation and applause.]"

It would be idle to point out to reflecting readers, for whom these remarks are designed, the sheer fallacy of the argument attempted in the utterly incongruous, wholly contradictory assertions of that oracular sentence. But it presents almost the only attempt of Dr. B. to illustrate his argument by particular, pertinent facts. And what if, at last, the most pointed of his illustrations should prove utterly fallacious, as well in what it omits as in what it asserts?

It may be safely presumed that "the soberest of our sister States," so equivocally characterized by the assertion to which Dr. B. gives currency and credit, is the State which, for whatever reasons, first attempted to suppress intemperance by prohibitory laws extremely stringent. But whether the recent repudiation of those laws, through some reaction of public sentiment in that State, should deprive it of Dr. B.'s equivocal commendation as "the soberest," and yet according to the demands of his argument, the frailest "of our sister States," it is not necessary to inquire here. Back of that question, and was ly more important, in reference to the subject more immediately under discussion, there is another which he entirely omits from the frame-work of his argument, and evidently ignores in his very thoughts, with a truly refreshing innocence as to the most influential causes of female frailty. It is this. Have not those who, like him, desire and labor to do away with what they pronounce hurtful prejudices of Puritanism against such public amusements as the theatre, the circus, the opera, promiscuous dancing of men and women, &c., been far more successful in the very States to which he refers than in any other part of New England, with the possible exception of the City of Boston, concerning which he ventures upon yet another equivocal commendation, where he says, upon the assurance of "Christian g

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

"Equal to anything of Thackeray's."
OUT AT LAST.
THIS DAY PUBLISHED:
THE GREAT LONDON NOVEL,
(From Early Sheets,) KNAVES AND FOOLS;
OR,
FRIENDS OF BOHEMIA.
A Satirical Novel of London Life.
By
EDWARD M. WHITTY.
(The Stranger in Parliament.)
12mo, handsomely bound in cloth. Illustrated. 430 pp.
Price $1 25.

From the London Athenæum.

Bohemia, as we suppose every one is aware is a vast word for a section of London—the part inhabited by clever fellows with much reputation, and pretty women with very little; by the classes who are reputed to "live by their wits"—journalists and politicians, artists and dancers. Mr. Whitty's story moves in this region, and takes its colors. What the story is we shall not hint, except to say that it is full of fragmentary, and dramatic enough for Alexandre Dumas.

QUAINTNESS, SATIRE AND AMUSEMENT.

CONTENTS:

It's Good to be Merry and Wise, &c; Forced Orange Blossoms; A Wedding Ring too Small; The Faster you Eat the Peach the Sooner you Come to the Stone; Lares in Flannel; Lake Scenery; Dinner Discourse; Treasure Trove; Weak Sons and Strong Fathers; Butterfly Life; Dinner and Dessert; London Hermits; Philosophic Gossip; Idle Busybodies; Purple Glasses in Bohemia; The Law of Divorce; Night; Morning; A Mad Story; A True-Love Story; Marriage Against the Mode; Contrasts in Toilets; Bohemian Language; A Stranger in Parliament; A Widowed Life; Bachelor Life; Farts and Futilities; Morning and Evening Calls; Brothers; Back Streets in Bohemia; Man Hunting; The Cabman's Quarrel; Carriages; Full Dress; Bohemian Indulgence; Incoherent; Near the Clouds; Judge and Prisoner on Trial; The Moral of a Story; Anti-Bohemia; Concluding: After Rasselas.

Extract from a
NOTICE OF THE AUTHOR,
By DR SHELTON MACKENZIE,
In the New-York Tribune.

"The manner in which Mr. Whitty strips Pretence is admirable. He is now Editor of the Northern Whig, the leading Liberal journal in the North of Ireland. Mr. Whitty has already written many novelettes anonymously in various magazines, and has experience, therefore, in what many novelists are wanting—the conduct of a story. This, his first complete work, is of the most brilliant character, combining a racy exposé of certain literary and artistic cliques in London together with a story and plot which, for qualintness and interest, has been compared to the

CHRISTIE JOHNSTONE AND PEG WOFFINGTON or CHARLES READ."

The demand for this famous production having already exhausted the first edition, the Publishers are compelled to announce that orders received after this date will be filled from the

which is now in press.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

By the arrival at this port, yesterday, of the steamship Africa, we receive one week's later news from Europe. Several features of interest are presented. On the 14th ult., Queen Victoria was safely delivered of a Princess, making the ninth child to which she has given birth. Politicians in England were taking a breathing spell after the elections, and in lieu thereof, we have accounts of great festivities in Liverpool, where the corner stone of a new Free Library, to be built at the sole expense of Mr. Brown, M. P., has been laid. A grand banquet was given to Mr. Brown, and from among eloquent speeches delivered on the occasion, we select and publish that of Mr. Hawthorne as one that will be most interesting to our readers.

Arrests continue to be made in Paris, but there is no very reliable authority for crediting the reports that formidable conspiracies exist to assassinate the Emperor. Secret societies never disappear in France, and the present "conspiracies" do not seem to be of a worse character.

The Neufchatel question is terribly tedious. The Conferences at Paris are unable to arrange the details of a settlement. France and England, it is said, will, for themselves, recognize the Independence of Neufchatel, if the States interested do not soon adjust the dispute.

British and French negotiators are hard at work to prevent a quarrel between Mexico and Spain. They have some hopes of success, for they are exciting Spanish fears by representations that a plan exists in the United States to make a diversion on Cuba directly the war breaks out.

Lady Franklin has determined to fit out another Arctic expedition. The London Times suggests that she should be presented by the English public with the Resolute, for the execution of the enterprise.

We have received some very interesting items of news in connection with the war in China. It is understood that Lord Elgin, the British Commissioner, is instructed to insist on the opening of nine ports to Europeans, instead of five; to demand that Great Britain be placed on an equality with Russia, and be allowed to establish a diplomatic mission at Pekin; that British vessels in distress be allowed to put into any port along the coast; and that the establishment of a British military force be permitted in all towns in which a Consular agent will reside. A French journal states that the Chinese are making extensive defensive preparations. France and England will coöperate actively in the war, and Portugal is also sending out an expedition to strengthen her power at Macao.

Our Panama correspondent, in a letter which we publish this morning, gives some particulars concerning a new fillibustering expedition that has been set on foot in New-Orleans for the invasion of the province of Veragua, in the Republic of New-Granada. It does not appear, however, that this enterprise offers a very inviting field, the chances of success being slender. Perhaps the geographical and other information furnished by our correspondent may be serviceable to the fillibusters whose attention is turned towards this new Eldorado.

By advices from Hayti, of April 4, we learn that a truce of two years has been concluded between the Emperor Soulouque and the Dominicans. The Moniteur Haytien officially announces this temporary cessation of hostilities.

We publish Hon. David Wilmot's letter accepting the Republican nomination for Governor of Pennsylvania. It is long and devoted entirely to a statement and argument of the national issue between the friends of free labor and the movement for the extension of Slavery into Free Territory of the United States. The Kansas question is rehearsed and the duty of Pennsylvania to take a stand in favor of freedom is strongly urged. A paragraph towards the close of the letter indicates a willingness to favor the views and receive the votes of the American Party. The letter is important as the first indication of the nature of the contest in the approaching State elections.

An order was adopted, in January last, by the Board of Directors of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, for sealing the doors of the merchandise cars, and requiring the conductors of such sealed cars to give a receipt for them when taken from their point of departure, the agent at the destination in return receipting to the conductor. To this arrangement the conductors objected, contending that it was putting upon them too great a responsibility; and since Monday last, when the new order went into operation, a trouble has been rapidly brewing, which yesterday resulted in a general strike of the conductors along the road. Violent proceedings were resorted to by them, and attacks were made upon the trains. Finally the riders were fired upon, and two of them were wounded. The disturbance is not yet at an end.

A vote was taken in Massachusetts, yesterday, on the proposed amendments of the Constitution, providing that voters must know how to read and write, and redistricting the State for Senators and Representatives. The vote was very small, but in favor of the adoption of the amendments.

The shower of motions, counter-motions, injunctions, dissolutions, quo warrantos, mandamuses and appeals, which has signalised the advent to power, or appointment rather, (for the power is the question in dispute,) of the new Police Commissioners, was continued yesterday with undiminished force. Mr. O'Conor, after a sort of protest from the counsel for the Commissioners, obtained from Judge Roosevelt an order denying the motion for a mandamus against Judge Russell, pro forma, and then obtained from the same justice an order for a writ of mandamus returnable at a general term. The case before Judge Peabody on the motion for the dissolution of the injunction was concluded. Mr. D. Dudley Field spoke for the Commissioners, claiming that the injunction ought to be dissolved on two grounds: 1st, Because of the inability of the Court to grant it, and 2d, Because the law in question was constitutional. He, however, advanced no argument not contained in his points, which have been already published. Judge Peabody granted another injunction restraining the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty from expending any of the City funds in prosecuting actions against the new Commissioners. The precaution seems to have been needless, because the Comptroller declares there are no funds to spend.

The new City Charter, which became effective yesterday, abolishes two departments and five bureaus, and divides their respective duties among others. The Departments abolished are the Department of Repairs and Supplies, and that of Streets and Lamps. Mr. Ebling is said to have turned over his books and appurtenances to the City Inspector, with admirable composure of countenance. Mr. Selah and his heads of bureaus are not yet quite resigned to their fate. They talk of resisting to the last. The Comptroller has stopped their pay.

"Moving" went on as largely, yesterday, as is usually the case upon the first of May. At noon the City was in a perfect chaos. By midnight all was quiet again, and more men than usually are at that hour were in their own—generally their new houses.

An interesting case was decided, yesterday, by the Marine Court, involving the liability of the Commissioners of Emigration for baggage lost at Castle Garden. The Court held that where baggage was received and checked by them there, they must see to its safe keeping.

The case of the officers arrested on board the alleged steamer Merchant, was to have been heard yesterday before Commissioner Morton but it was postponed to Thursday next, because the witnesses were before the Grand Jury.

The time for a hearing in the case of Captain Van Vechten, and the others, arrested with the brig Ellen, on Thursday, is not yet named.

Richard M. Blatchford, Edwin D. Morgan, Henry Evesson, Robert Emmet, and Gustavus A. Conover, the Commissioners appointed under the New City Hall Act, were sworn in yesterday by Judge Clerke, at Special Term.

The Chinese War and the British Ultimatum.

The news which we publish elsewhere establishes, beyond a peradventure, that in despite of Lord Palmerston's assertions, and the frequent rumors that the Emperor of China discountenanced the acts of Commissioner Yeh, the hostilities at Canton form no longer a local dispute, but have swelled into the importance of a national war. We are informed by a Paris journal that the Chinese are making extensive preparations for defence, and all our information goes to show that they intend to offer a stubborn resistance. By last accounts the British squadron assembled at Hong Kong, only waited for reinforcements to commence operations. These reinforcements are being hurried forward with every possible speed. In the approaching war, France, and probably Portugal, who sends out an expedition to strengthen her power at Macao, will actively coöperate with England, and there is every probability that the contest will be short and the result decisive. For though the Chinese are probably inflated with their apparent successes at Canton, and, having profited by time and experience, are better able to oppose an invasion now than they were during the last war, yet, on the other hand, their enemy, on this occasion, with its swarming fleet of gun-boats of light draft, will be altogether too powerful for John Chinaman to resist with any hopes of success.

According to the accounts brought by the Africa, it appears that Lord Elgin has been instructed to insist upon nine ports being opened to Europeans instead of five. The British further demand that they be placed on an equality with Russia, and be allowed a diplomatic mission at Pekin; that their trading vessels, when in distress, have the privilege of putting into any place along the coast, and that the establishment of a military force be permitted in all the towns in which a Consul or agent resides. Such, in substance, are the leading features of the new treaty about to be wrested from the Emperor of China at the sword's point. Minor details are left to the judgment of the English Commissioner.

These demands, under the circumstances, are eminently right and proper. The Chinese have so often violated existing treaties and the laws of Nations, that no other but the severest measures will secure protection for foreign commerce and foreign residents within the empire. Beyond this—to take a common-sense view of the subject—we do not believe that the designs of the British extend. An idea, indulged in by a city cotemporary, that they seek to divide the Chinese Dominions and appropriate a portion to themselves, is too absurd to entertain for a moment. That they will secure all the Commercial privileges they can is very probable, but we see no reason to believe that Europe and America will not be able to secure precisely the same.

Some of our London cotemporaries express deep mortification that the United States will not coöperate with France and England in their demands upon China. Our cotemporaries write under a mistaken notion of fact. The United States are with England and France so far as it is at all proper that they should be, as is sufficiently shown by the fact that a Minister Plenipotentiary has been appointed for the express purpose of conducting the fresh negotiations which recent occurrences have made necessary in China. It is not probable that we shall take any part in the pending war, nor is it easy to see what pretext we could readily find for doing so. But we have no doubt that the moral weight of this country will be given to the endeavor to secure a better basis than that which now exists for the commercial intercourse between the Chinese Empire and the Western World.

Bungling Diplomatists.

We concede much to the venerable imbecility of all diplomacy in raising the question at issue between our own Government and that of New-Granada, to the rank of a "difficulty." To speak of it as a serious difficulty, or to hint the possibility of its resulting in a war, would be to outrage common sense, and to do the administration of Mr. Buchanan the gross injustice of supposing it either unable to comprehend the simplest questions of international policy, or unwilling to deal justly with a neighboring State against which no pretence of national grievance has been advanced.

The facts at issue between the two Governments are simply two in number. In the first place we have to find out whether the attack upon the passengers on the Panama Railway, which resulted in so dreadful a massacre, and so serious a loss of property, was a war not provoked by the passengers themselves; and in the second place we have to discover how far the New-Granadian Government, whether by supineness, or by direct complicity, has made itself responsible to us for the outrages then committed. We say these facts have to be ascertained—for it is not possible that such a report as was rendered by M. Corwine, can have been quietly accepted by our Government as the basis of all negotiation on the subject.

The rejection of the treaty proposed by Mr. Morse to the Government of New-Granada is neither an outrage nor an affront; and there is no more reason for supposing that we shall fall upon New-Granada, with sword and gun, for refusing to accept certain particular propositions therein embodied, than there is for imagining that Great Britain will answer our rejection of the Dallas-Clarendon Treaty by an immediate confiscation of all American property in England, and a sudden blockade of all our Atlantic ports.

The news from New-Granada proves only two things—that the people of that State are in a very bad temper, and that the American Ministers dispatched to them by President Pierce have done their best to bring about this undesirable result. The pointed moral of the present position is simply identical with that which we drew the other day from a general consideration of our diplomatic service and its actual condition. Consider the case. We have a matter of business to settle with a small but sensitive Spanish-American State—a matter of business which involves considerations very likely to inflame the passions and excite the jealousies of a race accustomed for some time to look upon ourselves as a dangerous and domineering people, perfectly disposed to devour all the Republics of Spanish-America on the first convenient opportunity. It is of great importance to the commerce of the country that this matter should be amicably arranged at the earliest practicable moment; and it is perfectly well understood that in no event are we likely to be permitted to take the thing absolutely into our own hands without such a war as no man in his senses dreams of inciting. What does our sagacious Chief Magistrate—our nominal "Executive"—in these premises? He selects and sends out upon this important mission a man absolutely committed to the extremest notions and the most ridiculous projects of that party in the United States which has done the most to worry all the Spanish race of the New World into a fever of doubt, and fear, and rage—a thorough-paced fillibuster, whose speech is as loose as his notions are lax, and who can no more suppress his appetite for fat slave lands than he can control his hankerings after the applause of Buncombe and the praise of all the pot-houses. This individual goes armed, it would appear, with authority to propose to New-Granada that she should let us take care of her territory, set up a stout sentry-box at either gate of her domain, and generally prepare her, after the accommodating manner of the boa-constrictor, for eventual and easy deglutition. The real and respectable objects of the mission are thrown into the shade by these extraordinary propositions, and when these are rejected, as any man in his senses must have known they would be, our astute diplomatist and his domestic colleagues are ready to cry havoc, and let slip the dogs of war!

Now we refuse to believe that Mr. Buchanan means to indorse the conduct of this precious negotiator. We refuse to believe that he intends to accept the odium of Mr. Pierce's imbecile proceedings in this instance, and we found our refusal to believe this of him on the good sense and independence which he has shown in other cases of equal or greater importance. And we hope most sincerely that, in the appointment of a new Commissioner to adjust this "difficulty," he will give the country earnest of his determination to make the diplomatic service of the United States almost as respectable for efficiency, honesty and common sense, as the agency of a well-established express company, or the staff of a country bank.

The National Hotel Mystery.

It is full time that the mystery of the National Hotel disease should be made the subject of judicial investigation. No proved atrocity could be so alarming as the shrugs and insinuendoes flying like poisoned arrows through the dark; no false respect for individual interests can longer be permitted to suppress the inquiries that have now become essential to public tranquillity, the national honor, and, perhaps, the security of the life of our Executive. Through the paper that has always been regarded as his own home organ, Mr. Buchanan confesses his suspicion of foul play; and after a confirmation of this kind from the quarter least likely to exaggerate such a doubt, our public rumors have intensified into positive charges, and the dark cloud that rested over Washington has taken the precise outline and tangibility of a vast conspiracy to murder.

"There are certain coincidences connected with this subject," says the Pennsylvanian, "which are suggestive of the most horrible suspicions; but for the honor of human nature we hope they may be unfounded." And it then goes on, in its guarded and semi-official way to recite "coincidences" that have never yet received the requisite attention. A "hope" is, by no means, the right weapon for the defence of "the honor of human nature;" and hopes of the kind here faltered, by suggesting enormities beyond the reach of our experience, only serve to throw a blacker doubt over the dark records of proved and attested depravity.

The "coincidences" are indeed extremely curious, and, whether fortuitous or criminal, present a chain of circumstantial evidence that could have been left unfollowed in no other city of the civilized world save Washington alone. The air of our federal capital seems to emasculate the moral nerves; and crimes have been committed there, and quietly hushed up, or triflingly disposed of, that would have raised a thunder-storm if transpiring in any less exalted region.

But now for the coincidences to which, through his own home organ, our Executive seems anxious to direct attention. Mr. Buchanan arrived at the National Hotel, Washington, on the 25th of last January. Next day the first case appeared of a new and strange disorder—the symptoms, violent purging, inflammation of the larger intestines and a swollen tongue; giving all the indications of some poison of a mineral nature. Guest after guest was taken down with precisely similar symptoms; and within two days thirty-five of the inmates were so ill as to be confined to bed, and numbers—the President-elect amongst them—were taken dangerously sick, either previous to, or immediately after leaving Washington.

From the date of Mr. Buchanan's departure for Wheatland—where he arrived greatly altered and enfeebled—not one single new case of the disease occurred until after his return to the hotel on the 2d of March: but on the day of the Inauguration, this strange disorder reappeared with aggravated virulence and a wider sweep—seven hundred guests or upwards being attacked together, and of these some twenty-five or thirty have since died of its lingering and recurring agonies. The remedies, where successfully employed, were for the most part of the nature of mineral antidotes; and where the disease was treated as one of miasmatic origin, we find the sufferings more protracted and the mortal issue involved in greater doubt.

It has been publicly stated in various reputable papers, and the statement remains uncontradicted to this hour, that "the President received a letter warning him not to partake of food at the National. If so," adds the Albany Argus, "here is evidence of a crime, and perhaps a clue to its discovery. Why is it not pursued?"

The parallel of the English gunpowder-plot, devised by Catesby and the Jesuits, is here suggested; and the warning said to be received by Mr. Buchanan, exactly coincides with the letter sent to Lord Monteagle, ten days before the meeting of Parliament in the houses undermined by Fawkes.

But is not this letter a fabrication designed to round off a parallel that is otherwise incomplete? Can it be possible that the Chief Magistrate should have received such a letter and yet—even after its dreadful confirmation—persist in taking no legal notice of the monstrous conspiracy to which it might serve as a clue? We would dismiss the supposition as incredible, were it not for the strong language used ("the symptoms uniformly indicating poison") in the paper which, of all others, should be most conversant with Mr. Buchanan's opinion. The Pennsylvanian, while giving its official indorsement to the "horrible suspicions," has not one word to say about the letter; and silence in a case of this kind, is, at least, as significant as words.

The disease broke out on Mr. Buchanan's first visit: the disease disappeared on Mr. Buchanan's departure; the disease returned again with Mr. Buchanan, as if it were a shadow that dogged his heels; and Mr. Buchanan is said to have received a letter announcing that danger lay in wait for him at the very house where a disease, from which he has not yet recovered—from which he may never recover—overtook and pulled him down. The disease was confined, not only to one house in a crowded city, but to such of the frequenters of that house as partook of food within its walls: the disease presented the same diagnostics in every case, whereas all other epidemics that we know of are modified in different cases by the physical idiosyncracies of the individuals attacked; the disease presented all the symptoms usually resultant in cases of mineral poisoning, and its victims, though scattered to the four climates of the Union, undergo frequent and wasting relapses—a thing not consonant with our experience of miasmatic exhalations, but tending directly to prove that the poison, of whatever kind, is carried in them and has laid fast hold of their systems.

So much for the "coincidences," which we put forward without deducing any theory.

The New City Charter.

Some of the office-holders under the old Charter are not inclined to comply with the provisions of the new, which went into effect yesterday, and abolished their offices. Two Departments and five Bureaus of the City Government become obsolete under the new Charter, as follows:

Commissioner of Repairs and Supplies.
Commissioner of Streets and Lamps.
Superintendent of Roads.
Superintendent of Streets.
Superintendent of Pavements.
Superintendent of Lamps and Gas.
Superintendent of Repairs to Public Buildings.

THE NEW OFFICERS ONLY TO BE PAID.

Comptroller Flagg, on Thursday, sent the following circular to those whose offices are abolished:

FINANCE DEPARTMENT, COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
(No. 5, Hall of Records,)
NEW-YORK, April 2, 1857.

Sir—You are hereby notified to discontinue all work for the Corporation after this date, as no further payments can be made for work done under you after April 30, 1857.

Yours respectfully,
A. C. Flagg, Comptroller.

The Commissioner of Repairs and Supplies, with Heads of Bureaus in his Department are loth to part with their places. They have determined to resist the Charter to the last. This department is merged into those of the Croton Acqueduct and the Street Commissioner, and should such course become necessary, they will take legal steps to compel Mr. Selah & Co., to transfer to them the books and papers. Of the necessity, however, there is great doubt, for without the salaries the work in the Department of Repairs and Supplies will soon be discontinued, and the Comptroller says as the provisions of the Charter are constitutional, he will not pay a cent except to the proper officers.

EBLING'S END—HIS DEPARTMENT.

Yesterday afternoon Mr. Ebling turned over his Department promptly to that of the City Inspector, who immediately entered upon its duties.

The Health Officers of the several Wards, with the exception of the Seventh, Twelfth, and part of the Twenty-Second, have reported to him the number of houses in their several wards before which ashes and garbage of all sorts is habitually thrown into the streets, as follows,

Wards.	Houses.	Wards.	Houses.	Wards.	Houses.
1	579	9	66	17	158
2	102	10	129	18	235
3	92	11	742	19	245
4	100	13	151	20	767
5	146	14	628	21	537
6	242	15	332	22	31
8	813	16	393
Total					6,635

Many of these houses are occupied by thirty or forty families, but taking as an average five families in a house, it shows that over 30,000 people are liable to arrest for this nuisance, yet not one has been taken into custody. The Police say that it is of no use to make arrests, for the magistrates will not punish The City Inspector says that this state of things shall continue no longer. He will instruct the Police to make the arrests, and if the magistrates refuse to punish he will take the case before the Grand Jury.

Mr. Morton says he is determined to render every facility in his power to the street contractors, and protect them in their rights—though their contracts still remain unconfirmed by the Common Council—so long as they perform their duties. The contractors may suffer pecuniarily, because the Corporation omits to have the ashes and garbage removed. The street mud and manure pay the street cleaners 25 cents per load, but if ashes and "refuse" become mixed with it, the cost to them to remove it is from 6 to 8 cents per load.

Mr. Morton hopes to make a radical reform in the conduct of the markets, and make them pay their expenses, if not yield a revenue to the City. At present there is no system at all in their management. Some holders of stalls pay a heavy rent while others pay a mere nominal sum. He proposes to affix to each stall a regular rent, and to prevent its transfer by the lessee to other parties, by which process the City has been greatly swindled in times past. The markets are also to be thoroughly renovated. If the City Inspector does all that he has said he will do, the thanks of all good citizens will be his.

CITY FINANCES—PAYMENTS ON STOCKS AND BONDS.

Yesterday was the day for those holding City Stock and Bonds to draw their interest money, and during business hours the Shoe and Leather Dealers' Bank was crowded. The amount paid by the City Chamberlain was $201,280 22. The total of Stock and Bonds issued by the City, upon which the Corporation is now paying interest, is $16,662,000. With the exception of $779,600, only five per cent is paid. The remainder is at six per cent. On the Revenue Bonds that are issuing now seven per cent, is promised.

From the 15th of April down to the present time, the City Chamberlain has received $1,840,350 on the new revenue bonds. He will continue to dispose of them until about the middle of July, unless the amount of money required shall have been previously obtained. With the money now on hand he is paying the salaries of officers and some of the City's old debts.

FROM WASHINGTON.

Proposed Reform in the Matter of Public Printing—Condition of the Treasury, &c.

Special Dispatch to the N. Y. Daily Times.

Washington, Friday, May 1.

The States, Major Heiss' new paper, proposes a reformation in the present corrupt system of disposing of the Public Printing. A National Convention of the Democratic Journalists is to be called, to suggest a fairer mode of action. The cost of the public printing has risen in a few years from $300,000 to $1,500,000 per annum—a monstrous corruption and fraud.

☞ There was a fight in the Post-Office Department to-day. Wharton, an ex-clerk, whipped Spencer, a clerk. No pistols were used. X. Y. Z.

[FROM OUR REGULAR TELEGRAPHIC REPORTER.]

Washington, Friday, May 1.

There are twenty-three and a quarter millions of dollars in the Treasury subject to draft. Three and a half millions of this amount is on deposit at Boston, nearly the same amount in New Orleans, and upwards of ten millions in New-York. Two millions of the last are to be transferred.

The End of the Chaplin Slave Case—The First Comptrollership.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

Washington, Thursday, April 30.

The end of Mr. Chaplin's attempt to abduct slaves from this city was reached yesterday, after the lapse of several years.

This affair made some noise at the time. Chaplin was released upon bail given here by David A. Hall, Selby Parker, and Blanchard, printer of the National Era, in the sum of $6,000. But Chaplin was subsequently arrested in Maryland, and was there released on bail in the sum of $20,000. To secure the bail in this city, the sum of $5,000 was placed in the hands of David A. Hall. But this sum was paid over by him for the purpose of meeting the demand for the sureties in Maryland. After the bail here had been forfeited, the abolition friends of Chaplin paid a portion of the amount and promised to raise the rest, but never did it. The government levied two or three years ago, on Blanchard's printing materials, and David A. Hall's lots, and Selby Parker's fancy goods store, for the balance due, but indulged them, from time to time, while they endeavored to induce Blanchard's friends to make good their promises. Recently, Mr. Selby Parker, a very worthy citizen, becoming embarrassed, made a deed of trust upon his stock in trade, in favor of his New-York creditors. A sale commenced, the day before yesterday, of his goods under this deed. But pending this, the United States Marshal stepped in, with his prior claim, under an unsatisfied execution, and swept off every thing for the government. The debt due was two thousand dollars, and the property sold for enough to cover this sum and the heavy expenses.

The Abolitionists must have lost some of their zeal in the cause, when they thus fail to redeem their most positive engagements, with men not of their party, and who are not as rich as they, but actually poorer.

Mr. Medill was introduced, to-day, by Mr. Whittlesey, as his successor in the office of First Comptroller. It is true that the President has expressed some concern at the interference of the Attorney-General with Mr. Whittlesey's decision on the Ramsey and Carmick case. He says, truly, that to the first Comptroller belongs absolutely, without appeal, the decision of the case. Mr. Whittlesey knows the extent of his legal authority: but, on the eve of his retirement from office, he did not choose to go into a fight with the Postmaster-General and the Attorney-General, on the subject. He has merely left for them and for his successor, "a little book to look upon." It is a perfect brief of the case, and his own construction of the law, and his opinion of the impropriety of the attempted interposition of the Attorney-General and the Postmaster-General. X. Y. Z.

Pennsylvania Legislature.

REPORT OF THE SENATE SELECT COMMITTEE ON THE DRED SCOTT CASE.

Harrisburg, Friday, May 1.

The majority of the Select Committee of the Senate on the resolutions in the Dred Scott case have made a lengthy and able report, accompanied with resolutions declaring that the opinion of the Supreme Court announces principles in palpable opposition to the judicial and legislative history of the Union, and in violation of the plain provisions of the Constitution of the United States; that the opinion, except on the question of jurisdiction, being delivered on a case over which the Court admitted it had no jurisdiction, may be justly regarded as obita dicta coram non judico, and inoperative as law; that the five judges who concurred in the same opinion made a wanton attack on the sovereignty of the Free States, and an impotent attempt to nullify the established laws of the country, and by extra-judicial action caused unnecessary excitement in the public mind in regard to the subject of Slavery, and thereby forfeited the confidence and respect due to their exalted station.

Strike of the Conductors on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad.

Baltimore, Friday, May 1.

The strike among the freight conductors on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, partook of a serious character yesterday. Several freight trains were stopped on the road last evening by a mob of about one hundred conductors, who were assembled at some distance from the city, and on meeting the cars, while in motion, they uncoupled the trains, carried off all the couplings, and drove the engineers and firemen into the woods. There was great excitement during the day all along the road. The strike was very general throughout the line of the road. Efforts are being made to induce the engineers to join the strikers. The Company has refused to compromise with the men, and will immediately pay them all off and employ new hands. The strike is in consequence of sealing the cars, which has given offence to the conductors.

LATER—THE RIOTERS FIRED UPON AND TWO OF THEM WOUNDED.

The strike on the Baltimore and Ohio Road resulted in a very serious riot this afternoon. Four freight trains were started out in charge of armed guards, in obedience to the proclamation of the Governor issued to-day. All the trains were mobbed near Ellicott's Mills by the rioters. Some thirty muskets were fired from the cars, and two of the rioters wounded. One train got through, but the others were uncoupled by the rioters and had to return to the city.

The Case of McKim.

Hollidaysburg, Friday, May 1.

A jury for the trial of McKim, for the murder of Norcross at Alloona, was obtained to day at noon, when the case was opened by District-Attorney Hammond on the part of the people.

From Boston.

VOTE IN FAVOR OF THE PROPOSED AMENDMENTS OF THE MASSACHUSETTS CONSTITUTION—MARINE DISASTER.

Boston, Friday, May 1.

The vote in the State, to-day, on the House Constitutional amendments is small, but they are all adopted by decisive majorities. Boston gave 800 majority for the reading and writing amendment, and 4,000 for those districting the State for Senators and Representatives. New-Bedford voted against the reading and writing amendment.

Arrived at New-Bedford, yesterday, ship John Gilpin, from Honolulu. Fell in with, on the evening of the 23d ult., schr. James T. Bertine, of New-York thirteen days from Boston for Philadelphia, leaking badly, and short of provisions. The schooner had been blown off by constant gales of wind, and had four feet of water in her hold when fallen in with. The captain and crew, six in number, were taken aboard the John Gilpin to New-Bedford.

Fire at Dunkirk.

Buffalo, Friday, May 1.

The Loder House at Dunkirk was burnt this morning. Loss, $30,000; insured $12,000. It was owned by John Hemphill, of Wilmington, Del.

Non-Arrival of the Caledonia.

Quebec, Friday, May 1.

The steamer Caledonia had not been signalled at the station on the River du Loup at 9 o'clock this morning. Weather clear and beautiful.

Stock of Pork at Louisville.

Louisville, Friday, May 1.

The stock of pork here is 15,000 barrels. At the same time last year it was 41,000.

Receipts of Flour and Grain at Oswego.

Oswego, Friday, May 1.

The Flour and Grain receipts at this port since the opening of navigation to May 1, are 20,800 barrels of Flour; 197,200 bushels of Wheat; 70,600 bushels of Rye, and 5,600 bushels of Barley.

THE PENNSYLVANIA ELECTION.

Hon. David Wilmot's Letter accepting the Nomination for Governor.

From the Philadelphia Daily Times.

Gentlemen: On my return home, after an absence of two weeks, I found your communication informing me of my nomination as a candidate for the office of Governor, by a Convention of the Freemen of Pennsylvania, opposed to the leading measures of the late and present national Administration, which assembled at the State Capitol on the 25th ultimo, together with a copy of the declaration of principles promulgated by that Convention.

I accept the position to which I am called by the unsolicited suffrage of the body whose organ you are, profoundly grateful for so distinguished a mark of the confidence of my fellow-citizens, yet painfully sensible of my inability properly to meet its responsible obligations.

The approaching election is one of no ordinary interest. Important questions of her State policy, affecting the public welfare and prosperity, are not alone involved in the issue presented. As one of the largest and most powerful of the sovereign States of our confederate Republic, the honor and interests of Pennsylvania are deeply concerned in the principles that animate our National Government. She cannot, with safety to our independence and the liberties of our people, be indifferent to the momentous questions of national import in progress of settlement—questions touching constitutional powers of the Federal Government, and vitally affecting the dignity and rights of free labor. Nor can she, without dishonor, withhold her protest against the wrongs inflicted upon her sons in a distant Territory under the license of Federal authority.

The dearest rights of freemen, secured by plain constitutional guarantees, are ruthlessly violated on the soil of our national domain. American citizens are made the victims of a tyranny unknown in the despotism of the Old World. The annals of civilized and Christian nations furnish no example of cruelty and outrage, on the part of a Government, towards its people, such as has been endured by the people of Kansas, unless they be found in persecutions of the Huguenots under Louis XIV., of France, and of the Protestants of the Netherlands, by the Duke of Alva, under Philip II., King of Spain. Indeed, the barbarities to which the people of Kansas have been subjected were of a character so inhuman as to provoke incredulity in the minds of a large portion of our citizens. Thousands have been deceived into the belief that, for partisan purposes, fictions were substituted for facts; although no facts in American history are better authenticated, than are the murders, robberies, arsons, and lawless rapacity inflicted upon the free settlers of Kansas. These outrages had for their object the subjugation of that Territory to the curse of slavery.

We speak of quiet being restored to Kansas, because armed bands of lawless men do not now infest her highways and plunder her people—because her towns are not sacked and the cabins of her settlers in flames. This peace is deceptive and treasonable. It will be broken the moment that the people of Kansas make a vigorous effort to recover their rights, of which they have been fraudulently and violently deprived. The purpose of her enslavement is insidiously pushed forward. A system of ingeniously devised fraud, kindred to that employed in the usurpation under which she now groans, is being carried out for the consummation of this great wrong. To this end also, the power of the Federal Government is barely prostituted. We are given words of fairness, but persistance in support of the wrong. Every appointee of the President in Kansas is an active coworker in the scheme of her enslavement.

Principles of eternal truth and justice, which lie at the foundation of a christian civilization, and upon which repose the rights of humanity, are deliberately assailed by the power that controls in our National Government. Those truths, declaratory of the fundamental and inalienable rights of man, contained in the great charter of our liberties, are condemned by our highest judicial authority as unmeaning and false.—The sanctuary of our Courts of Justice is closed against an entire race of men. The poor and down-trodden are not allowed to petition for a redress of their wrongs, those tribunals of human Government, that should most nearly represent the benificent attributes of the Creator and final Judge of all men.

In view of these incontestible facts—of the wrong perpetrated against the rights of American citizenship, and the dangers to which our liberties are exposed—thus presented in its true aspect—the contest before us assumes a dignity rarely given to human affairs; and imposes duties upon our citizens as high and solemn as ever appealed to the hearts and consciences of men. The question before us—from its demands there is no escape. Decide we must, either for the right or for the wrong. Sooner or later the verdict of this great Commonwealth must be pronounced on the issues forced upon the country by the advocates of human bondage. History will record that verdict of her undaring honor, or to her everlasting shame.

The repeal of the Missouri Restriction, and the attempt to force slavery upon Kansas by fraud and violence, precipitated upon the country a conflict between the antagonistic systems of free and servile labor. In the issue of this conflict, is involved the Democratic character of our institutions of government, and the independence, dignity and [illegible] the free white laboring man and his posterity.

Slavery is the deadly enemy of free labor. It cannot coexist on the same field of enterprise [illegible] labor will vindicate its right to Freedom, or [illegible] into dependence and dishonor. Free labor is [illegible] with intelligence and power. It stands out in the dignity of a true manhood. It sustains by its energies all the noble institutions of a refined and perfectly developed social life. It is the source of our prosperity and national greatness. Slavery is labor in ignorance and chains—a brutalized humanity, stimulated to industry by the lash of a master. It makes the laborer an article of merchandize, without pride and without hope. In the place of an intelligent citizen, ready to defend with his life the honor and [illegible] of his country, Slavery gives to the State an ignorant savage to be held in subjection. It endangers the social fabric by converting its great elements of strength into an implacable enmity.

Never, in the history of partisan warfare, were men more unjustly and perseveringly misrepresented than are the opponents of the extension of Slavery. This arises in part from the intolerant nature of Slavery and the weapons it is necessitated to employ, and partly from the fact, so omnipotent has the Slave Power become in our Government, that support of its every demand is made the single test of party fidelity, and the only road to official preferment. The citizen who dissents in terms of earnest and manly protest against whatever exactions Slavery makes, becomes thereby, in so far as the National Government can impose disabilities, almost as much an alien and outlaw as is the slave himself. If the freemen of the North consent to occupy such a subordinate position in the Government of their country, the spirit of manly independence will be crushed out in their posterity. Our sons will become a submissive and servile race, stripped of manhood and of self-respect. The slaveholder, proprietor of the soil and master of the Government, will dominate over them with scarcely less of arrogance and power than he rules over his hereditary bondmen. To this condition are the non-slaveholding whites of the South already reduced. They have to day little more power in the formation of public opinion and in the affairs of Government than has the slave. The same fate awaits our posterity if Slavery is allowed to monopolize the virgin soil of this continent. It is the inevitable retribution of Heaven on any people that have not the courage and integrity to maintain their rights.

It is a slander to say that the defenders of the rights of free labor seek the elevation of the black race to an equality with the white. They do not propose the emancipation of the slave, but leave that question, both as to time and the mode of accomplishment, with the States in which Slavery exists. They wish to deal with this great and embarrassing evil in a spirit of friendly forbearance towards those States; but they cannot carry their forbearance so far as to virtually become slaves themselves—so far as to surrender the soil and government of the nation into the hands of an aristocracy founded upon property in slaves.

Free white labor has rights in the soil superior to the pretensions of Slavery. The Slaveholding capitalist claims that his property being largely invested in slaves, will depreciate unless the field where he can employ it be enlarged. The white laborer, also, has a property in his labor, quite as sacred and as worthy of the care of the Government; and where is the field upon which he is to make that labor profitable to himself and family if Slavery shall monopolize the fertile and virgin plains of the West. Labor is degraded almost to the starving point in the densely populated countries of the old world, because of the narrow field upon which it is imprisoned. The demand for labor is small, compared with the thousands who have labor to sell. So it will be [illegible] this favored land, unless we [illegible] our vast public domain as a sacred inheritance for the free white laboring man and his posterity forever. In the call of our extended empire the toiling masses have the only sure guarantee for their future prosperity and independence. This the cupidity of capital will [illegible] them—and here lies the real issue that [illegible] has forced upon the country. It [illegible] a struggle for land. On the one side stands the power of slave [illegible] property, demanding a field on which to employ his servile labor—upon the other side stands free labor, claiming the soil as an inheritance for a free posterity. Central and Western Europe, teeming with its millions of population, is not as large as the domain of the American slaveholder. He and his bondmen always occupy by far the most fertile and genial portion of this Continent. Let him rest content with his territorial possessions and power. We do not seek to disturb him. We neither assail nor defend his asserted right to hold this peculiar kind of property. We simply affirm that we have nothing to do with it, and propose to let him and his slaves alone where they are. We make, therefore, no question about the abolition of Slavery in the South. We but stand in defiance of Freedom in the North. Kansas is in the latitude of Pennsylvania. In geographical position it is a Northern Territory. It was dedicated by solemn compact, in 1820, to Freedom forever. We claim the fulfillment of the bond. We defend the integrity of Free Northern soil against the cupidity that would subjugate it by violence into a plantation for slaves.

Much has been said of the dangers involved in this controversy. We are counseled to submission, and acquiescence in the wrong, because the wrong does threatens greater calamities if we shall dare to defend our rights. Such threats are unbecoming those who make them, and an insult to those upon whose fears they are expected to operate. Great questions of governmental policy, involving the very substance of our liberties, and happiness of remote generations, are not to be settled by appeals to the fears of any part of the American people. Reason, and the calm judgment of an enlightened public opinion, must decide between freemen—threats are a terror to slaves. Imaginary dangers become realities to the timid, to the courageous they vanish on a nearer approach. So here, the only danger lies in becoming alarmed. The danger is overcome the day it is met with resolute courage and determined purpose. The right must prevail, and the wrong must give. Upon no other basis, can the questions in issue ever permanently settled. It is no impeachment of the manly qualities of our Southern friends, to say, that they will and must submit to that which is just and right, when constitutionally embodied in the legislation of the Government. Let the freemen of the North announce in language firm and unmistakable, their purpose to resist the spread of Slavery; and at every cost, to preserve the Integrity of the Union, and we shall have a lasting peace: such as no compromise having its foundations in wrong, can ever secure to the country.

The position taken by the Convention in its resolve touching the duties and obligations imposed upon those who seek adoption in our great American family of freemen, must meet the approval of every patriotic citizen. We have a right to expect and require a perfect and undivided allegiance from all who are invested with the high prerogatives of citizenship. As the adopted citizen receives in full measure all the rights and immunities of the native born, so ought he to render the like single and unreserved devotion to the country of his adoption. He should acknowledge no earthly power superior to the Constitution and the sovereignty of the American people. There is no danger that we shall err in our zealous devotion to our country, and in the cultivation of an intense American nationality.

I have not time to speak of the other topics embraced in the platform of principles adopted by the Convention in a manner their importance deserves. Opportunities will be afforded me hereafter to make my views known on some matters of domestic policy, closely connected, in my judgment, with the growth and prosperity of our great Commonwealth. While the utmost care should be observed not to disturb the vast business interests of a Commonwealth so rich, and of such diversified pursuits as our own, yet it cannot be denied that ours, the richest Commonwealth of its extent in the world, has not kept pace in the development of her resources and in productive industry with her sister States. We may, therefore, without the charge of rashness, inquire if our public policy could not, in some respects, be made more conformable to the spirit of the age, and more in harmony with the wants of an ever active business enterprise.

In conclusion, gentlemen, permit me to tender my thanks for the very kind and acceptable manner in which you discharged the duty assigned you.

Very respectfully, your ob't serv't,
D. WILMOT.

To J. S. Bowen, Wm. D. Kelley, John R. Edie, G. Rush Smith and Russell Everett, Committee.

A New Governor of the Almshouse—Remarkable Election.

One of the provisions of the new Charter renders it necessary for Mr. Joseph Taylor to content himself with a single City office. Under the old Charter Mr. Taylor held two. He was Commissioner of Streets and a Governor of the Almshouse. The new Charter went into effect yesterday, and Mr. Taylor resolved that it should come upon him with but one responsibility on his hands. On Thursday he sent in to the President of the Board of Governors a communication signing his seat in that Board, and on the same day a special meeting was called to fill the vacancy.

It is said that for some unnamed reason some of the members did not receive a notice, and consequently they were not there. The members present were Mr. Gunther, the President; Mr. Malony, Mr. Oliver, Mr. Finckney and Mr. Tieman. Mr. Taylor was there also.

The law provides that when a vacancy occurs, the remaining members shall have power to fill it; that twenty-four hours notice of intention to hold such a meeting must be given and that six votes are necessary to an election.

There were but five members present, beside Mr. Taylor. If he was still a member, then there was no vacancy, and if he was not he should not have voted. Nevertheless he did vote with the others—making six—and all the votes were cast for ex-Councilman Van Ripper, who was declared elected, in place of Mr. Taylor.

We understand the other members—Messrs. Townsend, Anderson, Smith and Dugro—will enter objections to Mr. Van Ripper's taking a seat as a member of the Board of Governors.

Army Medical Board.

A Medical Board, consisting of Surgeon R. S Satterlee, Surgeon C. A. Finley, and Surgeon C McDougal, assembled yesterday at the office of the United States Army Medical Purveyor, No. 110 Grand-street, for the examination of Assistant-Surgeons for promotion, and of candidates for admission into the Medical Staff of the Army. This Board will probably be in session from two to three weeks. About a dozen candidates reported themselves yesterday, and many more are expected. Application for admission into the Medical Staff of the Army can only be made through the Secretary of War. The examination is of a very rigorous nature—sufficiently so, indeed, to deter all but the most courageous from presenting themselves, and even of these, but very few succeed. To be passed by the Board is one of the highest honors that can be conferred on any newly-graduated medical student.

Fires.

IN A FEED STORE.

A fire broke out in the feed store of Holmes & Holeman, No. 122 East Twenty-Eighth street, between 1 and 2 o'clock, yesterday afternoon. The damage done amounted to about $500. There was no insurance on the stock. The building is insured in the Broadway Insurance Company.

IN BETHUNE STREET.

About $15,000 worth of property was destroyed by fire in Bethune-street Thursday night. The planing and saw mills of Collins & Pells, were almost totally destroyed.

ALARMS.

There were a great many alarms of fire yesterday, as usual on moving day, but not much property was destroyed.

FIRE IN BROOKLYN.

A row of frame shanties, occupied as carpenters shops, sash and blind makers &c., on DeKalb near Fulton Avenue, was destroyed by fire Thursday night. The whole loss did not exceed $1,200.

The parties burnt out are Edward Macomber, carpenter; H. J. Boutcher, iron railing manufacturer; Wm. Williamson, carpenter; L. S. Brown, carpenter; Mr. Johnson, shoemaker, John Newlan, sash and blind maker.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

SPRING IMPORTATIONS, 1857,
AT LAST FALL'S PRICES.

SMITH & LOUNSBERY, NO. 458 BROADWAY, near Grand-st., have now ready for exhibition a large and superior stock of VELVET, TAPESTRY, BRUSSELS, THREE-PLY and INGRAIN CARPETING, imported expressly for this Spring's trade, and until further notice will be sold at LAST FALL'S PRICES.

A WELL-MERITED REPUTATION.—THAT PORtion of New-York humanity who wear blurcated garments, concede that they are much indebted to Mr. E. DeGROTT, who keeps a Clothing Warehouse at No. 142 Fulton street, where may be found a large and valuable assortment of Ready-made Clothing. Very fastidious indeed must be the taste of the gentleman who cannot make a selection from his stock.

GENTLEMEN LIVING UP-TOWN.—CANTRELL'S new establishment, No. 813 Broadway has already become a "fixed fact", and gentlemen should not overlook the fact that the department for the sale of dress boots and other feet-covering for them, is under the supervision and management of late of the well known firm of KIMBALL & BEESLEY, boot manufacturers. His experience is well known, and CANTRELL will sell every article in his store, whether for ladies or gentlemen, wonderfully cheap.

CROUP COUGH IS ALMOST IMMEDIATELY cured by the application of J. R. STAFFORD'S Olive Tar, which is the only fluid that contains Electro-Magnetism.

MUMPS.—THIS DANGEROUS DISEASE IS AT once mitigated and speedily cured by the application of J. R. STAFFORD'S Olive Tar.

QUINSY SORE THROAT.—THE TIMELY APplication of J. R. STAFFORD'S Olive Tar is a certain preventive and cure, because it imparts magnetism, which restores vitality.

THE ALEXANDRE ORGAN.—PUBLIC EXPECtation was on tiptoe, last week, in reference to this novel instrument. Its power was averred to be equal to that of a ten-foot organ; its capacity for expression was marvelous—a multitude of stops enabled it to produce the most startling effects, while it equaled the piano in rapidity of touch. Such another instrument was never heard before. Thalberg brought it here; Thalberg was to play it here; he had played it at his matinées in New-York. Thalberg was a progressive man, he was not afraid of novelties—and, finally, it was whispered among the knowing ones that Thalberg was paid a nice little sum for lending to the Alexandre Organ the influence of his name.

We intimated, yesterday, that perhaps there was a slight infusion of humbug about all this, and that it required a very extraordinary judge of music to appreciate the new instrument. People who went to the concert on Saturday night were amazed that this epitome of thunder should have but a single place on the programme; but they were more amazed when they heard a bad imitation of a melodeon, fifing away in a mixed up, muddled, irregular manner, on a theme said to be the "Miserere," from "Il Trovatore, and a veritable mummery it was.

Seriously the Alexandre Organ is not a very remarkable instrument. It is an imitation of the melodeon, but by no means an improvement on it. For the parlor, the concert-room, or the church, better instruments are turned out every day at PRINCE'S Melodeon Manufactory. A prophet is not without honor, save in his own country; but Messrs. PRINCE & CO. have no reason to be dissatisfied with a comparison between the organ-melodeon and the Organ Alexandre. Good judges consider the home instrument the better one, and let the two be placed in competition side by side, we, for one, have no fear for a Buffalo victory.—Buffalo Commercial Advertiser.

THE TREATMENT OF CONSUMPTION
BY ALLOPATHY, HOMŒOPATHY, WATER-CURE
AND MEDICATED INHALATION.
PRACTICALLY REVIEWED
BY
ROBERT HUNTER, M. D.,
Consulting Physician for Pulmonary Diseases, (828 Broadway, New-York.)

[Continued from Thursday's Times. The Review in full may be obtained at the Publishers, Sherman & Co., No. 1 Vesey street, Astor House. Price 10 cents.]

ARGUMENT ON TREATMENT.

"We denounce unto men that they would give over trifling; and not imagine that so great a work as the stopping and taking back the powerful course of nature can be brought to pass by some morning draught or the taking of some precious drug; but they would be assured that it must needs be that this is a work of labor, and consisteth of many remedies and a fit connection of them among themselves. For no man can be so stupid as to imagine that what was never yet done can be done, but by such ways as were never yet attempted."—Lord Bacon.

This language of Lord Bacon is peculiarly applicable to the treatment of Consumption. The treatment heretofore employed, whether Allopathic, Homœopathic or Water-Cure, has alike signally failed, and if this disease is ever cured it will be by the adoption of some new and comparatively untried method of treatment. This opinion is not singular, but appears to have been entertained by most physicians who have carefully investigated the pathology and treatment of the disease.

"Look," says Magendie, "at pulmonary phthisis for example; there is an affection which you see, day after day, cutting off individuals of every age, of every sex, and of every rank, yet none has been more carefully studied on the old plan, none has proved a more fruitful source of dogma and disquisition. Eminent observers have described all its phenomena even to the minutest details. But what is all this but description, but so much natural history. Will it throw any light on the treatment of the affection? Not a particle! but we hope for enlightenment in this respect. We must learn the cause of the disease, nor need we despair of discovering it. Perhaps better matter may yet be detected in the blood, and, as a further step, the means of destroying or preventing its formation ascertained."—Magendie's Lectures on the Blood, p. 13.

Professor Carswell, the distinguished Pathologist, observes on the same subject, "it may not be too much to hope that by means of a more intimate knowledge of organic chemistry, we may yet be able to detect in the mucous secretions, or in the blood, those changes which indicate the existence of the tuberculous diathesis, and thus perhaps be led to discover a remedy for the disease before it has effected its localization and produced changes in themselves incurable." (Cyclo. Med.) The hope that such remedy might yet be discovered appears to have been generally entertained, for though Dr. Chapman of Philadelphia, a few years ago, proclaimed the idea of curing consumption by any remedy then known—"a delusion"—even he did not think it either impossible or improbable that some improved method of treatment would, in time, be found out.

If it would seem, to, that of late years, as our knowledge of the essential nature of tubercular deposits became improved, many distinguished physicians almost simultaneously turned their attention to the lungs and to the consideration of the feasibility of reaching the malady more successfully through this channel. Notwithstanding the failure of some experiments instituted by himself to test the merits of chlorine gas as an inhalant, Sir John Forbes, the distinguished editor of the British and Foreign Medico Chirurgical Review, tells us in an article on asthma that "reason, analogy and experience unite to justify the inhalation practice." And Professor Carpenter, of the University of London, the distinguished Physiologist, still more strongly urges upon the profession the importance of directing their efforts to the discovery of some "counteracting agents" which may be administered through the extended absorbing surface of the lungs by inhalation. Having demonstrated that "the absorption of volatile matters diffused through the air is continually taking place by the lungs" (§ 430 he observed: "It cannot be doubted that miasmata and other morbific agents diffused through the atmosphere can more readily introduced into the system through the pulmonary surface than by any other; and our aim should, therefore, be directed to the discovery of some counteracting agents which can be introduced in the same manner." The Pulmonary surface affords a most advantageous channel for the introduction of certain medicines that can be raised in vapor when it is desired to affect the system with them speedily and powerfully." (Physiology, p. 556.)

These extracts sufficiently show the tendency of the professional mind towards the truth, in the recognition of the local and constitutional potency of inhaled remedies, which forms the very basis of our system of practice. It is well known that we have contended for years that the great cause of the want of success which has followed every treatment in consumption, and attended equally every class and sect of physicians, is not that the disease is not incurable or the medicines insufficient, but that the former has not been understood and the latter most injudiciously applied. The idea that consumption is merely the local manifestation of an inherited or acquired constitutional disease has been productive of incalculable mischief. This theory received a terrible blow from the investigations of Louis, and the accumulating facts of each day are fast establishing in the minds of the profession its utter fallacy.

The tables of Walshe and Louis show us that but a small proportion of the cases of actual consumption directly spring from consumptive parents. They further prove the disease to be generally acquired under the operation of certain deleterious influences, among the chief of which they place impure air.

Supposing then consumption to be the result of an acquired constitutional taint, the question arises how that taint is produced. No constitutional malady can spring from a healthy action of the several organs of the body. There must be a defect somewhere. Either what is taken into the body by the lungs and the stomach must contain the poison, or it must arise from the non casting out of impurities which should be expelled. Some organ must therefore fail in its function, and the question to be determined is, which is that organ? Is it the stomach? We think not? Some physicians have taught this doctrine, but in every instance we believe them to have been mere theorists; certainly they could not have studied the disease practically. If the stomach fails to transform the food into good healthy nutriment, the blood may become poor and watery, and the body may emaciate, but it will not become tuberculous. Tubercles will not arise from mere deficiency of nourishment, however long protracted. Dyspeptics are undoubtedly more liable to consumption than persons of stronger digestion, not because they are dyspeptics, but from the body being so much enfeebled as not to be able to resist the cause of the disease. Any other debilitating disease is equally predisposing. If the stomach were the cause of true consumption, how does it happen that the disease never effects its localization there? But this theory is absurd to on a palpable absurdity, by the fact that two out of every three persons suffering from this disease have no derangement of the stomach until long after the lungs have become seriously affected, and many not until the last few weeks of life.

Theory then may say that Consumption is a disease of the whole body, but practice teaches us that it can only be cured by regarding it as a local malady, and attacking it in the lungs. If bad food and bad digestion will vitiate the blood, will not bad air and defective respiration do so in a tenfold greater degree? Then why suppose the lesser cause, and overlook the greater? Is the function of the lungs less necessary to life than that of the stomach? We can go tor days without food, and yet sustain no material injury; but we cannot suspend the purification of the blood by respiration for more than a few minutes without causing death. And when, too, it is considered that the lungs are always the seat of the disease after it has become localised, the only logical inference to be drawn, in the absence of positive demonstration, is that the deposition of tubercles is always preceded by some impediment to the function of the lungs. A slight cold—bronchitis—a seated cold—a dusty workshop—sedentary employment in a close atmosphere—these are the influences which obstruct the functions of the lungs, and they are precisely the influences under which Consumption will be produced in any lung, no matter how strong or free from family predisposition may be the constitution of the individual. The many causes which tend to induce pulmonary irritation, and fill the air-tubes with viscid phlegm and mucus, in a climate so changeable as this, explain at once the melancholy frequency of consumption, and point out the lungs as the alpha and omega, the beginning and the end. It is here that disease first manifests itself. As before remarked, the general health is often entirely undisturbed—the appetite and digestion good—the bowels regular—the skin natural in temperature and moisture, and so of the other organs. A little hacking or sawing of sticky phlegm—slight loss of flesh, and commonly a sense of greater shortness of breath than natural on ascending stairs, with a disposition to sigh frequently—these are all the symptoms we have in incipient consumption. Even these symptoms are not always present, until some time after the stethoscope has revealed the existence of tubercles in the lungs. We say, therefore, that the disease is essentially confined to the lungs, and all the danger to the patient arises from its progress in this organ. It has been the great error of the profession to overlook this fact, and, as a consequence, to treat merely the symptoms, leaving the cause undisturbed. Physicians have labored to clarify the muddy streams, instead of striving to purify the fountain which corrupts them.

But many say, "the whole system is involved in the disease." Yes, the whole system sympathizes with the disease in the lungs, just as it does with any other local affection, from a splinter in the finger to the breaking of a limb—from irritation in a little nerve in the root of a tooth to ulceration in the delicate structure of a vital organ. Who has not seen a thorn in the finger produce fever, increase the pulse, and destroy the appetite? And whoever has seen this, has seen the brain, the heart, and the stomach, three of the most vital organs, disturbed by a little irritation in the end of the finger. A scratch has been known to produce lock-jaw and death. Every surgeon knows the wide range of sympathies which ever attend wounds and injuries. The brain suffers in a very marked degree, the stomach loses its tone, the action of the heart becomes fitful and irregular. When the secondary fever sets in the skin is hot, the face flushed, the pulse increased in frequency, the appetite poor, and the tongue furred. And if all these sympathies may come from a trifling local injury, in an unimportant part, surely we ought to feel no surprise that tubercles festering and ulcerating so vital an organ as the lungs, should set up a chain of morbid sympathies involving the entire body. Some point to the hectic fever and night perspirations as a proof that the constitution is involved. But every physician must know that these symptoms are often produced in a very marked degree by a simple abscess or collection of matter in the leg or in the groin. We have known before to follow an abscess produced by a stab from a dirk in the thigh. If so simple and purely local a cause as this is sufficient to produce it, none can deny that suppuration in the lungs is a cause far more likely to do so.

We have dwelt on these points longer than was perhaps necessary, but the absurd idea that Consumption is, in its commencement, a constitutional disease, has existed too long for the credit of the profession or the good of the sick. Rely upon it, no physician who bases his treatment on such a doctrine will ever effect its cure. The very symptoms from which consumptive people suffer all point to the lungs. "Cough" is caused by irritation, induced by the presence of phlegm, mucus, or pus in the air passages. "Expectoration" comes from the inflamed mucous membrane lining the bronchial tubes, and, in the last stage, from ulceration and softened tubercles. "Shortness of breath" is produced by the filling up of the air cells and tubes by tubercles or sputa. "Pain or soreness" comes in part from the inflamed state of the diseased lung, and chiefly from the extension of irritation in the pleura. "Hectic" from suppuration, or from nervous irritation, or both combined. "Hemorrhage," or "Spitting of blood" from the obstruction of the pulmonary vessels of the diseased lung. "Loss of flesh" from the defective vitalization of the blood and chyle in the lungs. There is not, in fact, a usual or characteristic symptom of Consumption which does not arise from this local disease of the lungs; and yet medical men continue to cite these very symptoms as proofs of its constitutionality.

If we needed any additional proof of the local origin and nature of Consumption, we might find it in the manner in which all physicians determine on the chances of recovery, in each individual case. The first step is to examine the lungs with the stethoscope and by percussion, and if they find them free from tubercles, they assure the patient that he is in no danger, even though he may have spit blood, expectorated pus, and lost flesh." We quote the very language used at a recent examination by a physician in respectable position in this City. That it is unsound and unsafe doctrine we know, but what does it say for the consistency of the same physician who holds the old dogma that the symptoms of Consumption are only the local manifestation of a constitutional disease? If these are the signs of an incurable constitutional taint, they should be regarded as just as perilous to the patient, whether his lungs were diseased or not. Again, every physician decides whether a patient can recover, not by the severity of his cough, for many hopeless consumptives cough very little; not by the quantity of the expectoration, for in many cases of "tuberculous bronchitis the expectoration is much greater than in any case of consumption, however incurable; not by the intensity of the pain, for many consumptives never suffer from pain—no, nor, indeed, from any of these symptoms, but solely from the pulmonary disorganization. He "sounds" the chest to discover how much of the lung is affected, or in what stage. If the disease is confined to a small part, the case is curable; if it involves a large part the case is hopeless.

The test, then, is a local test; the symptoms are local, and the cause is local. Such being the case, what should the treatment be? What aim has the physician in view? Is it not to stay the progress of disorganization in the lungs while there yet remains sufficient breathing surface to sustain life? Clearly this is or ought to be the chief object of all his efforts. Now how does he do this by the old practice? If he is an allopathic physician he strives to soothe the cough, to palliate the pain, and to improve the appetite. Nothing more is attempted. In other words, he rests satisfied with having relieved the more urgent symptoms. His aim is to make the patient comfortable, not to cure him! The disease of the lungs goes on unchecked, until even opiates fail to relieve and tonics to strengthen, when the poor sufferer dies a melancholy object of misery and despair! Homœopathy and the Water cure scarcely deserve mentioning, since all experience is against them—and the confessions of their own advocates not in their favor. Homœopathy perhaps affords as much relief and does less injury than allopathy; but the Water cure may be said to do more injury and afford less relief than either.

Believing then consumption to be a disease sui generis originating in obstructed respiration,

FIELD AND GARDEN SEEDS,
AT THE NORTH RIVER AGRICULTURAL WAREHOUSE.
GRIFFING, BROTHER & CO.,
No. 60 Cortlandt-st., New-York.

GENTLEMEN HAVING COUNTRY SEATS AND GARDENS WILL FIND THE IMPROVED POUDRETTE of the subscribers ONE OF THE BEST FERTILIZERS, as well as the CHEAPEST substitute for manure, where there is difficulty in procuring sufficient for garden and farm purposes. Its chief recommendations are, that it is neat, inoffensive, CONTAINS NO SEEDS OF WEEDS, is very quick and powerful in its operation upon vegetation, and at the same time is so harmless that it can be put in direct contact with the seed or plant without injury, which is totally unlike other fertilizers. It will bring early crops of peas, beans, potatoes, sweet corn, &c., and for lawns and grass plots is unrivaled. The small quantity used and ease of application render it very economical. The price for 1 barrel is $3; 3 barrels, $5; and $1 50 per bbl. for any quantity over 6 barrels, delivered free in the City. A pamphlet will be forwarded by mail, or furnished gratis on application. Address
THE LODI MANUFACTURING COMPANY,

PROPOSALS.

NAVY AGENT'S OFFICE, CORNER WILLIAM-ST. AND EXCHANGE-PLACE, NEW-YORK, April 27, 1857.

TRANSPORTATION OF STORES.—PROPOSALS SEALED AND INDORSED.—Proposals for freight to Hong Kong will be received at this office until 12 o'clock SATURDAY, the 2d day of May, 1857, for the transportation of 2,800 barrels, more or less, of Government Stores from the Navy Yard, Brooklyn, New-York, to the United States Naval Store Keeper at Hong Kong, in China, or the senior naval officer present. The offers must state the price asked per barrel, without distinction between wet and dry; and each barrel, or two half barrels of bread, beef, pork, flour, rice, dried apples, pickles, sugar, butter, beans, molasses, vinegar, or whisky, will be considered and paid for as a barrel, whether it be a whisky barrel or a barrel of smaller capacity. All other packages to be estimated at the rate of 5½ cubic feet to a barrel, whatever they may contain, and in the measurement of all casks other than barrels the fifths will be deducted. No primage to be allowed. Six fair weather working lay days to be allowed at each of the ports of New-York and Hong Kong, for taking in and discharging cargo. Payments to be made by any Navy Agent in the United States, to be selected by the bidder and designated in the charter party within thirty days after producing satisfactory evidence of the delivery of the cargo. The vessel must stand A No 1, and be a first-class clipper ship, and pass the usual inspection by such persons as may be appointed by the Commandant at the Yard at Brooklyn, and be at the Yard on or before the 6th day of May next, ready to receive her cargo, and if not presented for examination within three days after being notified of her acceptance, the Department will consider itself at liberty to offer the freight to the next lowest bidder, or to make such arrangements as may best subserve the public interest. And if the vessel shall not sail (wind and weather permitting) within five days after the Government Stores are placed on board and the bills of lading signed, there shall be deducted from the freight money a sum equal to the amount demanded as demurrage for each and every delay in sailing beyond the said five days.

GEORGE N. SANDERS, Navy Agent.

SEALED PROPOSALS WILL BE RECEIVED at the office of the Clerk of the Board of Education, corner of Grand and Elm sts. (and nowhere else), until the 15th day of May next, at 12 o'clock M., for the coal and wood required for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS of this City for the ensuing Winter,—say 1,500 tons of coal, 1,500 cords of oak wood, and 300 cords of pine wood, more or less. The coal must be of the best quality of white ash, furnace and stove, clean coal, in good order, and 2,240 pounds to the ton, weighed by a person selected by the committee, and delivered in the bins at the several school-houses.

The proposals must state the mines from which it is proposed to supply the coal, and the price for furnace size and stove size.

The wood to be of the best quality, and delivered, properly sawed, split and piled, in the school-yards, as may be designated by the proper authority. No split wood to be less Virginia pine, not less than 3 feet 8 inches in length, and the oak wood not less than 3 feet long, and the sticks not less then 3 inches in diameter.

The proposals must state the price per cord of 128 cubic feet solid measure, for pine and for oak, and also the price per cut for sawing and splitting each load.

The wood will be inspected and measured by the Inspector of Fuel of the Board of Education. Said coal and wood to be delivered at the schools where ordered, as follows: two thirds of the quantity of wood from the 20th of May to the 20th of July, and the remainder as required by the committee; two-thirds of the quantity of coal from the 20th of July to the 1st of October, 1857, and the remainder as required by the committee. Said contract to be binding until the 1st of May, 1858.

Security for the faithful performance of the contract will be required, and each proposal must be accompanied with the names and signatures of the proposed sureties.

...Proceedings Pending in the Supreme Court.

...Granting an Alternative Mandamus—Formal Order of Judgment against the Plaintiff—Proceedings against the Proceedings of the Defendants, ...ted by Judge Roosevelt of a Writ of ...ndamus, returnable to the General Term of ... Supreme Court

...ARGUMENT BEFORE JUDGE PEABODY.

Injunction against the Mayor, Aldermen, &c., of the City of New-York, against Appropriating the City Funds to pay Counsel to oppose the New Police Commission.

The People, by the Attorney-General of the State, vs. Abraham D. Russell, City Judge.—An alternative mandamus was granted against the defendant by Judge Roosevelt on Thursday evening, the object of which was to compel the Judge to act as Police Commissioner under the old law. Judge Russell, it is almost needless to say, is, as City Judge, one of the old Commissioners, and being opposed to the recent act reorganizing the Police Department and appointing new Commissioners, he is understood to have refused to recognize its validity, and expressed his determination not to act in conformity with it. The present action was brought, avowedly with the cooperation of Mayor Wood, to induce the Court now, or eventually, to declare that he was bound to recognize no authority but that of the old Police law, under which, by way of mere formality, he has refused to sit as a Commissioner.

The mandamus was returnable yesterday (Friday) morning. Mr. O'Conor appeared and said he was ready to go on with the case against the defendant, and was present upon a written authority of the Attorney General. Mr. Field, who appeared for Judge Russell, or more properly for the new Commissioners, stated that he was engaged in the Balance Dry Dock case, and desired that the motion be adjourned. After some discussion, the case was set down for 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

The letter which he addressed to the new Commissioners, and their reply thereto, are as follows:

LETTER FROM THE CITY JUDGE TO THE NEW POLICE COMMISSIONERS.

THURSDAY, April 30, 1857.

GENTLEMEN: Under the new act, familiarly called the Metropolitan Police bill, certain powers are, or purport to be, granted to you and the Mayors of New-York and Brooklyn, as a Board of Commissioners to govern the Police of a new and anomalous district specified in said act.

In common with the great mass of my fellow-citizens, I entertain the opinion that that act, in its whole length and breadth, is repugnant to the Constitution of this State, and, by consequence, is absolutely, and in all its parts, void.

The Attorney-General has commenced against you an action, in the nature of a quo warranto, for the purpose of obtaining a judgment in the appropriate tribunal, on the question of right involved in this controversy.

That the public interest required this course on their part, no man can doubt. That the public interest demands from you the fullest cooperation in bringing the issue thus presented to a prompt decision, is to my mind quite clear.

The counsel for the State have offered you every facility for forwarding this object, and it is quite manifest that, with the greatest convenience to yourselves, you could, also disposed, obtain a final hearing at a general term of the Supreme Court within a few days.

It is equally clear that a hearing could be had in the Court of Appeals on the first day of its session in June next.

The judgment of that Court would be final, and if in your favor, all who now object to your assumed official action, including myself, would be obliged to acquiesce.

To my great surprise I learn that, through your counsel, you have declined to accelerate the proceedings, and that you purpose employing your counsel and the time of the Courts in discussing touching the mere forms of procedure, and in struggles to acquire the liberty of acting in an official capacity during the controversy, which you, as defendants, may protract for many months. I deem it important to the public that the disputed question of right as to the exercise of supervisory authority over the Police of this City should be promptly decided. My constituents are especially interested in procuring such a decision at the earliest practicable moment, and as one of their officers directly implicated in the question, it becomes me to do everything in my power toward accomplishing that result.

My personal and official relations to this question afford conclusive reasons for such a course on my part.

The laws in force when the Metropolitan Police bill was passed, charged me with the office and duties of a Police Commissioner of the City of New-York.

If the new bill is void, I am bound still to act as such Police Commissioner under the preëxisting law. If it is valid, I am forbidden so to do. Whether I act or refuse to act I may be liable to censure.

To relieve me from this embarrassment, and at the same time to relieve the public interest from the jeopardy in which it is involved by your refusal to meet the question, the Attorney-General has prosecuted against me a writ of alternative mandamus, a copy of which is now furnished to you.

I shall claim on the record, by a demurrer or otherwise, that the new bill afforded me a sufficient warrant for a refusal to act under the former law. This will raise the constitutional question, and I shall instruct my counsel to hasten proceedings, and procure an early decision from the Court of Appeals.

Of course my counsel will not argue your side of this question, for I do not believe in the soundness of the position you have taken. But if you decline, they will present the points, and carry the case to final judgment.

My object in addressing you is two-fold:

First—I wish to place myself in my true position before the public as an opponent of your course. The forms of law which are necessarily resorted to for the purpose in hand might mislead, if this letter were not written.

Second—I think it proper to offer you the control and management of my defence in the mandamus against me, except that I will not sanction any steps deferring or delaying justice. Your counsel may dictate the forms of the pleadings on my part, so far as shall be consistent with a waiver of all objections of mere form and with the measure of expedition required. They may present the question of constitutional law in any form they shall think fit, and at every stage of the action until final judgment in the Court of Appeals: they may conduct the whole defence, and maintain by argument, if they can, that you, in conjunction with the Mayors of New-York and Brooklyn, now lawfully constitute the Board of Police Commissioners, having authority to exercise the powers which were vested in me as Police Commissioner ex officio. For this purpose it is only necessary that they attend in Court to-morrow morning.

I am, gentlemen, with great respect, your obedient servant, ABRAHAM D. RUSSELL, City Judge.

TO SIMEON DRAPER, JAMES BOWEN, JAMES W. NYE, JACOB CHOLWELL and JAMES S. T. STRANAHAN, Esqs.

The following letter was dispatched yesterday morning by the counsel of the new Police Commissioners, as their

REPLY TO JUDGE RUSSELL.

NEW-YORK, Friday, May 1, 1857.

SIR:—Your letter of the 30th April, addressed to the five members of the "Board of Police for the Metropolitan Police District of the State of New-York," who hold commissions from the Governor of the State, handed to one of those Commissioners between the hours of 4 and 5 o'clock P. M. of yesterday, has, by reason of its allusions to the counsel of that Board, been handed to us by that Commissioner.

We know of nothing to justify the assertions of your letter, or any delay on the part of the Board of Police, or of any of their counsel, in meeting any questions raised for adjudication respecting their title to the office they fill by the Executive appointment.

The proposition of your letter that the Counsel of the Board of Police should take the peculiar part assigned to us in a proceeding between Mr. Wood and yourself, confessed by your letter to be prepared for that purpose, and not to arise from any difference of interest or opinion between you, is an invitation to aid in a collusive litigation to the end of obtaining a fraudulent judgment.

We perhaps treat the suggestion with more attention than it deserves or was expected to receive, in giving you for an answer that the only course we shall take in reference to the proceeding your letter has brought to our notice, will be, in our duty as Counsellors of the Supreme Court, to lay the evidence of the character of the litigation before the Court.

Yours, respectfully,

WM. M. EVARTS, DAVID DUDLEY FIELD,
WM. CURTIS NOYES, F. B. CUTTING,
JOSHUA M. VAN COTT.

To Hon. A. D. RUSSELL, City Judge.

In compliance with the terms of the adjournment, Judge ROOSEVELT took his seat on the Special Term bench at three o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of hearing argument on the motion for a mandamus against the City Judge.

Mr. Malcolm Campbell, on behalf of the Judge, read his answer.

Mr. O'Conor—To that answer there is interposed a general demurrer.

Mr. Campbell—To that I put in a rejoinder demurrer.

Mr. O'Conor—Now, if your Honor please, in this case I move, on behalf of the people, for judgment; and it is for your Honor to consider whether the most expedient disposition of the case is to hear an argument upon it, or to give judgment pro forma, so that the first argument can be before the General Term. I am indifferent as to what course your Honor may see fit to take.

The Judge—This mandamus, if I understand it, is predicated on the idea that the old Board of Commissioners are entitled to go on and act as heretofore.

Mr. O'Conor—Yes, Sir.

The Judge—And that the appointments under the new law, because it is unconstitutional, are therefore void.

Mr. O'Conor—Yes, Sir.

The Judge—It does not appear to be a matter of moment which way the judgment is entered now, except in one point of view; and in that point of view it may be.

Mr. Noyes advanced, and read the subjoined statement:

May it please your Honor: In behalf of the counsel [illegible] proceeded in at this [illegible] Term, convened expressly for that purpose [illegible] no other.

[illegible] days since an injunction was obtained as [illegible] from Mr. Justice DAVIES, on behalf of Mr. Wood, [illegible] of this City, restraining the action of the Board [illegible] the recent act of the Legislature of this State, accompanied by an order to show cause why the injunction should not be continued, returnable on the 30th of April. By the courtesy of that Judge, and by unusual efforts on the part of the counsel of the Commissioners, the argument was anticipated, and concluded before the day of hearing had arrived, and the injunction has since been dissolved.

Pending the determination of that question, and when the retaining of the injunction was regarded as hopeless, a new injunction to the same effect was obtained in an action of quo warranto, on a like ex parte application to your Honor, out of Court, although two other Judges were sitting, one at Chambers and the other at Special Term, in the regularly assigned order of judicial business.

The counsel for the Commissioners, in deference to the authority which granted that injunction, immediately applied to your Honor in public, and in the presence of the counsel for Mr. Wood, for an order to show cause why it also should not be dissolved, which, being opposed by them, your Honor declined to grant, except upon conditions involving the organization of a tribunal out of the ordinary judicial course, for the hearing, out of the motion to dissolve the injunction, but of the merits of the quo warranto, to which the counsel for the Commissioners did not accede, and the application was withdrawn.

Application was made the next day to Judge Peabody, in open Court, for such an order, and, although opposed by the counsel of the Mayor, professing to act as amici curiæ, was granted, returnable the next afternoon; and since that time the questions involved have been, and now are, under discussion before him—the course of the argument being such that no one entertains a doubt that the injunction must be dissolved.

Yesterday afternoon, while the argument before Judge Pesbody was going on, one of the Commissioners was served with a copy of the mandamus in the action now about to be brought on, accompanied by a letter from the defendant, which, with the permission of the Court, I will read.

[Mr. Noyes read Judge Russell's letter, and the reply to it, as above.]

I will also submit an affidavit, showing the exact relation between the parties to this new suit, and leaving no doubt in connection with Judge Russell's letter of its collusive character.

[Mr. Noyes then read the affidavit of James R. Cummings, who swore upon information and belief that Judge Russell was in collusion with Mayor Wood to institute this suit—both of them tempting the validity of the new law. This statement was predicated partially upon the remarks of Mayor Wood before the Chief and Captains of Police, in which he stated in presence of Judge Russell that he represented the majority of the old Board of Police Commissioners in his resistance to the carrying out of the provisions of the Metropolitan Police bill. The report of the remarks of the Mayor on that occasion was also read as part of the affidavit.

Your Honor will then perceive that by this attempt of the Mayor it is sought to determine grave questions of law, not only here but in the General Term of this Court, and in the Court of last resort, by collusion with a willing defendant, who has no wish to oppose, nor any interest in opposing, the success of the scheme which both of them have equally at heart. Aside from the question of the judicial impudence which avows such a purpose and the illegality of such a proceeding, the counsel of the Commissioners have determined to call the attention of your Honor to the singular aspect in which the case is presented, and to declare that, while leaving the propriety of any further proceedings in it to your Honor without any further suggestions from them, that inasmuch as a judgment in a fictitious suit is entitled to very little respect and has no force as an authority, they will not in any manner lend their aid or countenance to it. And while they avow their anxiety to facilitate by all proper and legal means a speedy decision of the great questions in controversy, they will not under any circumstances render any assistance to that end by any irregular course, or before any tribunal chosen by the Mayor and his advisers, or in any manner out of the regular course of judicial business, as already assigned by the Justices of this Court in the allotment of their duties. That any disposition that may exist to accelerate the first trial of the quo warranto, or any subsequent hearing on appeal of the same, the Police Commissioners always have been and always will be ready to meet; and that their whole action thus far, in every proceeding commenced against them in the Courts in question the validity of the act in controversy, has been to hasten the action of the Courts and resist the delays of the opponents of the law.

Mr. Noyes immediately withdrew.

Mr. O'Conor—If your Honor please, the argument that has been advanced in reference to this matter rests upon premises as true in logic and in law as the latter portion of what my learned friend (Mr. Noyes) has read is true in point of fact. It is a matter perfectly notorious—the learned gentleman has written what is generally known—it is, I repeat, a matter perfectly notorious that the statements of Judge Russell's letter are strictly true, viz., that these Commissioners seek to protract and procrastinate the decision of this question by using all those ordinary methods of delay which evasive parties, when made defendants, are allowed to use. They wish to make the cause of public justice in the City of New-York, and the settlement of this important question, feel all the mischievous consequences of that often observed upon evil—the law's delay. That is their object. Now, Sir, so far as they say that they are willing to expedite the proceedings, they say what is manifestly untrue—manifestly and palpable untrue. There is not a citizen of this commonwealth who hears it, and hears the rest of the representations of the learned counsel, who does not know it to be untrue. What have they to gain by thus procrastinating the decision of the main question? Why, they have this to gain. If they can establish to the satisfaction of the judges before whom the question happens to come, that the mere technical and formal point that no preliminary injunction can be allowed to restrain them from acting, and that they must be permitted to act until final judgment, they can put themselves in a condition to claim, and, unless they are resisted with force and violence, to hold this office until some time next Fall. I say until some time next Fall—without, as we conceive, a constitutional right—without, as yet, having obtained the opinion of one single respectable counselor under his hand that he believed it to be constitutional; I say, without having obtained, and, I verily believe, without being able to obtain, the signature of one single respectable counsel, that he, upon his oracle, as a lawyer and a gentleman, believes it to be constitutional. They wish to avail themselves of technical objections by which they hope to get rid of any injunction pending the litigation, and to place themselves in a condition during this long period of many months, to force their way into these offices, if by means of the physical force of desperate men lounging for the profits and the spoils of office, they can contrive to overcome that physical resistance which, in that event, to the great disgrace of public justice, will necessarily be opposed to their pretensions. This is the attitude in which these gentlemen and their counsel stand. Now, Sir, standing in that attitude—Judge RUSSELL being, to be sure, of opinion that this act is unconstitutional, being of opinion that he might rightfully disregard it and obey the mandates of the preëxisting law, has felt himself not only justified but authorized to say, and he has said, "I will not obey the existing law, and I will wait the quickening mandate of a court of justice to compel me to do so. That presents a suitable opportunity for bringing the issue before the courts. The Attorney-General brings the issue before the courts. Some controversies involve difficult questions of fact and it is impossible for a court of justice to dispose of such questions properly without having as plaintiff and defendant before it, parties who are really in a hostile attitude; but this case presents nothing but the naked, simple question of constitutional law, is that act valid or not? All that is wanted is the simple machinery of a quo warranto or mandamus, drawn up in a common form and presenting this plain, direct and simple issue. These gentlemen in the suit against themselves have determined that they will not permit such an issue to be framed within a period that would admit of the question being disposed of until next Fall. Judge Russell has it in his power to present the issue at an earlier period. He presents it by his refusal to act, or presents an occasion for it. The case at general term proceeds against him accordingly. The issue on the point of law is formed. What does this Court want in order to decide that question understandingly? It wants to hear an argument on the points of law from the counsel representing these Commissioners. They decline to present that argument, and, as in the case of the injunction, they seek by pretences and technical formal objections, to impede the Court of justice and prevent its decision. Ashamed of their condition, they are obliged, in a sort of second hand manner, to assert their entire willingness to meet it and to meet it promptly. The question is, whether, because they will not come in and argue this question, you will say that you will step aside from the regular course of law under regular pleadings and proceedings brought before you, and say that this is an issue which it is not discreet to permit to be carried forward before you. I submit, Sir, that there is no obligation in the Court to adopt that course, and there would be no propriety in adopting it. Whatever may be the opinion of Judge Russell, he has a perfect right to say, "I won't act until this question is decided by the Court." The Attorney General, believing this new act to be void, has a perfect right to proceed to enforce it. And why shall it be said that the suit is collusive or unfair in any respect, when this issue is thus presented, because of that opinion upon the part of Judge Russell, whilst he says, let those who entertain a different opinion come in and argue the question of law and protect all their rights, and as I can and may in my own name, so may they in their own names, if they see fit, join issue at once on the quo warranto which has been served upon them. Now, Sir, I apprehend it would be stepping aside from the regular administration of justice to take cognizance of an idle pretence on the part of these Commissioners, intended merely to retard justice, and it would be keeping back the fair and full and final decision of this case for you to withhold your judgment. Why, now that we are in this case, let us go on with it. I, therefore, trust that your Honor will not feel it your duty in any way summarily to interfere to prevent this matter from being carried forward to judgment—but, on the contrary, that you will facilitate that proceeding. If your Honor determines that matter in our favor, why we must go on Monday next before the General Term. The General Term will then have cognizance of this very motion which the learned counsel have seen fit to make in a manner somewhat peculiar here. They have made a motion and fled from the answer to it, and from your Honor's judgment upon it. If the General Term see fit to refuse to hear this matter for the reasons stated, then they will probably say so; but I apprehend the General Term will do no such thing. When the matter goes before the Court of Appeals they can hear the same matter, and they can determine whether there is any reason why they should not proceed to judgment for the sake of public peace, of public order and of good government. I have no more to say in relation to this particular motion than that I have something to say in relation to the case, if your Honor permits me to go on.

The Judge—I must exclude the question of collusion. I shall certainly assume that when the Attorney General of the State, using the name of the people of the State, is on one side, and the Judge of one of the highest criminal tribunals in the City, by right of which he has acted as a Police Commissioner, is on the other, that although there may be a concert of action for certain purposes, there is no unlawful collusion. Certainly I shall not assume that there is, upon the evidence which has been furnished in these papers. The impeachment of the Attorney-General assumes that collusion on mere hearsay evidence, to which no opportunity has been furnished for an answer. But, as has been said, when this case goes up before the General Term it will be perfectly competent again to review these affidavits there with the view that they may be acted on at the discretion of the General Term. It is not a question of right as between the parties: it is a question for the Court, whether they will go on and hear a case under circumstances which are strictly speaking, not hostile. Now this code on which we are proceeding generally, though not in cases of mandamus, does contain, as all lawyers know, a provision which is somewhat in its spirit analogous to cases like this. It allows parties, when there is a question of difficulty—I read from the code—"when there is a question of difficulty," it allows parties, if that question of difficulty might be the subject of a civil action—or even without an action, so far as that goes, to agree upon a case containing the facts upon which the controversy depends, and to present a submission of the same to any Court which would have jurisdiction if an action had been brought. For undoubtedly it must appear by affidavit in that case that the controversy is real; that there is a real question between the parties; a real question involved in the case. That might be qualified somewhat by criticism. It must be a real question at all events, and the proceeding must be in good faith to determine the rights of the parties. And then it is made the duty, even without further proceedings, by complaint and answer, or any other form of that kind—by any regular technical proceedings—it is made the duty, I say, of the Court, without those formalities, to hear and determine the case at general Term, and give a judgment thereon as if an action were pending. I admit this case does not come within the letter of that provision; but the question is whether the spirit of that provision, if it was necessary at all to invoke it, would not apply to this case, supposing, I mean—as I believe I am bound to suppose from all that is known of this case, and that we may consult its public history will not be denied)—assuming, I say, that it is a real bona fide question, in other words that it is rightly and sincerely entertained on one side as a matter of opinion—on one side at all events, and not very strongly, as we see here, controverted on the other—it may be controverted, but it is not now at all events)—that the law under which this change is sought to be effected in the administration of the police department of this city is unconstitutional. If that be really a dubious question, a question upon which two minds might gravely doubt, and above all, if it be a question on which there is no doubt—if that be so, as counsel contend on the other side, for they don't seem to answer it—(I mean, if there be no doubt one way)—then I don't conceive how I could possibly suppose that the Attorney General is acting here collusively within the meaning of the law against collusion. I cannot. At all events I think I should be acting very disrespectfully to the public authorities were I to assume it in evidence before me. I shall assume that he is doing his duty according to his oath of office. I shall assume likewise that the defendant here, who for this purpose appears as a Police Commissioner ex officio, the City Judge, is likewise acting as he believes to be right under the oath which dictates his duty as a public officer. That being so the fair question being presented, I think it is my duty to pass upon it at all events, so that the three Judges before whom the case is subsequently to be brought can review not only the main question but this identical one.

Mr. O'Conor—I will say by way of reporter, to inform the Court, and in support of your Honor's statement, that it is altogether consistent with principle, as shown by that section of the code, for parties to stand in opposition upon an important question, to waive all forms and come most amicably into the Court and present that question for its judgment. I can state a case occurring under it.

The learned counsel stated at length the case of the New-York Art Union, the law organizing which was found to be unconstitutional; and in regard to which the members composing the association amicably united with the then District-Attorney, (who, as he, Mr. O'Conor, sincerely believed, entertained at first the opinion that the Union was perfectly constitutional,) on a case raising cakedly and simply the constitutional issue, and, without any pleadings, presented it to the General Term for judgment. The Court gave its judgment, and the case then went to the Court of Appeals. That Court gave it the preference on the calendar; it was heard very early in the term. Judgment was rendered that the act of the Legislature was unconstitutional and void, and that institution ceased, he believed, to exist, at least in its then form. He only mentioned this fact as part of the current history, and his Honor, he believed, was familiar with the case.

Judge—It is within my memory; I think I wrote the opinion myself.

Mr. O'Connor—Yes; and your opinion was concurred in by the Court of Appeals. I was in the case. I acted for the Art Union. I promptly met the question, with their entire consent, and proceeded, without any possible delay, to have it determined at the earliest possible moment, even if it were to be determined against us. Now, Sir, in relation to this case, I am here on behalf of the people, to move for judgment. I only desire to expedite the proceedings, and it is for your Honor to determine whether you will render judgment for the plaintiff after hearing us, or whether, without hearing us, you will render a judgment pro forma against us, to be one that we may appeal, and bring the case regularly by appeal before the General Term. Of course you would not render a judgment on our hearing, without, perhaps, hearing some more argument. I don't know that all our points before the other justices have been printed. For my part it is my duty to move for judgment for the people. Your Honor has it in your discretion to give the decision either way. I perceive that the great constitutional case of the Warren Bridge vs. the St. Charles River Bridge went on a decision pro forma to the United States Supreme Court, and that was done in order to have it brought up there without further trouble.

The Judge thought the way to carry up the case must be to deny plaintiff's motion, and then let the plaintiff appeal. The appeal to the General Term could, he believed, only be taken in that way.

Mr. O'Conor—Then your Honor will, pro forma, deny the mandamus.

After some conversation between the Judge and counsel as to the surest mode of bringing the case properly and promptly before the General Term so that it might go to the Court of Appeals in June,

An order was entered, as intimated by the Judge, denying the mandamus pro formâ.

Mr. O'Conor then said he had another motion to make. He had found in this case that, instead of being called into Court to meet fairly on its merits the great constitutional question, they had to employ themselves in the examination, investigation and meeting of technical cavils and quibbles, for the purpose of delay. Among those which he had apprehended they might meet in this case, there arose a doubt (and it might be made unquestionable) as to the place at which a case in mandamus was to be heard for final judgment—whether it could be heard at a Special Term at all. In other words, he found, by referring to the code, that the writ of mandamus was, by the 474th section, excepted out of the operation of the whole of the second part of the code. And that being so, the power of a Special Term to hear such a case finally upon the merits and give judgment, was drawn into very great doubt. It was not necessary for him to say anything more than that. It was drawn into very great doubt, and if the Special Term had not power to hear it and give final judgment, why the judgment he (the Judge) had just now pronounced against his (counsel's) motion would be right for that reason, so that there was no inconsistency in the course that he (counsel) proposed to pursue. Now, under the instructions which he had received in this case, he proposed to move to his Honor at Special Term, upon the same facts and papers as in the other case, for a writ of mandamus returnable at the General Term on Monday next. This motion, after a renewed conversation, was granted, and the parties left the Court.

ARGUMENT OF MR. FIELD, BEFORE JUDGE PEABODY—THE CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTION REACHED.

The People ex rel Fernando Wood vs. Simeon Draper et al.—This case was continued yesterday afternoon. Mr. Field spoke for the Commissioners. The grounds of his defence were the granting of the injunction, which he claimed was in direct violation of a statute in this State, and the constitutionality of the law. He stated that he believed that there was no doubt of the constitutionality of the law, and had equal confidence of his ability to prove it, but this was doing more than he was bound to do. The plaintiffs, in taking upon themselves the proving of the unconstitutionality of the law, were bound to do so beyond all reasonable doubt. The act was to provide for the police force of our City. It was admitted that the Legislature had power to organize any military force to quell any riot, or for any specific purpose, and equally had they this right to provide for the peace of this City. He proceeded to analyze the arguments of his opponents. It was just as proper for the present defendants in be appointed Commissioners of Police, as for the Mayor, Recorder and City Judge to be installed into that position by the Legislature. If the one was not legal, the other could not be. He denied, however, that the Commissioners of Police were county or City officers, any more than were the Judges of the Superior Court. He thought that the keeping of the peace was a duty devolving exclusively upon neither the City, county or town, but upon the whole State. The ideas, however, were the same as those advanced in his points published in yesterday's TIMES. He concluded by alluding to the growing evidence of the loosening of authority in the land, and the general feeling of contempt which is so frequently expressed in public.

It being signified that this was the close of the argument in the case, the Court was adjourned without date

INJUNCTION AGAINST APPROPRIATING THE CITY MONEYS TO PROSECUTE THE RECENT INJUNCTIONS.

Judge BIRDSEYE, of the Brooklyn Supreme Court, yesterday issued the following injunction, on the application of Richard S. Roberts, of Brooklyn, restraining payment of the $10,000 voted by the Common Council to the Corporation Counsel for the purpose of procuring additional legal assistance in contesting the constitutionality of the recent acts of the Legislature with reference to the City of New-York:

SUPREME COURT, KINGS COUNTY.—Rich. S. Roberts vs. The Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New-York.—Injunction by order.—It appearing satisfactorily to me, by the affidavit of Richard S. Roberts, of the city of Brooklyn, the plaintiff, that sufficient grounds for an order of injunction exist, I do hereby order that the defendants, their officers and agents, refrain from paying out of the Treasury of the City of New-York, or out of any funds belonging to the defendants, the sum of $10,000, or any part thereof, appropriated by certain resolutions mentioned in the complaint herein, and in said affidavit, passed by the Board of Aldermen of the City of New-York, on or about the 27th day of April, 1857, and by the Board of Councilmen of the said City, on or about the 28th day of April, 1857, for or on account of any of the matters or purposes expressed in or contemplated by the said resolutions, until the further order of this Court, and in case of disobedience to this order, you will be liable to the punishment therefore, prescribed by law.—Dated Brooklyn, May 1, 1857. LUCIEN BIRDSEYE.

Comptroller Flagg had a copy of the injunction served upon him. He did not mind it much; in fact he was rather pleased with it, and will take no measures to have it set aside; and he wishes it publicly understood that, while the City Treasury remains in its present depleted state, he is willing for like injunctions to be perpetually served upon him.

PARTIAL DEAFNESS AND DISCHARGES FROM THE EAR.—DR. HARTLEY, Principal and Proprietor of the Philadelphia Ear Institution, is now in New-York City, and generously offers to attend all persons suffering from affections of the Ear, without charge until cured, thereby proving his success unequaled, and protecting the deaf from being swindled by paying self-styled Aurists exorbitant fees in advance, and the infliction of still more serious evils, by permitting the application of dangerous remedies by inexperienced and unskillful hands. Dr. H. may here state, that he has no connection whatever with any person advertising to cure deafness. Neither has he given permission for the publication of a certificate, purporting to emenate from him, and cannot, therefore, be responsible for any alarming consequences resulting from rashness and desperation. The loss of money may not be material to some persons, but the deprivation of one of the most important of the senses ought to be regarded and treated with more than ordinary solicitude.

Deafness, noise in the head, and all disagreeable discharges from the ear, speedily and permanently removed, without causing the least pain or inconvenience. A cure in all cases guaranteed where malformation does not exist. Thirteen years close and almost undivided attention to this branch of special practice has enabled him to bring his treatment to such a degree of success as to find the most confirmed and obstinate cases yield by a steady attention to the means prescribed. The destruction by fire of the Institution of which DR. HARTLEY was the head having temporarily released him from his duties in Philadelphia, he will receive calls during each morning at No. 105 9th-st., near University Place.

PURDY'S NATIONAL THEATRE.—To-night an excellent performance will be given at this house, consisting of that sterling old Irish drama "Brian Boroihme," the national drama of "Karmel the Scout," with the pantomime of "Mons. Dechalmeaux," intervening. This closes the present season, and on Monday commences the new, with the theatre repainted, redecorated, carpeted, upholstered and embellished both in interior and exterior. A new drop curtain, representing the Golden Horn, Constantinople, has also been painted by Mr. WILLIAMSON. A grand Eastern spectacle drama is to be produced in great splendor, entitled "Cleopatra; or, the Battle of Actium." So look out for fun at the National next week.

PICTURES ON THE RETINA OF THE EYE.

When Dr. BURDELL was murdered, it was suggested that the picture of the assassin might have been found photographed by nature upon the retina of his eye. It was too late, at that time, to scrape down the retina and examine it with a microscope. But the same wonderful depicturing of facts, produced by science, may be witnessed in the developments of the ingenious Sliding Cases, and the curiously adapted sketches just sent over here by the London Stereoscopic Company, and for sale by their agent, Mr. CREGAR, at HALL'S music store, corner of Broadway and Park-place. All the fashionable world of our city is crowding to see them and carry them home for the family amusement.

☞ The only perfect Fountain Pen in the world. PRINCE'S PROTEAN FOUNTAIN PEN, N. B.—A new and important improvement has been recently added to this invention, by which any writer can graduate the flow of ink. The fountain cases are warranted as incorrodible, and the points of the Gold Pens are warranted for one year.

"We remember being counseled by the Professor of Rhetoric, in College, over, in writing, to arrest a free flow of thought, in order to look out a word in the dictionary, hint to write on, and correct the diction afterwards. The reason assigned was, that a writer should take advantage of the concentration and glow of his mind, and not suffer it to become cooled and distracted while he investigates a question of language. For the same reason we prize "PRINCE'S Fountain Pen." It helps us to avail ourselves of the mind's best moods for composition. It is also an economist of time, soon repaying, by its saving in this respect, its original cost. A recent improvement has obviated our early objections to it, which arose from the insufficiency of the flow of ink. This difficulty no longer exists, the writer being able, by means of a new, ingenious contrivance, to regulate this flow at pleasure. No clergyman, we think, would give it, as thus improved, a fair trial, could ever be induced to relinquish it; no man, indeed, whose literary or commercial pursuits require him to write hour after hour."

The public are invited to call and examine for themselves. Dépôt, No. 290 Broadway, corner of Reade-street.

THE INDIAN TROUBLES

The Other Side of the Indian War—Contradiction of the Reports.

From the Dubuque Northwest.

ST. PETER, Sunday, April 19, 1857.

GENTLEMEN: Capt. WM. W. DODD returned from the seat of Indian rumors, found no Indians except such as are peaceable. The Indian Agent, Mr. FLANDRO, has been here endeavoring to moderate the hot bloods of the town and country, and prevent a collision of the whites and Indians. After a rencounter above Mankato, unfortunately, by some misunderstanding, one Indian was [illegible] the affray.

It is now apparent that all [illegible] in the Spirit Lake outrages, and the [illegible] of the Woods on the Des Moines River. I [illegible] fabrications are starving, and hence doing [illegible] something to eat; [illegible] are dispersed as yet to [illegible] the agency for provisions [illegible].

The Winnebagoes [illegible] unity to get food of the [illegible], they and the whites that the Sioux are coming upon them, and thus causing in many instances a flight of the settlers, they take what provisions may be left, and in some instances break up the furniture in the claim houses.

Yesterday, at 1 P. M., the Fort Snelling troops, commanded by Capt. GARDNER, 125 in number, passed here and encamped at Spring Lake for the night, about one mile from Saint Peter. They intend to go some distance above Mankato, in order to induce the settlers to remain on their claims, and thus quiet the [illegible]ish state of the country above Mankato, on Blue Earth, and adjacencies. Some of them are determined to leave. One family passed here to day for St. Anthony, and notwithstanding the statements of Gen. WM. B. DODD to them of the entire safety of the country of the Blue Earth and Watermon from Indian attacks, this family passed on to St. Anthony.

FLANDRO, the agent, says there are less than one hundred of the Sioux in the present agency to be found anywhere East of the Fort, and these he will have brought in as fast as he can permit them up. The Indians, he says, will be required to stay on the reserves, where alone they are safe

I am sorry the state of affairs exists that I find here. The Indians are starving, and in order to get food they create alarm among women and children, and thus accomplish their ends. This fact is alone sufficient to account for nearly all the casualties of which you have heard. The Spirit Lake murders arose from the killing of a white man's dog by the Indians. The white man in return, demanded and took the guns of the Indians. The Indians afterwards found the place of deposit of the guns and went and took them. This created mutual distrust, and final collision. Several were killed on the part of the whites and some four of the young women carried off. The affair at Des Moines is not exactly understood as yet. The Indians were trading with Woods, and after he was tired of them, he told them to go away and if they did not they would be taken by the troops. They seemed to have become offended at something, and, it is said, killed Woods, the clerk of the store, and a brother of his, robbed the store and left for Missouri.

Preparations were nearly completed to pursue the murderers when the panic sat in here, and diverted the attention of the commander at Fort Ridgley to the scenes transacting nearer home. The settlers need something in the shape of a military demonstration in the country between here and the Fort to satisfy them. The demonstration is now going forward. There is no need of alarm.

Yours truly, CHAS. S. BRYANT.

From the Minnesotian, April 20.

We had the pleasure of meeting in St. Paul, on Saturday, Hon S[illegible]t. A. D. BALCOMBE, of Winona, directly from the Seat of War." He has been passing some two weeks in the Blue Earth Valley, and was up there when the war panic broke out.

He authorizes us to state that not a drop of white blood has been shed upon the waters of the Blue Earth, the Watonwon, or any other of its branches.

No hostile Indians have been nearer to Makato than Spirit Lake and its immediate neighborhood, away down on the Iowa line. The whole thing is a humbug from beginning to end.

The panic seized some of the settlers on the Watonwon, hearing of the Iowa outrages, and when the peaceable annuity Indians came down to commence making sugar, some of the settlers packed up and fled. Seeing fires on the prairies west and south of them at night, they concluded it was the burning of cabins. On arriving at Mankato and St. Peter, they had succeeded in drawing facts of this character from their vivid imagination.

B. H. RANDALL, Esq., from Fort Ridgely, was also in the city on Saturday, and confirms fully what we have stated above. He says all the Indians were fleeing from the sugar-bush to the Fort for protection, scared nearly out of their skins.

TRAVERSE, Thursday, April 16, 1857.

GEORGE: The excitement is over; the citizens have returned to their homes, having been protected by the five stone buildings in St. Peter, belonging to Gov. GORMAN, Mr. SWIFT, and the Hotel, some of which were well fortified with eight inch plank, with port holes cut through in order to shoot the natives as [illegible]. There was a great deal of suf[illegible] channel, coming in as they [illegible] of clothing and food.

[illegible] went out from St. Peter on Sunday, [illegible] that from 300 to 700 Indians were [illegible] all possible speed, carrying [illegible] Indians killing all that [illegible] their escape, burning houses, &c.

Now, the whole matter is about this: A few drunken Indians wanted credit of some traders out on the Des Moines River, which was refused. A difficulty ensued, in which the whites were the first aggressors; and when the Indians became exasperated, they commenced retaliation, and killed a number of the citizens in that settlement and fled towards the Missouri.

Not a single hostile Indian has been seen within one hundred miles of this place; and from all I can learn of the reported engagement I spoke of to you on Monday, is that a small party went out from Mankato, saw some Indians running, fired on them, saw four fall, ran back, and never looked to see if they were dead. Now, I presume they only saw a small piece of blanket on a bush, shot at it and run; and one man fell down, dropped his flask, which saved his life by two balls striking, as he says. It now turns out that no man was killed at all, nor an Indian found dead.

I suppose M'LEOD and General DODD are now looking for that bush with the blanket on it, and if they find it, they will be sure that an Indian once owned the blanket and has cruelly deserted it, leaving it exposed to the merciless grasp of our Minnesota militia.

Affectionately, G. H. SPENCER.

LETTER FROM GEN. SHIELDS.

FARIBAULT, Rice Co., M. T., Wednesday, April 15, 1857.

To the Editors of the Pioneer and Democrat:

GENTLEMEN: Rumors have been in circulation in this region of the Territory for several days, that a band of Indians was in the vicinity of Mankato, burning houses and killing settlers. The post boy has this moment arrived from St. Peter's, and others have come in from the Blue Earth County, and all state there is not the slightest foundation for these absurd reports.

I hope the papers of the Territory will hasten to correct any false impression on the subject, as we know if they get into circulation in the East, they will have the effect to deter emigrants from bringing their families to this Territory.

You may declare with truth that there is neither hostility or sign of hostility among the Indian tribes in the Territory. Yours, truly, JAMES SHIELDS.

THE OTHER SIDE AGAIN.

Private letters received in this City from Mankato, M. T., up to April 20, give more serious accounts of the Indian troubles than the newspaper reports have afforded. We copy:

MANKATO, Wednesday, April 20, 1857.

War is the order of the day here. The Indians are plundering all around. Troops are constantly arriving, which will soon crush the war, or, at least, we hope so. Three companies of regulars arrived to-day from Fort Snelling, and report that a large number of Indian traders in the region where the disturbances broke out were killed. Others barely escaped with their lives. Thousands of dollars' worth of property was carried off or destroyed; how much I shall lose I do not know as yet, [the writer is in the fur trade,] but probably not much ultimately, as the Government guarantees all losses of that kind. The Indians succeeded in capturing a good supply of ammunition, blankets and horses. Several women are in captivity.

Yours, R. W.

The Washington Union of Saturday has the following:

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT—INDIAN DIFFICULTIES.—The Commissioner of Indian Affairs has received advices which confirm the recent newspaper reports of the Indian difficulties in Iowa and the southern portion of Minnesota, but no particulars of additional interest are given.

Indian Troubles in Nebraska.

PLATTSBURG, N. T., Saturday, April 18, 1857.

Correspondence of the St. Louis Intelligencer.

GENTLEMEN: Yesterday a company of men arrived here from Salt Creek—about 50 miles back—stating that they were obliged to leave their homes there, on account of the Indians, which were destroying all their property and stock, and making sad ravages through that section of country. They are Pawnees, and the same band which gave Col. MANNERS so much trouble, while making the United States Survey, one year ago last Fall, and have since committed innumerable depredations upon the whites, almost too intolerable to bear. To-day, a large number of the settlers, accompanied by Gen. THAYER and others, started in pursuit of the Indians, hoping to reclaim a part of the property stolen by them, or else raise a mass with them. It is supposed that none of the Salt Creek country will be settled until there is some disposition made of these Indians.

From New-Mexico—Indian Murders.

The St. Louis papers have dates from New Mexico to March 17. A letter from Albuquerque, o that date, says:

"A Mexican from La Joya, came here on Monday of last week, saying that on Tuesday, a party of ten men from Casa Colorada, were at the mountains, with teams and carretas for wood, that the Indians came upon them, and killed nine of the men. The bodies of the nine men butchered, had been found by th inhabitants and brought into the settlements, and on that night were lying unburied at Casa Colorado. Mr. GERMAN had taken, in writing, the names of all of them, and named the names in town. Mr. CLARK, Justice master for the Government, at tols place, returned on Saturday night from the county of Valencia, where the killing and robbery occured. He confirms all the previous statements. The bodies of the deceased were buried on Friday.

It appears the Mexicans were unarmed, that they turned to flee for the settlements, when they were attacked, that the Indians followed and slew them as they fled, and that the one last killed was found dead but a short distance beyond the settlements. Mr. CLARK also reports that during the same week, and while he was down there, the Indians came within three miles of Los Lunas and drove off two herds, that the number stolen was not then known. The inhabitants had raised a company of their neighbors and gone in pursuit of the stock and Indians. Other depredations are spoken of, of recent occurrence in the County of Socorro.

Within the last three or four weeks the troops have scouted from the posts of Alburquerque, Forts Stanton, Craig Thorne and Fillmore—generally successful in two instance in overtaking the Indians. In others the Indians had too much the start of the troops to be overhauled. On the 8th inst., Captain GIBBS, rifles, started out from Fort Fillmore in the pursuit of Indians who had run off some animals belonging to the surveying party in charge of Mr. GARRETSON, Deputy Surveyor of the Territory; and on the 9th the trail was struck about five miles from Robiero, and going toward Cook's Spring.

The robbers, seven in number, were seen about 1 o'clock P. M., overtaken—and immediately attacked—with a result of six Indians killed, and one severely wounded. It was thought he would die. The stolen animals were recovered, and all the effects of the robbers captured, such as bows, arrows, knives, blankets, &c. In this affair Capt. GIBBS was severely wounded by a lance in the hands of the chief, whom he had shot. The men behaved with great gallantry. Corporal COLLINS fell in charge of the party after Capt. GIBBS was wounded and compelled to dismount, having become very faint from loss of blood.

Lieut. BAKER, rifles, left Fort Thorne on the 10th inst., at 9 o'clock P. M., for Mr. VIGIL's camp, and found that the Indians had driven off all his animals. He took up the trail, crossing the river about 18 miles below Fort Thorne, following it over 70 miles, passing through a terrible cañon and a very rugged country. The party camped at 3 o'clock A M., on the 11th, being unable to follow the trail further at night. At daylight the guide discovered the trail, and the Indians were found in camp a few hundred yards off.

The camp was attacked, (Shawano's band,) completely surprising it; a part of their arms, all their animals and camp equipage were captured. The Indian party was from 15 to 20 strong, and Lieut. BAKER is satisfied that eight were desperately wounded, and that scarcely one escaped unhurt. In this action, private PATRICK SULLIVAN was killed. Sergeant DUGAN, Corporal BRADY, Bugler REID, and private DOUGHERTY were wounded. Five horses were also wounded.

The Strike on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad—Exciting Times.

From the Baltimore American, Saturday.

The armed burden train, with which the officers of the road were determined to force a passage, left the Camden station yesterday, immediately after the Frederick train. Resolute men were selected for engineers and brakesmen, and on the locomotive were several officers of the Company, armed with the authority of the Governor to resist every attempt to obstruct the operations of the road. After passing the bridge over Gwyn's Falls, where a strong body of city police were stationed, the rioters, and the sympathisers with them, were seen by squads along the line of the track. At Jackson's bridge, where the Washington turnpike crosses the railroad they had gathered in great force, probably to the number of two or three hundred, some of whom, it is presumed, were mere spectators. As the train came on, a man jumped on to the track and waved his hat as a signal to stop the train.

The engineer pushed on and the same man then ran to a switch and appeared to make an effort to change it, which, at the speed the train was then running, would probably have resulted in a serious accident. Before, however, he could effect his purpose the train was on the switch and he gave it up.

The moment the train reached the rioters there was a fierce volley of bricks and stones, mingled with the rapid discharge of fire-arms. The parties on the locomotive were specially aimed at, and were forced to protect themselves by crouching down below the woodwork of the engineer's house. The glass sashes of the locomotive were shattered by the vollies, so only a pane being unbroken. As the two rear cars of the train, containing the armed posse, came up, the attack was again wieldly renewed. Large stones were thrown with determined force through the windows, and the sharp cracking of revolvers gave evidence of the murderous intentions of the assailants. The Company's posse immediately replied to the attack with a discharge of musketry, which was effectual in knocking over two of the mob. This determined measure evidently took the rioters by surprise, and, as the train passed on, they were seen breaking and scampering in every direction, apparently in the utmost consternation. Had it been possible then to bring the train to a sudden stop no doubt the ringleaders might have been secured, and an unmolested passage secured for the other trains.

Three-quarters of a mile further on, in a cutting, another body of rioters were seen, numbering from fifty to a hundred. As the train reached them there were the same vollies of stones and discharges of fire-arms, whilst the more desperate rushed toward the cars with the intention of getting on and stopping them. A prompt volley of musketry made them aware of the danger of the attempt, and they fell back with the most apparent haste to get out of danger. One or two dropping shots were fired after the train and were replied to by those on board, but the parties were then too far apart to do damage.

From this point the train ran on without stoppage or molestation, until Lee's water station, one mile this side of Ellicott's Mills was reached. Here small bodies of men were seen on the hill and hiding behind the water station. It was determined to stop the train and give these parties a chance for the fight they were seeking. When the locomotive drew up, the rioters advanced and commenced the attack. One man who was disguised by a handkerchief tied around the the lower part of his face, fired at one of the officers on the locomotive. The shot was soon answered with a musket ball, and deeming discretion the better part of valor, the disguised assassin furnished a specimen of running that despite the serious surroundings of the scene was laughable. Another of the rioters as he climbed the hill was knocked over, but not being seriously injured, recovered his feet and continued his flight. When he reached the top of the hill and was out of range he waved his cap in defiance and then left.

Word was immediately given to the party on the train to pursue the rioters, and was promptly obeyed. The rioters after getting over the hill again drew together and fired on their pursuers as they advanced. They however broke before a volley of musketry and an animated pursuit then commenced. The officers separated in pursuit of different individuals and for five or ten minutes there was an irregular fire, the rioters gradually gaining the woods and making good their escape. One of their number get run down and captured. He was taken on the train and hand-cuffed, and on arriving at Ellicott's Mills committed for trial before the Howard County Court. He gave his name as Robert Smiley, and had only been four days out of jail, where he had been committed for an assault on his wife. No arms were found in his possession, and he has never been in the employ of the Company. He protested vigorously that he had nothing to do with the attack on the train, and had only come out to see "what was going on." There was doubt, however, that he accompanied the rioters and participated in the assault.

The rioters at this point did not appear to number more than twenty men, but they were of the most determined class. They were mostly armed, generally with pistols though several guns were seen amongst them, and gave evidence of a strong disposition to show fight until the heavier arms and superior determination of their opponents convinced them they had no chance of success.

SERIOUS COLLISION BETWEEN THE MILITARY AND RIOTERS.—A MAN THROWN FROM THE TRACK.

[TELLGRAPHIC]

BALTIMORE, Saturday, May 2—10 P. M.

The Railroad Riot is not yet fully quelled. The evening freight trains were sent out under a military guard, consisting of three companies that were ordered out by the Governor. On reaching Jackson's bridge they were fired on by the rioters, the military returning the fire briskly, killing one rioter and wounding others. The trains then passed on.

SUNDAY, May 3—9 P. M.

The riot still continues. This morning the train which was returning with the military guard was thrown from the track by the rioters, and several cars were smashed. Two soldiers were injured; one of them had a leg broken. Two military companies were sent out to the Relay House this afternoon, to protect the freight trains which were to come in. The result we have not yet heard.

The Orange County Murder—The Body Recognized.

From the Newburg Daily News, Saturday.

From some information received, the Coroner and Sheriff EDWARDS went to Shawangunk last night, and on the reassembling of the Jury this morning, witnesses were introduced who positively identified the body as that of SARAH BLOOM, who belonged in that town.

The first witness was Mr. JOHN COOLEY, of Shawangunk, who testified that he was well acquainted with SARAH BLOOM.

A sister, JANE BLOOM, was then called to the stand. She testified that her sister had been in Pennsylvania the past Winter, but had returned about the 1st of April. Her description of the size of her sister, corresponded with that of the body. The last she had heard of her was that she was at the house of DANIEL CONSTABLE, in Newburg, on Tuesday afternoon.

Mr. WM. JENKINS was the next witness. He said that SARAH BLOOM came into Mr. KEMP'S store about 5 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, and requested witness to take her out to Shawangunk. Said that the person who brought her to Newburg had left her, she having missed him. Witness procured a conveyance, and started with her about 9 o'clock. Took the horse from Mr. WEYGANT'S.

S. W. FULLERTON, Esq., who conducted the examination, questioned this witness closely as to all the facts and circumstances connected with the journey. Witness said that Miss BLOOM wanted to go to the house of Mr. MASTEN, at the Basin, and he desired witness to let her get out in the road when within a short distance of Mr. M.'s house, as she did not want to have the carriage driven to the door. He got back to Newburg about 3 o'clock in the morning, and did not make any stops on the road, either going or returning.

Witness was then questioned as to his belief of the identity of the body with that of SARAH BLOOM. SARAH had very perfect teeth—those in the body were decayed and had been plugged. Very sure that SARAH had no decayed teeth—mouth not like her. "the body is not that of Sarah Bloom." The hair is unlike her's. SARAH BLOOM'S occupation was that of a tailoress.

Mr. JENKINS is as positive that the body is not that of SARAH BLOOM as the other witnesses are to the contrary. Still, he admits that there are striking similarities in marks on the body with those known to have been on SARAH BLOOM. So far as we can learn from him in conversation, his idea that the body is not that of SARAH BLOOM is founded almost entirely upon the dissimilarity of teeth.

The testimony of JANE BLOOM was very positive as to the identity with her sister. Among other things she spoke of a sore which SARAH showed on her arm on Sunday morning. A spot on the arm of the body corresponded exactly. She said to one of the Jurors, if that is my sister, there is such and such a scar on one eyebrow. Again the tally was exact. So with peculiarities about the toes. It does not seem possible she could be mistaken. SARAH BLOOM is missing, that is certain. So far there is no evidence to show her whereabouts since Mr. JENKINS swears he left her at midnight Tuesday, near the house of Mr. MASTEN. Mr. MASTEN'S evidence now becomes important.

A partial post mortem examination was made this morning, which resulted in showing that abortion had taken place within a short time. The health of the deceased had been very poor for some time, and she was unable to pursue her accustomed avocations.

It has been decided to have the funeral services at the Court-House, at 9 o'clock on Sunday morning.

Flourishing Condition of the Slave-Trade.

From the Savannah Republican, April 30.

Notwithstanding the diligent exertions of the principal nations of Christendom to put down this traffic, there are indications that it has largely increased during the past few years, and bids fair to do so in a still greater ratio, for a time to come. The great centre of the trade is Cuba, where we are reliably informed, there is a large and thoroughly organized company, with a heavy capital, devoted to the business. During the past few weeks the following vessels have been purchased, at the prices named, by houses in Havanna, to be added, it is generally believed, to the African line of slave traders, which is said to number at this time one hundred and fifty sail:

The schooner Talulah, of New Orleans, for $7,300

A schooner—name unknown—of Wilmington, N. C., for $5 400.

Schooner Abbott Devereux, of Savannah, for $6,500.

Brig R. B. Lawton, of Newport, R. I., trading between Savannah and the Cuban ports, for $9,500.

Berk Minnetoka, 324 tons, of New-York, for $13,500.

Schooner Joseph H. Records, (well known from her previous engagement in the trade) of Newport, R. I., for $6,500.

To these may be added the brig Putnam and bark Clara B. Williams, recently purchased by a commercial house in Havana.

We have received this information from a source which we consider entirely reliable, and it will astonish some people who have been accustomed to believe that the importation of a cargo of slaves from the coast of Africa is a rare occurrence.

NEW-YORK CITY.

THE ANNIVERSARIES.

The Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions.

The first public service connected with the Religious Anniversaries of the present year took place last evening at Rev. Dr. ALEXANDER'S Church in the Fifth-avenue, when Rev. Dr. CULBERTSON, of the Shanghae Mission, China, preached the anniversary sermon for the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church. The handsome edifice was crowded with a select audience, among whom were several influential clergymen of the City. After the prayer, and previous to the sermon, the following abstract from the Twentieth Annual Report of the Board was read:

The Board acknowledge their gratitude to Almighty God that the missionary work has been prosecuted another year, with but few serious interruptions, and in many respects with results of a highly encouraging nature.

FINANCES.

The receipts, from all sources, (including a small balance from last year of $24 36,) have been.....$205,768 00
Expenditures..... 218,520 17

Leaving an Indebtedness of..... $12,752 17

This is the first time in the history of the Board that a debt of any considerable extent has been incurred, and it is greatly regretted by those who have the chief control of its affairs. It could not have been avoided, however, without seriously curtailing the ordinary labors of the older missions, or abandoning entirely several enterprises that had received the sanction of the General Assembly, and no doubt the sanction and cordial approval of the great Head of the Church.

MISSIONARIES AND ASSISTANT MISSIONARIES SENT OUT.

Thirty-two missionary laborers have been sent out during the year. Six of these were designated to the missions in China; two to Northern India; one to Western Africa; and the remainder to the various missions among the Indian tribes of our own country. Nine others are under appointment, and will leave for their respective fields of labor during the coming Summer, unless the depressed state of the Treasury shall prevent their being sent out.

MISSIONS, MISSIONARY LABORERS, CHURCHES, SCHOOLS, PRINTING PRESSES, ETC.

The Board has missions among ten of the principal Indian tribes of our own country; one for the Jews in New-York City; one for the Chinese in California; two in South America; two in Western Africa; one in Siam; three in China; two in Northern India; and at the same time extends pecuniary aid to the Evangelical Societies of Belgium, Paris, Geneva, and to the Waldensian Synod. Connected with these various missions there are 72 ministers of the Gospel; 132 male and female assistant missionaries from this country; 69 native helpers; 55 schools of various grades, and 4,284 pupils; 31 churches, and 940 communicants, of whom about 150 have been brought to the knowledge of the Saviour during the past year. Six printing presses have been industriously employed at the same time in furnishing the printed page to be circulated in China, Siam and India.

Encouraged by these tokens of good, and looking to God for its continued favor, the Board would earnestly invite the heartier cooperation of the friends of the Redeemer, that the glad tidings of salvation may be extended until they reach every human heart on the face of the earth.

The sermon was very appropriate to the occasion, and was otherwise unusually interesting. The text was Isiah, chap. xlix, v. 12: "Babold, these shall come from far; and lo, these from the north and from the west; and these from the land of Sinim." This prophecy, the preacher maintained, related to China and our duty to China, as a Christian nation, was involved in its consideration. Regarding China as a land of peculiar interest to the Christian missionary, we had to consider the immensity of its population, and the religious condition of the people. The Chinese were idolaters, gross idolaters. All idolatry was based in a misconception of the character of God, and the nature of our relation to him. The Chinese, as a nation, were especially ignorant of the Divine character, of the worship due to the Divine Godhead, of the nature of sin and of man's position in the world, and of his destiny in the world to come. Still, even among a people so benighted, and so hemmed in by immemorial prejudices and traditions, the labor of the Christian missionary had done its good work. In spite of the numerous obstacles which had impeded it, Christianity was firmly planted there, and the recent revolution in that country had helped, and was helping its advance.

There was no collection taken up. The annual meeting of the Board will be held this afternoon, at the Mission House, in Centre street.

Ticket Swindling—The New Dodge.

The ever-vigilant wits of runners and ticket-swindlers have been severely taxed, since the passage of the new law for the protection of emigrants, in what way to exercise their vocation, without incurring the penalties of fine and imprisonment. The law prohibits the fraudulent sale of tickets of "Railroad, Steamboat, and Steamship Companies," but not of sailing vessels; and they have now hit upon the plan of sending California passengers by the way of Australia, in sailing vessels. This is done by naming a very high price for a California ticket, at the same time offering a passage by the way of Australia upon much better terms; by this dodge they expect to practice their impositions to any extent, and escape by a technical omission in the law to include sailing vessels.

A POOR OLD MAN SWINDLED.

J. C. CASWELL, a respectable man of 63 years, arrived in this City on the 22d ult., from Lawrence, Van Buren County, Mich., stopping on the way in Toronto, to see his friends, where he obtained a letter of introduction to a shipping agent in this City from JOHN CAMERON, Esq., a highly respectable banker. Mr. CASWELL is on his way to join his only daughter, living in Australia, with whom he expects to spend the remainder of his days. He was led astray by an emigrant runner, carried to a bogus ticket office, where the man behind the counter personated the shipping agent, opened and read the letter addressed to another man, swindled him out of his money, and afterwards kicked the poor old man out of doors. Mr. CASWELL then made a complaint before Recorder SMITH; the following is a copy of his affidavit:

City and County of New-York:—John C. Caswell being duly sworn says that on the 22d day of April, instant, he arrived in the City of New York from Lawrence, in the County of Van Buren, State of Michigan; that deponent came to the said City of New-York for the purpose for engaging his passage from the port of New-York to Australia; that deponent on his way to the City of New-York stopped at Toronto, Canada, for the purpose of seeing his brothers who resided there; that when in Toronto he received the annexed letter of introduction to R. W. Cameron, Esq., a shipping agent, doing business in the City of New-York, from John Camerou, Esq., a banker in said city of Toronto; that when deponent arrived in the City of New-York, and when in the act of leaving the Hudson River Railroad cars, in which he came to the City of New-York, he was accosted by a person, whom deponent is informed and believes, is an emigrant runner, who asked deponent if deponent wished to go aboard a ship; and deponent answered in the affirmative: he then asked deponent if deponent wanted lodgings, and deponent said—no: that he wished to go immediately to the shipping office of R. W. Cameron: that the said Runner then said that he knew where said office was, and that he would bring deponent there; that deponent told him that he thought he could find said office without his assistance, but that said Runner insisted upon showing deponent the said office of R. W. Cameron, and remained with deponent; that the said Runner then brought this deponent to the office No. 146 Liberty street, which, as deponent has since been informed and believes is kept by James Enright, and there introduced him to a person behind a counter or desk in said office as Mr. Cameron, that deponent immediately upon being introduced to said person asked "Is this Mr. Cameron's office?" and "Are you Mr. Camcron?" and the said person, whose name deponent is informed and believes is S. W. Gordon, said, in answer to deponent's said question, "Yes, I am Mr. Cameron, and this is Mr. Cameron's office;" whereupon I handed him the said annexed letter, saying, "This, then, is for you, I suppose," and he took it and said, "Yes, this is for me;" he then opened the letter, read it, and laid it aside, saying, "It is all right—I will do all I can for you;" that deponent, then believing that the said Gordon was R. W. Cameron, took from his pocket one hundred and thirty dollars, and handed the same to said Gordon, saying, "This is all the money I have in the world—take it, and do for me the best you can; you have your friend's letter there, and I trust that you will do me all the justice that you can; I throw myself on you as a friend; give me a ticket, and return to me as much of it as you can, to help me along;" that the money was then counted, and Gordon said, "There is one hundred and thirty dollars here," and handed deponent back ten dollars, saying, "That will be enough for you until the ship sails;" he then sent a boy with deponent to a tavern, saying that he would call on deponent in the afternoon and give deponent his ticket; that Gordon, in the afternoon, gave deponent a ticket; that deponent has since been informed and believes that he has been grossly defrauded; that he took from him twenty dollars more than said ticket was worth, fraudulently, and with the intent to cheat this deponent; that when deponent learned that he had been defrauded as aforesaid, he called on said Gordon and requested said Gordon, in a civil and polite manner, to return to him the $20 which deponent had paid him over and above the value of the tickets; that said Gordon abused deponent and threatened to strike deponent; and that deponent, to avoid further trouble with said Gordon, turned to leave his said office; and then said Gordon rushed upon deponent, struck deponent upon the back of his head, and attempted to kick deponent.

Sworn before me this 29th day of April, 1857.

JAMES M. SMITH, Jr., Recorder.

Signed J. C. CASWELL.

TORONTO, Tuesday, April 21, 1857.

R. W. CAMERON, Esq., New-York: My Dear Sir: The bearer of this, JOHN C. CASWELL, is a poor old man, who is about to join his only child—a married daughter—in Australia, who promises to take care of him during the remainder of his life. Will you be so kind as to give him a good berth, as cheap as you can, for he has but a small sum to bear his way upon, in one of your fast vessels going out from New York, and oblige my dear Sir, yours very truly,

Signed JOHN CAMERON.

The ticket, for which he was charged $120, was a genuine one, bought at the office of Mr. R. W. CAMERON, setting forth that $100 has been paid by J. C. CASWELL, for a second-cabin passage in the packet ship Rambler.

The case of the old gentleman is a pitiable one, penniless and alone in a strange place, and a voyage of 8,000 miles to go before he can find his only child. Any further information about him, until the ship leaves, may be obtained of Mr. SEMLER, in the basement of the City Hall.

GEORGE W. MORTON, City Inspector.

The Clergy and the Young Men's Christian Association.

To the Editor of the New York Daily Times:

You have published the fact that twelve distinguished clergymen have withdrawn their connection from the Young Men's Christian Association. Can you tell me whether any are left in it,—or if any how many? By the wholesale resignation is the Society now composed only of lay members?

AN INTERESTED OUTSIDER.

Not quite. For the twelve that withdrew twenty-eight, at least, remain. They are as follows:

FRENCH NEWS AND GOSSIP.

The Case of Carpentier again—Controversy between Paris Journals on American Law—The decline of population in France—Ecclesiastical and Political Movements—The Conspiracies—Approaching Elections—Russian visitors—The Revue on American affairs—Miscellaneous.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

PARIS, Thursday, April 16, 1857.

Last week I signalized to you a violent attack of M. GRANIER DE CASSAGNAC in the columns of the Constitutionnel against American justice as exhibited in the trial of CARPENTIER, GERLET and company.—The intemperate language of this article aroused the Débats to a defence of what it styled the Anglo-Saxon law, a defence in which it was clearly shown that English and American law had nothing valuable to learn from France. M. DE CASSAGNAC, no doubt astonished at the defence of the Débats, replies again in three columns; and although he this time avoids denunciations, and attempts an argument, he is still less happy than before.

M. DE CASSAGNAC declares that there is no Anglo-Saxon law; that the procedures now in use in England and the United States were borrowed from France more than two centuries ago; that these procedures were a legacy of barbarism, and that the little change which has been impressed on them in England or the United States has not taken from them their character of feudality. France, on the contrary, found as early as two centuries ago, that these barbarous codes were not compatible with its advanced state of civilization, and they were abolished to give place to a code which, in its results, is the perfection of human justice. And what would you suppose M. DE CASSAGNAC indicates as the principal feature in this grand reform? The introduction of the public minister into the trial, and the direct examination of the defendant by the presiding officer!

The Débats replies again, that although there is no written code in England like, for example, the Code Napoleon, that there is yet a collection of codes and traditions, which may be styled Anglo Saxon law, and which afford ample, ready and complete justice. The Débats denies that these laws had their origin in France. It attacks the so called reform which introduces a Government officer into the tribunal, and criticises this feature of the present code with such severity that I have been astonished to see this journal escape a warning. In England and the United States the people insist upon judging themselves; their liberal institutions and their habits of self-reliance naturally suggest the Jury. In France, on the contrary, such a system of law could not subsist; it is opposed to the spirit of the Government which now reigns, and which governs and directs every law tribunal by its regularly deputed officer. The Débats demands which system exhibits the most progress? It is now the turn of M. DE CASSAGNAC to reply, and it is certain that he will not allow so good an opportunity to escape of threatening the Débats with the law on the press.

This affair of CARPENTIER and Company continues to furnish a prolific text for French quodlibets against American jurisprudence. The proceedings of the trial are minutely reported for two law journals here, and their publication, whether justly or not, are exercising an unhappy influence against American justice in the minds of the French people. The duration of the proceedings, the absurd frivolities that are permitted at each step, and the extraordinary exigencies of the defence, are the chief points of criticism.

The decision of the Supreme Court in the Dred Scott case also furnishes the Constitutionnel a text for a four-column leader against American institutions. All the journals, more or less, were lending themselves to discussions on American affairs, when happily the London Times launched, three days ago, a sudden and violent leader on the causes of the decadence of France—it took the decadence as a fixed fact, and only spoke of the causes—and the whole French press bounded as if an English broadside had fallen in their midst. The Times article will last them a week, and during that time the semi-civilized Americans will be allowed to rest.

"The alliance of the Pope with Israel," a new word discovered in France, is making a sensation. It was uttered on the union of the Church with the Jew PEREIRE, in the celebration of the Bordeaux and Marseilles Railroad at Toulouse. The Cardinal DONNET, in his speech on that occasion expressed the hope that railroads would serve materially in the propagation of the christian religion. M. PEREIRE, who is constantly augmenting his fortune in the construction of these roads, naturally abjured his Judaism for the moment in the same sense. But notwithstanding the declarations of M. PÉREIRE, we may be permitted to doubt that he lent his valuable aid to this road with any such meritorious view, or that bringing the provinces in contact with Paris is going to afford them, under a religious point of view, all the advantages claimed. The French people have seized upon the word progress with a frenzy, and with their rapidly-changing public opinion, it will be curious to see where this new-born idea will conduct them. You need not be astonished at strange results.

But as if old Notre Dame repudiated these onward tendencies of the age, and speaking for the church, denounced these apostacies from the traditions of the past, on the very day the Cardinal DONNET was glorifying material progress at Toulouse, Father FELIX was thundering anathemas in the old Metropolitan Church of Paris against industrial enterprises and the spirit of speculation these have engendered. You may have observed that I have made frequent notices lately of the movements of the church on this subject of material progress. It is because the church has suddenly awakened to its true position on this subject, and is really entering into the spirit of the age with enthusiasm. The movement alarms a few of the old fogies of the church, such as the Père FELIX; but he will soon be borne down in the current, and his voice extinguished. To see the name of the Pope signed at the head of a list of subscription to a joint stock company was a shock for which the non-progressionists were not prepared. When the church shall have been fairly launched into these industrial enterprises, and when the country, under the influence of an immense net work of railways, shall acknowledge their great utility to the civilization as well as to the wealth of the nation, you will see the ultra-montane party in the church rise up and declare that they were the instruments of this change; and then, if they gain an ascendency in the church, you may count on republicanism as a fixed form of government in France.

M. LEDRU ROLLIN, it appears, not satisfied with the important rôle the journals make him play in the late conspiracy at Paris, has published a letter on the subject in the London papers. These papers were all seized at the frontier of France, and for one day we were deprived of our English news on his account. The French Post-Office often takes a deal of trouble for a small affair, and deranges a good many people for what does not at all interest them. In connection with this case of conspiracy, we have a profitable commentary on the restrictive law imposed on the press. At the moment of the arrests a fortnight ago a report which was but the echo of these arrests, started somewhere in Germany, and from there travelled to England, and no doubt to the United States, that an attempt had actually been made upon the life of the Emperor. The report arrived at Paris and had free course here for several days as an event that had recently transpired. Yet nothing could be more untrue, and with a free press the report never could have lived a day, and in all probability would never have had birth. It is untrue that M. BASTIDE Minister of Foreign Affairs under the Republic, was implicated in this affair. A domiciliary visit was made, but as no documents of a compromising nature were found, the Ex-Minister was not arrested. M. JULES FAVRE, the distinguished criminal advocate and a warm Republican, is going to stand as an opposition candidate to the Corps Legislatif for Lyons. The Republican Party is strong at Lyons, and it would not be surprising if M. FAVRE was returned. His position in the Assembly would be a difficult one. For Paris, the Republican Party are circulating a paper with the names of Messrs. CAVAIGNAC, DUFAURE, GOUDCHAUX and BETHMONT as candidates for the Assembly. It is hardly probable that these candidatures will become serious before the ballot box.

The story of the Father Jesuit who put himself in lottery, in order to raise funds to erect a church, seems to be confirmed. The lottery, however, does not succeed as well as was anticipated. Nevertheless a large number of tickets have been taken, and the drawing will take place.

The Bonapartists, with the exception of the Prince JEROME and his two children, the Princess MATHILDE and the Prince NAPOLEON, are in a great fever of excitement over their allies, the Russians, now in town, and soon to arrive. I make the exception in favor of Prince JEROME, because, as the brother of the first Emperor, and as an ancient enemy of Russia, he has never favored, if he has not opposed, the present Russian alliance. Gens. LUDERS and TODLEBEN are now the lions of the Paris saloons, and the courted of the Marshals and Generals of the French army. A few days ago Gen. TODLEBEN dined at the Tuileries, with all the Marshals of France—the Prince JEROME, Count REILLE, VAILLANT, MAGNAN. Count CASTELLANE, Count BARAGUAY D'HILLIERS; PELISSIER, Duke of Malakoff; Count RANDON, CANROBERT and BOSQUET. The men who were held at bey so long before the walls of Schastopol, are the first and most eager to do honor to the illustrious Muscovite engineer. Over the wine, mutual assurances are uttered that they never were enemies, even in the hottest of the conflict, that they mutually admired each other's genius and bravery, and regretted that they could not offer the hand of friendship instead of cutting each other's throat. A military alliance will be the result of all this love-making between the two countries—an alliance into which, it may be safely concluded, England will not enter. The Grand Duke CONSTANTINE and suite, and the Empress-mother and suite, will also be the recipients from the palace of extraordinary and unusual honors. Lord COWLEY has commenced to look cross already.

At a late sale of autographs, a letter from NAPOLEON, then only a General, to his brother JOSEPH, was sold for two hundred dollars. NAPOLEON was in despair at hearing that JOSEPHINE was sick. He writes: "give me hope; tell me the truth: you know my love, and how ardent it is. You know that I have never loved before, that JOSEPHINE is the first woman I adore, Her sickness throws me into despair." The letter, which was written during the campaign of Italy in the fourth year of the Republic, terminated with these singular words: "Adieu, my brother; I am destined by nature to be brilliant only in appearances."

The April number of the Revue des Deux Mondes contains two long articles on American subjects. The first is from the pen of M. C. LAVOLLEE, entitled "An American Embassy in Japan." In this article the able reviewer gives a résumé of Commodore PERRY'S history of the Japan Expedition, and attaches himself especially to bringing into relief the contrasts in the two systems of diplomacy as displayed by the American and Japanese officials when brought into each other's presence. While not attempting to attenuate the great results which are to flow from this stroke of the American government, or to detract from the glory which is its due, the French reviewer cannot restrain himself from the indulgence of a few thrusts at the somewhat pompous manner in which the Commodore and the Yankee nation generally set up their claims for this glory. The other article of the Revue is on the Life and Correspondence of THOMAS JEFFERSON, by CORNELIUS DEWITT, son-in-law of M. GUIZOT, and author of a new life of WASHINGTON. The article is a high eulogium on the talent and character of the great founder of American democracy. In this article, JEFFERSON is compared to WASHINGTON in this sense, that, what WASHINGTON commenced with the sword, JEFFERSON finished and firmly seated with the pen; that the great and solid liberal institutions of the country are thus as much due to one as to the other.

It was lately stated that the Memoirs of Talleyrand would soon be published; but I was right in a late letter in putting the period of publication of these Memoirs in 1868, for a notice has just appeared from the legatees of the Prince, declaring that under no consideration will the Memoirs be published before the period fixed by the deceased in his will—thirty years after death.

The representations of the Italian Dramatic Company are not so fruitful in pecuniary results as the great success of the two preceding seasons had led the company to hope. The fact is, Madame RISTORI is pushing her good fortune a little too far; for, however much the Parisians may admire the great artiste, it must be recollected that her tongue is a foreign one, a fact that contributes largely towards empty seats in the cheaper parts of the house, and affects to some extent the whole.

Please inform the theatrical critic of the New-York Herald that the Odeon is not "a minor theatre in the suburbs of Paris." This extraordinary statement appears in a notice of the translation of M. PONSARD'S piece, "La Bourse," first played at that house. The Odeon is the "Second Théâtre Français"—the second of the only two to which the Government pays a subsidy to maintain the respectability of the dramatic art. It is, moreover, not only very large, but in point of architecture the finest theatrical or operatic building in Paris, and is situated in one of the most populous quarters, on the confines of the Quartier Latin and the Faubourg St. Germain.

You know the rage of French surgeons for plastic operations. There is an arborist (tree doctor) who has invented a plastic operation for trees! But it only resembles the operations of his confrères of the other branch in its nomenclature. Dr. ROBERT calls his operation plioplastie. It consists in this: when he hark of the tree is attacked by worms and the life of the tree endangered, as often occurs to elm and other shade trees, he shaves off all the rough bark down to the inner layer, and thus forces the tree to push out a new rough coat. He is now trying this operation, by order of Government, on a large number of diseased shade trees on the Champs Elysées.

MALAKOFF.

LITERARY GOSSIP FROM ABROAD.

The fifth volume of Macaulay's History of England is said to be nearly ready for the press, and may be expected in July. It will bring the narrative down to the death of WILLIAM III., in 1702. MACAULAY is in his fifty-seventh year, with indifferent health. He is said to have arrived at the conclusion, already drawn by the public, that it is wholly useless to continue the idea of writing a History of England down to such a recent date as he originally intended. When two volumes first appeared, nearly nine years ago, he announced that he purposed "to write the History of England from the accession of King James the Second, down to a time which is within the memory of man still living." That is, down to the end of the American War, in 1783,—exactly the concluding period of Lord MAHON'S (now Earl of STANHOPE) History. In nine years, MACAULAY has written the annals, the close of JAMES' reign, and only the opening nine years of the reign of WILLIAM and MARY. At this slow rate, it would take ninety-one additional volumes and ninety one more years to bring the work down to 1783. Therefore, it is said, he has been persuaded to close his history at the death of QUEEN ANNE, in 1714—the actual close of the Stuart dynasty, as reigning monarchs.

The Duke of WELLINGTON is announced as President or Chairman of the next annual meeting (dinner) of the London Prioress' Pension Society. His Grace's name will probably attract a large company. He has never been suspected of any literary tendencies. On the other hand, his father, the "Iron Duke," was a great reader, as well as a very voluminous writer. His Dispatches and Orders occupy a dozen octavo volumes, and he has left behind him a Memoir, chiefly autobiographical, which contains his recollections of men and things from 1790 down to 1830. This will occupy at least three 8vo. volumes, and is in the hands of Lord STANHOPE, his literary executor. It is to be published without mutilation, and Lord STANHOPE has full liberty to delay its appearance for any reasonable time.

The literary executors of the late Sir ROBERT PEEL, anxious to publish his Memoirs with as little delay as possible, have taken the liberty of omitting proper names, in numerous instances, from a dread of giving pain to persons still living. The first volume, which appeared last year, contained PEEL'S own history of the passing of the Catholic Emancipation Bill of 1829. The concluding volume, just published, is devoted to two subjects—PEEL'S Premiership in 1834-5, and his granting Free Trade in 1845. Here, the omission of names sometimes actually makes the narrative obscure. It appears, from his own account, that PEEL was quite weary of the pains and dignities of official life, and had determined never again to resume political power. It is significant enough, that in the whole of PEEL'S account of the granting of Free-Trade, he never once mentions the name of Mr DISRAELI, who was such a thorn in his side all through that very personal encounter.

J. K. HERVEY, one of the parlor-poets, and ex-editor of the Athenæum, announces a new volume of verses. Another ex-editor, Mr. J. A. ST. JOHNS (formerly of the London Weekly Review,) has brought out a very eulogistic life of LOUIS NAPOLEON. The memoirs of MARMONT, Duc DE RAGUSA, which are now appearing in Paris, are extremely Anti-Bonapartish. Six volumes have been published, covering nearly all the Peninsular Campaign:—his own great defeat was at Salamanca, in 1812. It was MARMONT who surrendered Paris to the Allied Powers in 1814. From that time he adhered steadily to the Bourbons, and vainly endeavored to infuse courage into CHARLES X., in July, 1830. After that he was struck off the list of the French army, and went into exile. He died at Venice in 1852, and had employed the last twenty-five years of his life to writing a history of his own Times.

MARMONT has alluded so disparagingly of SOULT, who had leading command in Spain, that the heirs of the latter have determined to publish a journal of his exploits there, which SOULT wrote, merely for his own satisfaction. It will appear without any alteration whatever, and is looked for with much interest. Of all NAPOLEON'S generals, SOULT, born in 1769, (the generally-accepted date of NAPOLEON'S birth,) was the most fortunate. He seconded NAPOLEON gallantly at Waterloo, was twice Prime Minister under LOUIS PHILIPPE, was Ambassador to England at the coronation of VICTORIA, and died in 1851, nearly one year before WELLINGTON, (his old enemy at Toulouse in 1814,) and over 80 years after NAPOLEON'S death at St. Helena.

The present English Ministry positively refuse to reduce the duty on paper, being the last of what used to be called "Taxes on Knowledge." This duty amounts to between three and four cents on every pound weight of paper, no matter what its quality. Twenty years ago, the duty was six cents per pound. An English newspaper with a daily circulation of 20,000, (fourteen copies weighing a pound,) would consume about 202 tons per annum—which, at fourteen guineas a ton, makes within a fraction of £3,000 for this tax alone. CHARLES KNIGHT, who writes books as well as publishes them, gave evidence before a Committee of the House of Commons, to the effect that where he—editor of the Penny Cyclopædia and Penny Magazine—paid £80,000 for literary labor and copyright, he had also to disburse £50,000 for paper duty.

It is said that the admission tickets to the lectures of WILLIAM RUSSELL, the Crimean correspondent of the London Times, will be two guineas for the three lectures. This is piling up the price with a vengeance. Apropos of lectures, Mr. BARNUM is holding forth, with limited pecuniary results, in favor of the Maine Liquor Law.

The French Emperor has long had a particular literary project in petto, which (like everything else he is concerned in) is to be worked out at the public expense. This is the collection and publication, under proper editorship, of the entire correspondence of the First NAPOLEON. Including private as well as public epistles, there are said to be between 20,000 and 30,000 undoubted Napoleon letters scattered over the world. Nearly all of these can be obtained, or certified copies of them, and the whole collection, strongly marked, as nearly every separate letter is, with the writer's characteristics, cannot fail to be as full of interest as importance. Competent persons have been engaged since January, 1852, in hunting up, deciphering, arranging, transcribing and annotating this vast mass of public and private correspondence. Already nearly 15,000 separate letters have been fairly copied out, and this is justly considered as "breaking the back" of the undertaking. For, writing a bad hand at the commencement, NAPOLEON'S became nearly illegible as he advanced in years. He had so much to do, that he scarcely formed his words, sometimes making a syllable or two represent an entire word, and sometimes leaving sentences unfinished. The whole collection, which will soon be published, is likely to fill about fifty octavo volumes, solidly printed. To provide for the expense, though there can be little doubt that the sale will be remunerative, there has lately been granted, out of the public Treasury of France, the sum of 100,000 francs, ($20,000,) and it is promised that the first five volumes will contain Napoleonic letters from childhood to the marriage with JOSEPHINE, in 1795.

By the way, the parish register at Paris, recording this marriage, states NAPOLEON'S actual birthday not as Aug. 15, 1769, as reported by himself, and given in all his biographies, but as Feb. 5, 1768. The register of the marriage, signed by NAPOLEON and JOSEPHINE, is attested also by JOSEPH BONAPARTE, and several other members of the family. It would seem that when NAPOLEON found himself on the way to power, he did not wish to have it alleged against him that he was not a Frenchman by birth. He dropped a letter in his Italian name, (becoming BONAPARTE instead of BUONAPARTE,) and declared himself born in August, 1769, instead of February, 1768, because, between those dates, Corsica had been annexed to France. The later date, therefore, made him a Frenchman.

One of the English literary journals sharply declares that "Mr. THACKERAY is making five hundred pounds a week by abusing the Queen's uncles." If this be so no one need wonder at his delaying the commencement of his new serial novel, as he is to have only six thousand pounds sterling for twenty to twenty-four months' pretty hard labor with the pen.

THOMAS CARLYLE'S new, neat and cheap edition of all his works is going off so freely, all over England, that he is likely to clear some four or five thousand pounds by this reprint—being about as much as he originally obtained for the works themselves. There was some sort of understanding, it is said, that CARLYLE would visit this country, during the present year, on a lecturing tour. He is a good lecturer, with a strong voice, earnest manner, clear utterance, and undoubted Scottish accent, of the broadest kind. Thousands flocked to his lectures on "Hero Worship," in 1840. CARLYLE'S recent appointment as Trustee of the contemplated National Portrait Gallery of England, in the room of the late Lord ELLESMERE, will keep him on the other side of the Atlantic. There is no salary, and it is doubted whether CARLYLE knows the difference between a portrait by FRANK GRANT and one by LAURENCE OR REYNOLDS.

Return of one of Walker's Officers.

SIR: It will gratify many of those who have escaped with their lives from the disastrous wars of Nicaragua to learn that Captain KENNEDY, formerly the intimate friend and associate of Col. BYRON COLE, has arrived safely in New York, though in bad health, and suffering from wounds received in the battle of the Transit Road, and from a severe scald by the explosion of the steamer on the San Juan River.

Captain KENNEDY is one of the few who passed an honorable and blameless career in Nicaragua, and whose important services to the ill-fated Walker Expedition met with small favor and less gratitude. Captain KENNEDY was formerly a mariner, and was at one time in command of a schooner on Lake Nicaragua. He accompanied Col. COLE on the Chontales Expedition, and was present when that gallant officer fell before San Jacinto. His conduct has always been that of a soldier and a man of honor; and the writer of this letter can testify, that when others gave way to temptation, and took from helpless Indians, and from women and children, the little that belonged to them, this man's hands were always unstained by robbery or oppression. He, and a few others of his make, preferred honorable poverty, and even absolute want, to the sacrifice of a feeling or a principle.

At the battle of the Transit Road, when the enemy, looking over their barricade, reproached the Americans,—who hesitated for a moment, under a galling fire,—with cowardice—(a false accusation)—Captain KENNEDY, exasperated by the taunts, rushed almost alone to the barricade and fell backward under a shower of rifle balls, with several severe wounds. At San Jacinto he was among the few who kept in the rear, and with three or four others, checked the pursuing party of the Guatemalans.

VERON.

A Ministerial Crisis in Canada—Resignation of Mr. Cauchon.

From the Toronto Globe, April 30.

Yesterday afternoon it was whispered in the lobbies of the House that the Honorable JOSEPH CAUCHON, Commissioner of Crown Lands, had resigned his office, in consequence of differences between himself and his colleagues in reference to the North Shore Railway. The rumor speedily grew stronger, and strength swelled into the proportions of a great fact. It was announced that not only had the honorable gentleman resigned, but his resignation had been accepted, and he was coming down after the evening recess, to make his explanations to the House. Mr. CAUCHON was not in his place during the afternoon. Though Mr. DRUMMOND gave a broad hint that he would like information as to the cause of his absence, the Ministry preserved a discreet silence. It was evident that the hour of 7½ must come before the public anxiety could be relieved. It came in due course, and with it Mr. CAUCHON, who, after some trifling business had been disposed of, rose and read a correspondence with his late Premier, Colonel TACHE, in reference to his resignation.

The scene which ensued on the reading of the letters by Mr. CAUCHON beggars description. The personal altercation between that gentleman and Mr. Attorney-General MACDONALD was petty, mean, and undignified, and made some of the observers blush and others laugh. There was, in the first place, a direct contradiction of one another on a point of fact. Mr. CAUCHON said that Mr. MACDONALD had said so and so; Mr. MACDONALD denied it, and Mr. CAUCHON reiterated it, with circumstances, asserting that if it had not been for that, he would not have resigned. Then Mr. MACNEALN called Mr. Receiver-General MORRISON as a witness, who said he did not hear anything of the kind, which was, of course, mere negative evidence, and so the thing went on in the most petty and unpleasant way. Then Mr. MACDONALD accused Mr. CAUCHON of being absent from the meetings of Council, as if he had neglected his duties, and afterwards, in the most inconsistent manner, denied the right of that gentleman to tell anything which passed in Council. Thus it continued for an hour and a half, the actors every moment sinking lower in the estimation of those who witnessed their conduct.

Kansas—Address of the Free-State Convention to the People.

The Committee appointed by the Free State Convention held at Topeka, on the 10th of March, has issued a long and able address to the people of the United States in regard to the condition of affairs in the Territory. By far the larger portion of this document is devoted to a recital of the wrongs and outrages sustained by the inhabitants of the Territory from the first organization of its government until the present time. As the public have been made familiar with this history through our columns from time to time, it is not necessary to reprint this portion of their address. The conclusion, however, which is all that relates to the present position of the Free-State Party and to their plans and expectations for the future, is of public interest, and is as follows:

On the 10th of March a Free State Convention assembled at Topeka, and adopted a platform which will be found appended to this address. In that platform it will be seen that the Free-State men refuse to vote for delegates to a Constitutional Convention, under a register act which passed the last bogus Legislature. Late developements have proved the wisdom of this policy, for by the lists of qualified electors returned by the Sheriffs of the different counties, thousands of Free-State voters have been ignored, while the names of numerous unknown and mythical individuals are entered as "qualified electors." All the machinery of the election is to be controlled by Pro-Slavery partizans, and it would be suicidal for the Free-State party to go into an election in the face of such odds, and with their past experience.

Although the present Federal Administration owes its success to the impression that prevailed at the North that the Chief Executive would use his influence and authority towards securing the freedom of Kansas, it such should be the will of the people, we can see as yet no indication of any such policy on the part of Mr. BUCHANAN, and with moderation, yet firmness, we emphatically protest against the Federal appointments that have been made in the Territory, selected as they have been from the most guilty and obnoxious of our Pro-Slavery opponents.

Both President BUCHANAN, in his Inaugural, and Governor WALKER, in his letter of acceptance, have pledged themselves to obtain "an open, honest, and independent expression of opinion from the bona fide residents of Kansas." We look to see this pledge redeemed, and feel satisfied that if it is, the next delegate to Congress, and the next Legislature of Kansas, will be preëminently Free State, and that, with a Free Constitution, Kansas will come into the Union.

At the municipal election in Leavenworth City, held Monday, April 13, a Free-State Mayor was elected by a majority of 184, over all other opponents. This is the first time in the history of the city that a fair vote has been obtained, and the result may be regarded as significant of the pervading opinion in Kansas on the question of Freedom or Slavery.

Having thus delineated the course of events that have transpired in Kansas—having shown how the Free-State party, though embracing more than two-thirds of the actual settlers, have been deprived, through fraud and violence, of any representation in legislative assemblies, and of any voice in the enacting of laws or the selection of Territorial officials, and being threatened with the enforcement and adoption of a Slave Constitution, by Congress, for Kansas—we appeal with the deepest sincerity and earnestness to the Northern people, without distinction of party or creed, to aid in asserting such a national calamity. We ask but that Congress may adopt the Topeka Constitution, which has already passed the House, or that both it and the one that will be adopted by the Pro Slavery Convention in September be returned to the people of the Territory with an enabling act providing for a fair and honest vote of the bona fide residents. We ask no more than this—we can ask no less.

None are more devoted to our Union and our constitution than the Free State citizens of Kansas. For the institutions of our country none can have a deeper or more loyal attachment. But we believe the purity of our government, and the integrity of our institutions, can only be preserved by the admission of Kansas as a Free State. And such, we are convinced, are the convictions of a large majority of our population. Though the past is voiceful with the wrongs and oppressions to which we have been forced to submit; though the marks of a tyrannous hand with which we have been scourged, have not yet been effaced, we can forget it all and forgive, if simple justice is granted us in the future.

We wish but that the slavery or freedom of Kansas may be settled, once for all, by an honest and legal vote of the actual residents, in accordance with the principles of the organic act.

From our new made homes in the distant West, far from the comforts and conveniences of settled society, yet struggling amid the hardships and difficulties coincident with a border life, and suffering from the trials and sorrows to which we have been particularly subjected, we again appeal to Northern freemen to stand by us in the dark emergency that threatens our future progress and prosperity. Let Northern representatives be instructed to support our righteous prayers and claims, and let the people, in their sovereign capacity, rising in dignity and might, cheer us with their active sympathy and earnest cooperation.

Thus will the schemes and plots of political demagogues be foiled, and the freedom of our new State be attained. To the cause, and for the principles which have become endeared and sanctified through our sufferings, we acknowledge an unwavering devotion. Strong in the confidence of truth, reliant in the sincerity of our purpose, we cheerfully unfold our standard, on which is inscribed our watchword and our motto—"Free Kansas for Free Labor;" to realize which we pledge anew "our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor."

Letter from Dr. C. T. Jackson, on the National-Hotel Sickness.

To the Editor of the Boston Transcript:

I am surprised to see paragraphs going the rounds of the newspapers, in which the peculiar disorder which affected the inmates of the National Hotel, at Washington, is attributed to an alleged admixture of arsenic, or some other poison, with the food or water used in that hotel.

An intelligent Medical Committee made due inquiry into the origin of the disease, at the time it occurred, and gave, as the result of their investigations, the opinion that it was caused by gaseous emanations from the common sewer, which had a free opening into the cellar of that hotel, while the gases were prevented from escaping into the avenues and streets by air-tight stoppers or traps. This opinion all the facts in the case fully corroborate, and it will undoubtedly be sustained by a legal investigation, which I understand is to take place at Washington.

It is very easy to prove that the disorder in question did not originate from any poison contained in the food or water of the hotel, for it has been shown that persons who did not eat or drink in the hotel were as severely affected as those who did eat and drink there.

One such case came under my special and daily observation, during my stay at Washington, in the month of March last. It was that of a legal gentleman, who was employed in taking depositions on the subject of the National Hotel disease, who spent but six hours in the National Hotel, and who had occasion to examine the cellar and drains of the house. He perceived a very disagreeable odor in the room in which he was writing, and found it came from an old register which opened into the cellar. He went down into the cellar, and found the odor much stronger, and on arriving at the opening of the drain the blast of foul air was so strong as to extinguish the lamp he held in his hand; and the smell that arose from the drain was very offensive and almost intolerable.

This gentleman did not eat or drink anything in that hotel, and yet he was attacked with the same disorder as others who had been inmates of the hotel, and he suffered more than three weeks from it, and was not quite cured when I left Washington.

This one well ascertained case is sufficient to prove that the disorder was not produced by poison mixed with food or drink. I heard of several others of the same nature, but am not personally cognizant of the facts.

From what I was able to learn, I am perfectly convinced that the disorder at the National Hotel arose wholly from gaseous emanations from the drains connected with the common sewers, and it is highly probable that the very warm days of February last contributed to the production of this poisonous miasma.

No chemical, or reliable medical evidence has yet been adduced to prove that any one of the persons who were sick with this disease had taken any poisons of any kind into their stomachs. It is proper, it appears to me, to correct a public misapprehension on this subject, and at once discharge from our minds the unfounded suspicion that any individual had attempted so gross and horrible a crime, as the poisoning of the whole company of a crowded hotel. EMIGRATION WESTWARD.—Such emigration was never known in the history of the world, as is now pouring into the Mississippi Valley. The hands are here and they want land to till. Hundreds of thousands are filling their new lands and they demand new towns to trade with and sell their products to. This is a sound state of things. It betokens no undue excitement and bodes no ruin to the West. There can be no back-set to the West until good Western farming lands get far above the price of good farming lands in the Eastern States. There must be an equilibrium before there can be a revulsion. While good farms in New England, Ohio or Kentucky command $40 per acre, and equally good—nay, far better—lands can be had for $5 to $10 in the Western States, the rush of emigration must still go on, and the West grow daily richer, and stronger, and greater.—St. Louis Intelligencer, April 29.

Everything about the Philadelphia Navy-Yard (says the Ledger) presents an animated appearance, and the number of mechanics, at present large, is about to be increased. The Union was brought to the wharf a few days since, and the pumps put in requisition, previous to preparing for the removal of her bolts and screws on the Sectional Dock.

IRISH EMIGRATION TO THE WEST.

Protest from the West Against Archbishop Hughes' Views.

Correspondence of the American Celt:

SIR:—It has been a matter of general remark and astonishment that such an eminent personage as the Archbishop of New-York should feel it his duty to interfere with Western Emigration in the manner that has been described in the New York papers, by publicly denouncing and condemning a lecture delivered by Rev. Mr. TEACY.

It would be decidedly wrong to impugn the Archbishop, known as he is, not only to America but Europe, as the firm and faithful defender of Catholicity and his native country.

In all ages of the world the greatest men have erred, and it is not therefore remarkable that he should err. The error of which he is considered to have been guilty, in the denunciation mentioned, must have arisen from a want of information in regard to Western life, and the advantages which Irish Immigrants derive, even under the poorest circumstances; thousands with ourselves who have lived here over twenty years, are fully satisfied of the immense advantages, morally, socially and politically. If the report be correct, the Archbishop asserted that the condition of the Irish immigrant west ward became "physically, morally and religiously miserable." From what sources of information the Archbishop has arrived at this conclusion we are unable to ascertain.

In his denunciation of Rev. Mr. TEACY'S lecture at the Tabernacle, he has given neither the Irish emigrant nor the American public any satisfactory or explanatory data. It must, therefore, be fairly presumed that he had none. Insinuations were thrown out by him in regard to the climate, by a very singular reference to persons who are the owners of property in various parts of the West, each one of whom denies the existence of any unhealthiness. Is this anything new—could any person of the most limited capacity suppose for a moment that a man who had land to sell would describe is as being unhealthy?

In regard to unhealthy localities the least said of New York City the better. We of the West are in the frequent habit of visiting New York City, and indeed much of our Western funds are there deposited. We sometimes make observations; we go, perhaps, where the Archbishop never was, and have seen as much of its poverty and wretchedness as he ever has; and we are willing to challenge investigation as to whether there is not, in proportion to the population East and West, less misery and destitution, and more social independence in the West than in New York. References may be had to the New York Herald, Sun, Times, Tribune, and Police Gazette, for particulars.

It is a matter of deep regret that any such controversy as this should have occurred, because there is no apparent good to be derived from it; each person engaged in it seems evidently anxious to do the best he can in accordance with his best judgment, and any malignity manifested is clearly injurious to both sides.

Eastern opinions reasonably differ with ours of the West, because we have different interests, having made our locations—and we all know that where our interests are, our prejudices are also.

It is, therefore, no wonder that the Archbishop of New-York should prefer New York.

Do you suppose for a moment that any Bishop or Archbishop, south or west of New-York, would discourage such a plan of immigration as was contemplated by the Buffalo Convention? Do you suppose that if, in the city of Baltimore, St. Louis, Charleston, New-Orleans, Cincinnati, Detroit or Buffalo, Rev. Mr. TEACY delivered a similar lecture, that he would meet with such opposition and rebuke? Indeed, it certainly affords ample grounds for suspicion that local considerations had some influence in the affair. It has been insinuated that the persons who were engaged in the "celebrated Buffalo Convention" were influenced by other than philanthropic motives. This is emphatically denied; the burden of proof, therefore, rests upon the accusers.

Consistency is said to be a jewel, and no doubt the ingenuity and ability of the Archbishop will be amply able to reconcile satisfactorily all parts of his discourse; but to those less skilled in logic, it would seem difficult to reconcile the various portions of his remarks.

Dr. HUGHES asserts that, for thirty years during his ministry, he has always advised the Irish emigrant to seek a home in the West, rather than remain in New-York or Eastern cities. The Buffalo Convention advised the same thing; therefore, why this controversy and opposition to the Western Emigration plan, as at the Buffalo Convention proposed?

Because, if it is advisable for one man to go West to better his condition, it is equally advisable for two, and if for two, it is for two hundred, or two thousand, or ten thousand—they being under no obligation to live separately or collectively, but amongst whom they please.

Mention is made of "an artificial combination of men," the meaning of which we, with our limited knowledge, are unable to understand, but no doubt it will be hereafter explained. That sort of combination of men is said by the Archbishop to be unfit to govern a township, "even if anybody gave them one." We regret exceedingly that our emigrant population have become so degenerate as not to be capable of living in moral and social intercourse with each other and governing a township, but be placed on a level with Mormons, notwithstanding the long life exertions of such distinguished men as Most Rev Archbishop HUGHES.

What must his sides be of the intelligence of the Irish emigrant when he supposes that they are incapable of living together in peace, harmony and in accordance with the laws of their adopted country, while there is nothing said in regard to the feasibility and propriety of all other nations establishing their colonies and governing their townships West? It appears remarkable that men of experience throughout the world, who have seen the Irish population in all the various conditions of life, should coincide with the opinions advanced in opposition to Western emigration, and amongst those a gentleman of the highest reputation, who has seen the condition of his countrymen at home and abroad, should either by the instrumentality of his voice or pen interfere to prevent the emigration of his countrymen to the West. We mean the Editor of the Irish News.

It would not be fair to presume that a gentleman of his reputation and position would coincide with any man's notions, whether a Bishop or Archbishop, for the purpose of creating popularity where he lives. It was doubtless went of a correct knowledge of the West rather than any intention to misguide.

That the West has ever been whitened with the bones of Irish emigrants is yet to be ascertained, but that the green sod of Ireland has been reddened with the blood of its children, is historically true, and it appears strange that one of his experience would recommend his countrymen to remain at home, in the land of misery and want, and witness the blood of their relations crimsoning the valleys of their native soil, rather than adventure even to the wilds of America, and chance the scattering of their bones, whitening the prairies of the West.

Where in the wide world was there ever a people in their condition, suffering such tyranny and misgovernment, more oblized to wander from their native home, and, notwithstanding that fact, they are advised, if not directly, by insinuation, to remain in an almost similar condition in the crowded cities of New-York and Boston? Why, then, not encourage them to have independent homes and become the owners of them in fee simple, where they can purchase them of the Government, and not from land speculators, or any artificial combination of men, as insinuated by the Archbishop? More by and by. Yours respectfully,

C. MCDONNELL,
D. MCELROY,
JOHN O'NEIL,

NEW-YORK ACADEMY OF MEDICINE.

Discussion on the Contagiousness of Puerperal Fever—Dr. Clark's New Views.

A special and very full meeting of the New-York Academy of Medicine was held at the University on the evening of April 15, convened for the exclusive purpose of discussing the Contagiousness and other Characteristics of Puerperal Fever, Dr. VALENTINE MOTT in the chair.

Prof. J. M. SMITH recapitulated the points of the elaborate paper which he read at the last meeting. He did not consider the disease to be a peculiar fever, but one which depended upon local inflammation; that it was, unquestionably, communicable from person to person, passing through a third or more individuals; that it might be generated from other disease, notable examples being recorded to the effect, that the poison of typhus fever, being communicated to a parturient woman, generated not typhus but puerperal fever in her system. So, too, erysipelas produced puerperal fever, and vice versa, puerperal fever produced erysipelas. The attendance of physicians at the post mortem examination of persons dying with various diseases, characterized by effluvia, putrescent exhalations, inflammatory affections, &c., rendered themselves mediums of disease, and their patients took puerperal fever from them. So, also, with hospital gangrene. Are these diseases identical? Are they but diverse forms of the same disease? They constitute a group of diseases, in his opinion, morbid matter from live or dead bodies causing, as circumstances may affect, one or the other of these diseases.

The results he had attained to in the paper of the previous evening were two. First, the danger of physicians from any of the above diseases bearing to their patients the seeds of puerperal fever, especially during an epidemic atmosphere, when slight causes were capable of producing the gravest results. Secondly, when such an epidemic is present in a hospital, the only relief was in thorough expurgation and the dispersion of its inmates.

Dr. ALONZO CLARK being called upon, stated that, as most knew, he had given considerable attention to this disease for the last twenty years up to the present time, when two had just died with this disease, and seven were now under treatment with it at Bellevue Hospital. He concurred with the previous speakers, (Drs. J. W. FRANCIS and SMITH,) that in some way or other, this disease was communicated from person to person. In regard to the mode, whether by the clothes of the attendants, through the cuticle or the digital extremity, or as TYLER SMITH has suggested, by the halitus, (the person having, by breathing, filled himself with the effluvia of the malady which is sufficient to keep himself affected for several days, and being emitted by expiration of the breath in the parturient chamber, is capable of causing infection there;) of the mode he did not profess to have any distinct opinion.

Of its connection with typhus and other diseases, as they had been alluded to, he would remark, although not concurring in the opinion expressed. At the present time, when puerperal fever is present to some extent at Bellevue, and apparently increasing, there is no typhus in the hospital; there has been none for two or three months on the female side, and but four or five cases in the last six months, and the City Inspector reports none for the last week as occurring in the City.

Dr. VACHE has given an account of the epidemic during the year 1840, during which he, the speaker, had made many autopsies, and no typhus existing at that time is reported. In the epidemic of 1851-2 there was but an average amount. There was no relation to be perceived between these diseases at Bellevue. Dr. C. then read abstracts from the reports of the City Inspector for the last fifty years, sustaining the position he had taken.

The pathological relations of the two diseases were equally discordant. Puerperal fever, untreated, ran its course in three or four days; typhus fever, in as many weeks. He thought further correspondences, that had been stated, should have been shown.

Its relations to erysipelas were more noticeable. At Bellevue it was a common remark that the two diseases were very generally coincident. In the epidemic which overran Vermont, some years since, this was noticeable, and the City Inspector's reports (an abstract of which was read) indicated the same.

It hospital gangrene is considered as he supposed it to be, a modification of erysipelas, the same remarks were true of one as of the other.

In regard to its pathology, the speaker was obliged to withhold his assent to the view that this disease is a fever. In his experience he had never failed to find, in a woman dying of this disease, some inflammatory action, and its consequent lesions, sufficient to cause death. Good was the first, he thought, to speak of "peritoneal fever without lesion." SIMPSON has seen two cases, which he records as without lesion, and TYLER SMITH has adopted this theory. This, it is to be understood, is to be seen only in rare cases, for generally there was marked inflammatory action in one or all of the following forms. There were four principal lesions, viz: Inflammations of the peritoneum, of the substance of the body of the uterus, of the veins of the body and its appendages, (the ovaries, broad ligaments, and fallopian tube,) of the lymphatics, and of the inner surface of the uterus—what he would call endo-metritis.

One or more of these was apparent in every case. In the most common form of this disease, inflammations of the peritoneum, there were found effusions of water with floculi, depositions of coagulable lymph and purulent matter. Inflammation of the veins of the body of the uterus are more rare, but CRUVEILHIER reports them, and he had himself seen several cases, [drawings of these and the following forms of this disease were exhibited.] Inflammation of the lymphatics were more common, and perhaps often mistaken for the former, but they lay upon the surface, and not in the body of the uterus. More particularly they were to be seen under the fallopian tube, in the axilla, so to speak, where it unites with the body, and there one rarely fails to find pus. Particularly it is noticeable that the ducts leading to the lymphatic glands contain pus, but not those leading from those glands. On this account it would appear as if the glands eliminated the pus from the ducts, so that, not passing the ganglia, it was not conveyed into the system. CRUVEILHIER thinks this form of disease, therefore, less severe than the others.

I now come to those cases, said he, stated to be not marked by any noticeable lesion. Several forms of this character have very recently come under my attention. I have not thought it proper to bring any such specimen before the Academy where so many practicing accoucheurs are present; but I present here a uterus which has lain for several weeks in alcohol, thus diseased, to exemplify my remarks. The organ is apparently without lesion; there is no peritoneal inflammation or affection of either veins or lymphatics. There is no living membrane of the cavity of the uterus down to the cervix—an evidence of the view recently promulgated that the uterus and the cervix uteri are different organs, differently nourished, &c. The uterine sinnesa where the placenta was attached are open, and with this lens one may look down into them and see what they contain.

And here he would consider why they do not bleed. No one perhaps has entered into the minute anatomy of these sinnses. By so doing he can see why it is that the practical accoucheur so much desires to obtain uterine contractions. If one will look at these sinuses, he will find that at their extremity are two valves lapping one over the other, like the ileo-cecal valve, and around each of these valves runs a thin layer of muscular tissue, a part of the muscular tissue of the uterus. When the uterus is flaccid or large, these valves are open; but when it is contracted and reduced in size the muscular fibre running through these valves draw them together and, thus closing the sinus, arrests the hemorrhage.

Now, in those cases supposed to be simple fever, there is inflammation of these uterine sinuses. An exudation lines the interior surface of the uterus, which the microscope evinces to be pus mingled with blood, and corpuscles ready to be formed into fibres. This condition, I do not pretend, said he, is a discovery of mine, for CRUVEILHIER has noted it, and called it "vascular and spongy vegetation". But I have examined it and find it to be fibre formation, and it is endo-metritis.

Now I think that this soft, creamy, brick-dust colored exudation is to be found in every case where death has occurred as supposed without inflammation.

To return to the anatomy. Behind the valves already demonstrated in the sinuses, and seen here on the specimen before you—behind these valves there is an ampulla, a little sac like cavity, where, in these cases, may always be found pus. There is also pus in the veins of the liver, coexistent, little gravish spots, easily overlooked, which the microscope determines plainly to be pus.

Further: the tissue of the uterus is stained beyond these sinuses, to the depth of a line or two, showing the inflammation is present, showing endo-metritis.

Now, this form of disease, you are not to think is found only alone. It is, on the contrary, generally to be found combined with peritonitis and the other forms, and it is but in rare cases that it is to be found alone, but there showing its abundant efficacy to cause death, leading one to suspect that perhaps it is this form alone that causes the death, where it exists with other forms in complication.

This is not all, for the influence exists far and wide throughout the system, not commonly seen in the cervix uteri, pus in the fallopian tubes, &c.

The secondary lesions are elsewhere observable—inflammations, or at least hypersemia of the pleura, pericardium, stomach, showing the mucous membrane of which is almost always thickened, softened, &c.

Dr. CLARK spoke for more than an hour and was listened to with great attention and sat down amid a general murmur of applause.

Dr. REESE said that he did not recognize any communicability in this disease, although he had twenty-nine women attacked with it, one after another. Notwithstanding he retired for two days, leaving his patients to be attended by another, the disease still following, he resumed. He thought it always of atmospheric.

Dr. J. M. SMITH made some explanatory remarks respecting the deductions to be drawn from the letters quoted by Dr. CLARK but not here given. He thought that the twenty-nine cases above given proved the disease communicable, unless it was distinctly known that the "substitute" had not seen any puerperal fever, any erysipelas, typhus, &c.

Dr. CLARK rejoined; he enlarged upon some points previously mentioned, and said that he thought that death occurred from pyæmia in the cases of endometritis, and that many could give fatal cases of pyæmia from other causes occurring in even less time.

Dr. COMBE inquired if pus was not to be found in ordinary lochia? Are not the inflammations of the uterine sinuses manifest in minor expressions in the inflammations of the saphena vein, generally recognized as phlegmasia dolens?

Dr. CLARK replied that he had made, not frequent, but five or six examinations of persons dying with convulsions and other acute diseases, cases rare to see, and had never found pus in the lochia. It was not fair, he thought, to call phlymasia dolens puerperal fever; at any rate it never had been placed in this category. Purulent inflammation of the vein is not puerperal faver, though many of its symptoms are analogous.

Dr. GRISCOM said that he was much pleased and instructed by the remarks of Professor CLARK, and hoped that he would continue upon the therapeutics.

Dr. CARSON proposed, as it was late, that the subject should be continued. The subject of its contagion was intensely interesting, and it was really desirable to know whether the accoucheur was a deliverer or the contrary. Is this inflammation primary or secondary? Is the disease only inflammation, or is this but one symptom, and does a fatal something that we do not know, poisoning the blood, lie behind all? The debate was adjourned to the next meeting.

NEWS BY THE MAILS.

Four persons, with bottles by their sides, were on Saturday found dead on Petersburg Mountain, a few miles west of Williamstown, Mass. They perished in the storm of Friday night. The victims were AMASA BALLOU and wife, LUCINDA CURTIS, a colored woman, and her boy, about ten years of age. They were returning home from Petersburg village, where they had been to sell baskets. They had partaken freely of liquors, and are supposed to have become bewildered by the storm, and wandered some distance from the road, where they perished.

It has been determined by the Secretary of the Interior to change the designs of the Government's Indian Medals. The new device determined on contains two pictures, as it were, (on the obverse side.) One is to represent an Indian scalping another, which is engraved on the border—and the other (the inside) represents a rural and civilized scene—Indian children at play in front of a school house in a cultivated field, with a church and steamboat in the distance. The reason for this change is, of course, to keep before the Indians the marked difference between savage and civilized life.

The suit of the Union Bank, of Frenchtown, N. J., against two individuals, for a malicious conspiracy to break the bank, by presenting its bills for redemption in coin, has ended in a verdict of one dollar damages for the bank. The Jury base their verdict upon the belief that the defendants had obtained the notes of the bank from its agents, under the pretence of putting them in circulation for its benefit, whereas in one hour after the same notes were used by the parties for the purpose of drawing specie from the bank.

The Taylor and Dalton horses are again matched for two more tests of speed. A twenty-five mile race for $1,000, to come off between the 1st and 10th of June, on any track DALTON may name. The stipulations are that DALTON shall drive his horse and that ANDREW SHEEHAN (owner of the Taylor horse) shall drive his. The second race is to be fifty miles, for $1,000. SHEEHAN is to name the track on which the test is to be made previous to the start being given at the 25 mile race.

The Philadelphia Ledger of Friday says: "Last evening the new rule went into operation, adopted by the Magnetic Telegraph Company between New-York and Washington, to keep the office of the Company open at New-York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, at all hours, day and night, for the transaction of business."

MURDER OF A WIFE BY HER HUSBAND.—A case of wife murdering occurred in Edgeworth yesterday afternoon, the particulars of which, as we learn them, are as follows: About the middle of the afternoon a little girl, about eight years of age, daughter of MICHAEL and MARY CORCORAN, ran into the house of a neighbor, having in her arms a little kitten. The neighbor asked what she brought the kitten in there for, and she replied—"My father is whipping my mother and I was afraid he would kill the kitten, so I brought it away." They proceeded immediately to the house and found MRS. CORCORAN lying on the floor, speechless, and in a dying condition. On her forehead there was a mark which looked as though it might have been caused by her falling on the stove, and, on examination, a mark was found on her back. By the stove there was an axe, and on being questioned the little girl said her father struck her mother with the flat side of the axe on her back three times, and knocked her down; that her mother tried to speak, but could only make a noise. CORCORAN stayed about the house a little while and then cleared out. It is thought he may have gone to Jamaica Plain where he has a brother living. Officers are in pursuit of him. [Boston Journal, Saturday.

HIGHWAY ROBBERY AND ATTEMPT TO MURDER.—The greatest excitement has prevailed for the last few days in Dutchess and Putnam Counties, from a robbery with attempt to kill a hatter, from Danbury, Conn. He arrived at Pawlings, Dutchess County, a few days since, and while walking along toward a place of shelter for himself and horse, was assailed by three men, who robbed him of his money and clothes, leaving nothing on him but his shirt and drawers. He was terribly cut about the head and face. He was then placed, while in a state of insensibility, in his wagon, the boldbacks being first cut by the villains, with the intention that when the horses went down hill the wagon would press upon him, frightening the animal, in the hope that he would run away. About this time the hatter came to his senses, and observing the state of things, jumped out and seized the horse by the bridle. He immediately had the three men arrested. They are now on trial at Pawlings. There is no doubt but that they intended to murder him. The names of the parties are not yet known.—Albany Atlas, Monday.

THE PUBLIC PRINTING.—The people should know how it is that the cost of Congressional printing, paper, and binding, and the adjunctive expenses connected therewith, has in ten years increased from $300,000 to the colossal proportions of near $1,500,000, for one Congress. To take these things into consideration—to protest against, and revolutionize the present system—and to suggest a fairer and more Democratic plan of action, as regards the public printing—we propose that a Convention of Democratic journalists meet in this city of Washington, previous to the next meeting of Congress.—The States.

TAMMANY HALL,

Opposite the Park and City Hall, New-York.

The undersigned having become sole proprietor of Tammany Hall, the original of the American hotels on the European plan, has had it completely renovated, redecorated and otherwise improved, to meet the requirements of the present time, and hopes thereby to increase the already large patronage he enjoys. Tammany Hotel is now open for the accommodation of ladies as well as of gentlemen. A handsome parlor for the use of ladies has been fitted up. The location of the Hotel is confessedly the most agreeable in the City, fronting the Park and City Hall, and overlooking the main thoroughfares and stage routes. The large restaurant connected with the Hotel will be found greatly improved, and is conducted under the immediate supervision of the proprietor. The lodging apartments have undergone many desirable changes, and are, for comfort, cleanliness and ventilation, second to none in the City. In short, both ladies and gentlemen will find Tammany Hotel of a character to command their constant support. CHARLES BROWN.

From Professor Louis Agassiz.

The geological works of HUGH MILLER have excited the greatest interest, not only among scientific men, but also among general readers. There is in them a freshness of conception, a power of argumentation, a depth of thought, a spirit of feelings, rarely met with in works of that character. * * * * But what is in a great degree peculiar to our author, is the successful combination of Christian doctrines with pure scientific truths.

From Rev. Thomas Chalmers, D. D., LL. D.

From Sir David Brewster, LL. D., F. R. S.

Among the eminent students of the structure of the earth, Mr. HUGH MILLER holds a lofty place, not merely from the discovery of new and undescribed organisms in the Old Red Sandstone, but from the accuracy and beauty of his descriptions, the purity and elegance of his compositions, and the high tone of philosophy and religion which distinguishes all his writings. * * * * With the exception of Burns, the uneducated genius which has done honor to Scotland during the last century has never displayed that mental refinement, and classical taste, and intellectual energy, which mark all the writings of our author.

From Rev. William Hanna, LL. D.

He succeeded in placing his name in the first rank of British scientific writers and thinkers. His works are characterized by a fine union of strict science, classic diction, and enchanting description, which rises, not unfrequently, into the loftiest vein of poetry.

From Sir Roderick Murchison, F. R. S.

Sir Roderick Murchison, in his address to the Geological Society, "hailed the accession to their science of such a writer," and said that "his work (Old Red Sandstone) is, to a beginner, worth a thousand didactic treatises."

The Times for California.

THE TIMES FOR CALIFORNIA will be issued To-Morrow Morning, in season to mail by the U. S. Mail steamship Illinois, from our Minister at Bogota, Mr. BOWLIN, in which he expresses the belief that the new Government of New-Granada will enter into an amicable arrangement for the settlement of pending difficulties.

We have contradictory accounts concerning the dreadful Indian wars which were reported as having broken out in Iowa and Southern Minnesota a few days since. The Western papers, generally, treat them as pure inventions, or the most absurd exaggerations of trifling disturbances. On the other hand the Washington Union states that advices have been received at the Department of the Interior fully confirming the reports already received. As, however, they give no details we are disposed to regard the denials of these rumors in the Western journals as entitled to credit.

The Riot on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad is not yet quelled. On Saturday a collision occurred between the Conductors and the Military sent out for the protection of the trains, in which one of the former was killed and others were wounded. Yesterday a train was thrown from the track by the rioters, by which two soldiers were injured. An additional military force was detailed for the protection of the freight trains.

The body of the young woman found murdered near Hampton, Orange Co., has been recognized as that of Miss SARAH BLOOM, of Shawangunk Township. Her sister positively identified the remains; but WILLIAM JENKINS, who furnished a conveyance for that young lady on Tuesday, to go from Newburg to Shawangunk, testifies, on the contrary, that the body is not hers. Miss BLOOM came to JENKINS to procure a conveyance; JENKINS furnished it and started with her, but she left the wagon near the house of Mr. MARTEN at the Basin, and since that time has not been heard from. A post mortem examination of the body of deceased reveals the fact that an abortion had taken place a short time before death. The case is still in mystery.

A ministerial crisis in Canada has resulted in the resignation of Mr. CAUCHON, Commissioner of Crown Lands. Differences between that gentleman and his colleagues, in reference to the North Shore Railway, are assigned as the cause. A personal altercation in Parliament between Mr. CAUCHON and Attorney-General MACDONALD followed the resignation, and caused a great excitement.

The May Anniversaries commenced yesterday, with the annual sermon of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, at Dr. ALEXANDER'S Church, in the Fifth-avenue. The annual report was encouraging, and the Board enter upon the labors of another year with renewed zeal.

Two men came to their death from violence in the City on Saturday last, viz.: JOSHUA WEEKS, (a brother of J. FISHER WEEKS, of the Thirteenth Ward,) residing at No. 95 Lewis-street, and JOHN SWEENY, a Corporation carman, residing at No. 84 Frankfort-street. WEEKS received his injuries in a bar-room in Stanton-street, on Monday last, and SWEENY at the Fulton Ferry on Thursday. A man named DANIEL H. PIERCE is in custody on a charge of causing the death of WEEKS.

A caucus of the Democratic members of the Board of Aldermen was held on Saturday evening, at the City Hall, to take action with reference to the injunction by Judge BIRDSEYE prohibiting the payment by the City of the sum of $10,000, voted for the employment of counsel to contest the new Police law. After a talk of more than two hours' duration, the caucus agreed to refer the matter to counsel.

ROBERT H. HUNTINGTON, aged 22 years, was run over and instantly killed, by Engine No. 38, last evening, at the corner of Broadway and Chambers-street, while proceeding to a reputed fire in Duane-street. He was a member of Engine Company No. 38, and worked in the telegraph office at No. 2 Wall-street.

The testimony in the case of Coroner CONNERY is closed. At authentic report will soon be sent to the Governor for his examination.

According to a decision of Judge DAVIES, the City is not liable for counsel fees incurred by the Briggs Committee, on the ground that the Corporation Attorney had charge alone of the law business of the Corporation.

There were 452 deaths in the City last week—59 more than the number for the week previous. There were 14 deaths from small-pox, 41 from scarlet fever, and 2 from measles.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

A dispatch from our Washington correspondent announces, in very brief terms, that the Administration has received advices of the rejection by the British Government of the Dallas-Clarendon Treaty as amended by the Senate. Upon what grounds this rejection is based, or to what points in the modifications made, exception is taken, we are not informed. We suspect, however, that the refusal of our Government to assent to the stipulation concerning the exclusion of Slavery from Honduras, as contained in the treaty between that State and Great Britain, is the cause of the difficulty. Private advices from England lead us to expect that Lord PALMERSTON would adhere to that clause at all hazards, and that he would be sustained in so doing by public sentiment. But we do not see how this is a matter with which our Government has any direct or immediate concern. It is certainly to be regretted that the whole Central-American negotiation, with its manifold embarrassments, should have to be reopened, and still more deplorable that our Government should stand before the world as insisting upon the extension of Slavery into the territory of an independent nation against the will of its Government and people.

A telegraphic dispatch from Washington to the Philadelphia North American states that very late advices were received at the State Department, per steamer Illinois, from our Minister at Bogota, Mr. BOWLIN, in which he expresses the belief that the new Government of New-Granada will enter into an amicable arrangement for the settlement of pending difficulties.

Kansas Politics.

We published last week in a special dispatch from one of our Washington Correspondents, a statement that advices received in that city indicated the purpose of the Free-State Party in Kansas, with Dr. ROBINSON at their head, to cooperate with Governor WALKER and the Federal Administration in their endeavors to secure a fair expression of the will of the people in relation to the question of Slavery, and to abandon their previous policy of inactivity. We find this opinion substantially confirmed by the address just issued on behalf of the recent Free-State Convention, of which the only important portion will be found in another part of this morning's TIMES. We do not mean that they will take any part in the Election for members of the Constitutional Convention, for they are too far committed against such action to permit of their receding with any consistency. They will, therefore, allow the Election to take place and the Convention to be held without any participation on their own part in the proceedings of either.

But they declare very explicitly their assent to the fundamental position taken in the address of the acting Governor, Mr. STANTON, namely, that the question of admitting or excluding Slavery should be submitted to the direct vote of the people themselves. "We wish," say the signers of the Free-State Address, "but that the slavery or freedom of Kansas may be settled once for all by an honest and legal vote of the actual residents, in accordance with the principles of the organic act." In another part of the same document they express a desire that both the Topeka Constitution, and the Constitution to be framed by the coming Convention, be together submitted to the people that they may take their choice. But this is merely a specification of the mode in which they would prefer that the question of Slavery should be submitted to the people; and it is so clearly and utterly inadmissible that the Free-State men themselves can scarcely regard it as anything more than a forlorn attempt to maintain a position to which they have committed themselves. Neither the Government at Washington, nor the Federal authority in Kansas, will or can recognize the Topeka Constitution in any shape. That document never had, for a moment, any legal validity whatever. It was never anything but a party platform, and can never be recognized as anything more in any branch or department of the Government. The House of Representatives, it is true, gave it its sanction: but without the concurrence of the Senate and Executive the action of that body upon such a subject has no more validity or force, as establishing a principle, than the votes of a mass-meeting in the Park. The Topeka Constitution is a thing of the past, and it is scarcely worth while for the Free-State party in Kansas to encumber its action by clinging to its corpse. Nor do we understand their address as indicating a purpose to make its submission to the people a condition of their taking part in the vote. What they desire and demand is that the question of Slavery shall be submitted to the popular vote—in some form so clear and distinct as to enable the will of the people to be expressed upon it.

This is not only a reasonable request, but it is one which cannot be denied. The Nebraska bill guarantees to the people the right of voting upon it. The Cincinnati platform repeated and endorsed the guarantee. President BUCHANAN, in his Inaugural Address, declared it to be his desire that "the people of the Territory should be left free from all foreign interference to decide their own destiny for themselves." And the Acting-Governor, Mr. STANTON, in his address, says still more explicitly:

"I do not doubt, that, in order to avoid all pretext for resistance to the peaceful operation of this law, the Convention itself, will, in some form, provide for submitting the great distracting question regarding their social institutions, which has so long agitated the people of Kansas, to a fair vote of all the actual bona fide residents of the Territory, with every possible security against fraud and violence."

Stronger pledges, or pledges more completely covering the whole ground, could not well be given or desired than these, and there is no reason to suppose that the Administration will seek or desire to evade them. It must also be borne in mind that while the Convention may authorize the submission of this question of Slavery to the popular vote, that vote must be taken under the direct supervision and control of the Federal authorities themselves. The Convention is called for a specific purpose, and will have no legislative powers whatever. It can enact no laws of any kind or upon any subject. It cannot prescribe qualifications for voters, nor rules for the government of elections, nor can it designate the officers under whose direction the voting shall take place. These important duties will devolve properly upon the Legislature yet to be elected, and convened either in extra session or at the regular time next Winter, as prescribed by law. In either case the Free-State men can take part in the election of its members and thus influence the result. Or the Federal authorities in the Territory may, if they see fit, prescribe these regulations themselves, and thus take measures effectually to secure an absolutely free and fair expression of the popular will upon this great question.

We still think it a matter of regret that the Free-State Party in the Territory refuses to take part in the election for Delegates to the Convention. Their participation in it under any circumstances could not fail to exert a beneficial influence upon the result, while their abstaining only places them in a false position without being of the slightest possible service to their cause. But it is satisfactory to learn, as we do from their address, that this inactivity is not to be perpetual. They propose to take part in the vote upon the question of excluding or admitting Slavery. And it is the first and most imperative duty of the Administration to secure for them, as for all the inhabitants of the Territory, a perfectly fair and free expression of their will. It is true that the test-oaths imposed by the Territorial laws of 1855 have already been repealed, not simply by construction, as the Boston Daily Advertiser seems to understand Mr. STANTON'S address to imply, but by positive enactment of the last Legislature. But beyond this it is essential that the officers who have charge of the polls, of the voting lists, and of the returns, should be men of character and known justice, and that all who may be bona fide inhabitants of the Territory at the time the vote is to be taken, should have the right and the opportunity of taking part therein. If these rights are secured to them we have every reason to look for a peaceful and a final settlement of this great controversy.

Tit for Tat.

The makers of proverbs who have given currency to a great deal of trash have also put some sound truths into circulation, and they never coined a better saying than this—"that revenge is a fool's pleasure."

And if revenge be a fool's pleasure, most assuredly is retaliation a fool's argument. For your fool is by nature explosive. His passion leads him not to confute but to confound his antagonists, just as his appetites lead him not to enjoy but to exhaust the satisfactions of life. Say to a fool, "My dear Sir, that left whisker of yours is a thought too long for the symmetry of your otherwise attractive visage," and he will thunder back an indignant allusion to that hereditary cast in your right eye. Politely suggest to a fool that some envious rival has made a rent in the back of his brand-new broadcloth coat, and he will howl at you furiously, "Sir, your cravat is awry, and your hat is six months old." Considerately warn a fool of a calamity impending over his family from the misguided conduct of his impetuous son JOHN, and he will fall upon you savagely with a denunciation of that unlucky grandfather of yours, who was hanged for horse-stealing.

Now all this sort of thing is vastly lively, and contributes not a little to the piquancy of private conversation, but it does not much advance the cause of truth or the interests of mankind. When we meet with it in public discussions of grave public questions, we own that it moves us more to sorrow than to sport.

And yet it is not less frequent in public discourse than in private talk. Diplomatists use it as often as fishwomen, and it is as familiar to the pens of journalists as to the lips of hackney-coachmen.

It forms indeed the staple of about one-half of the editorial articles over which we are every day condemned to glance, and by no people is it so constantly employed as by our cotemporaries of the "extreme South."

A well-intentioned but not very brilliant Southern lady took the trouble to "answer" Mrs. STOWE'S novel of "Dred" in this convincing and conclusive style, and with charming naiveté, baptized her literary bantling by the appropriate name of Tit for Tat. And her countrymen, of all sorts and degrees, read, applauded and went their way conscious of victory; the North and the "rest of mankind" meanwhile continuing to eat and drink, work, play, talk and write, as if nothing particular had happened.

Is it not almost time that some more dignified and decisive way of dealing with questions as solemn as life itself, and for the possible mischief that lurks in them, far more terrible than death, should be adopted? Is it not almost time that our Southern friends should begin to understand that the Northern antagonism to Slavery is not a vituperative, morbid, extravagant, uproarious clamor, but a grave and resolute feeling, born of profound conviction, and destined to develop itself into an absolute and inevitable policy, if not combated and overcome by argument and reason?

Is it not almost time that Southern thinkers and politicians should begin to comprehend that the discussion of Slavery in all its aspects, economical, moral and political, is inevitable, and cannot be postponed by recriminations and retaliatory outcries against the defects of Northern society, any more than by violence against the persons of Northern citizens?

We have been led into these reflections by an article in the New-Orleans Daily Crescent of April 22, on the "Condition of the Poor White People of the North." This article is founded on an extract from our own columns, in which a most pathetic case of misery occurring in our streets was made by us the occasion of an appeal to our citizens in behalf of the neglected children of the metropolis. On the strength of the fact that thousands of poor white children are not properly cared for in New-York, our New-Orleans friend thinks himself and his fellow-citizens justified in denouncing all "Northern Abolitionists" as "malignant vilifiers of Southern Institutions."

Now we are ready to make every allowance for the folly into which our friend has been provoked by the asperity of "Northern Abolitionists." We know that it is very hard for a man, when he is very angry, not to be a little absurd. But we put it to him seriously, whether he ought not to be ashamed of writing such nonsense on a matter of such importance?

If Slavery be a wrong in itself—a curse in its consequences—are we who think it so to abstain from stating our opinion, with all the emphasis possible, because we have also a firm conviction that the neglect of free children in a free community is an abomination and a horror? If we have a beam in our own eye, and our brother has a mote in his, how, we ask, in the name of common sense, is either of us to discover the disagreeable fact, if neither of us is to be allowed to examine his neighbor's optics, and report on their condition? Let our New-Orleans cotemporary find out all the mischief he can in New-York. We shall thank him cordially for doing us a good service, and we shall not think ourselves either outraged or injured by an exposure which may put us on the track of reformation.

He thinks his form of society perfect. The almost unanimous opinion of Christendom tends in quite another direction, and we, as parties considerably interested in his character and his conduct, cannot stand by and look on without some effort to find out the truth. We make such efforts, and we come to the conclusion that while the existence of Slavery is undermining the prosperity of our Southern States, the extension of Slavery is corrupting the vital principles of the Republic, and endangering the stability of the Union. This conclusion we cannot be expected to pocket, or file away, or otherwise quietly dispose of. We think it slightly important that this conclusion, if true, should be generally received as truth, impressed upon the popular mind, and carried out into an active policy. Meanwhile we do the best we can to find out any other defects in our social or political system which may need looking after, and if our Southern brethren choose to throw away their time and their spirits in oratorical or journalistic ebullitions of simple "Tit for Tat," we shall not quarrel with their facts, whatever we may think of their sense.

Advance in the Price of News.

From the Buffalo Express.

We see it stated, but with what truth we do not know, that upon the completion of the Atlantic telegraph, the leading New-York dailies propose to take a thousand words of news each day. This will cost them from $6,000 to $7,000 per week, and the price of the papers will be increased in proportion. Indeed, it is already rumored that the Herald will be five cents a copy after the new arrangement begins. Of course the Tribune and TIMES will follow suit. In that event, the circulation of these papers will suffer somewhat—unless, indeed, their enterprise and outlay are appreciated as they ought to be.

It is one of the anomalies of the day that while the price of everything else has very largely increased, the price of Newspapers should have remained stationary:—and especially that the improvement in their quality and character,—the immensely increased expense of making them and the necessity for still farther advances in the same direction, should not have involved a corresponding advance in their cost to consumers. The cost of preparing a copy of the TIMES, Tribune or Herald is at least four times as great as was the cost of preparing a copy of the best newspaper published in this City ten years ago:—and yet they are sold at less than half the price. To a certain extent it is undoubtedly good policy to reduce the price of any article offered for sale, in order to increase the quantity sold,—on the sound mercantile principle that large sales at a small profit afford a better business than small sales at a large profit. But this policy is good only so long as there is some profit, however small it may be, in the transaction,—so long as the cost of the article sold is at least a trifle less than the price obtained for it. When that ceases to be the case and an article costs more than it is sold for,—the larger the sales the heavier the loss,—and the business rests upon anything but sound commercial principles.

Now in regard to newspapers this is precisely the truth of the matter. Every copy of the TIMES, Tribune and Herald costs nearly twice what is paid for it. Indeed the cent and a half which is all that the Publishers receive for the paper at wholesale, barely covers the cost of the white paper and the ink with which the sheet is printed,—leaving all the other expenses of the establishment, in every department, Editorial Writing, Foreign and Domestic Correspondence, Reporting, Type-setting, Presswork, Rent, Gas, &c., &c., &c.—amounting for each paper to an average of not less than $150,000 or $200,000 per annum to be met by the advertising. The real burden of sustaining the City newspapers, therefore, falls upon the Advertiser, who is compelled to bear a portion of the cost, which, in justice, ought to be defrayed by the subscriber and reader. Of course whatever new expenses are incurred by any paper must be met by an increased charge in the advertising department. Either the prices of advertising must be raised, or the amount of advertising must be increased. The latter expedient is the most just inasmuch as the inconvenience which follows it, namely a diminution in the amount of reading matter, falls upon those who already get too much for their money,—namely the purchasers of the paper. But in either case it places a limit upon the enterprise, and upon efforts to improve the character, of the City Press. Persons frequently ask why the New-York newspapers cannot pay as high prices for literary assistance, and thus obtain literary matter of as high a quality as the London Times,—inasmuch as their circulation would receive a corresponding increase. The reason is that no possible increase in circulation alone could meet the expense,—and if met, as it might be, by an increased quantity of advertising, that increase would diminish, in just the same ratio, the space which could be devoted to reading matter. The London Times is sold at eight cents a copy, which gives a decided profit upon each sheet, even when accompanied by a double supplement. Our papers sell for barely enough to cover the cost of the white paper, and when accompanied by a supplement it is at a positive loss upon every copy sold. Under such circumstances it is obviously impossible to extend indefinitely the expenses of our journals without imposing upon advertisers burdens far greater than they should be called upon to bear.

That this will long continue to be the case we do not believe. Newspapers have become preëminently a necessity of American life. Everybody in the City must have one daily,—and while they are so cheap every body will have two or three. If any one could be so enlarged, expanded and improved, as to cover the whole field,—give proper scope to the discussion of all topics, and present fully and regularly all the news of every day, it would become the leading journal, and would approximate more nearly to the ideal standard of a metropolitan newspaper. The tendency of things is decidedly in this direction, and as the New-York Press is prompt in meeting every public want, we presume it will not be long before changes of this sort, more or less extensive, take place.

A SERIOUS CHARGE AGAINST OUR CUSTOM-HOUSE.

—The Philadelphia papers are continually making an outcry against the merchants of their own city who will persist in importing their goods through New-York, instead of availing themselves of the lines of ships and steamers that have been established between Philadelphia and Liverpool. The reason for the preference being given to New-York ships, it is plumply stated by the Philadelphia Evening Journal, both in a communication and in an editorial, is, that owing to the laxity and dishonesty of our Custom-House officials, merchants find it to their interest to pass their invoices here, although they are said to be subjected to much greater delays and inconveniences in getting their goods through our Custom-House than our own importers are.

The correspondent of the Journal says:

"So long as a laxity of morals prevails at the New-York Custom-House, and among those who import goods through it, Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, and all other ports at which honesty is yet considered the best policy, must suffer from the unscrupulousness of the rival. They cannot contend against such odds."

This is sufficiently plain and positive, and the slander against the character of the Philadelphia merchants is equally serious as against our Custom-House officials. The Editor of the same paper says:

"Frauds of the grossest character are believed to be perpetrated upon the customs with not only impunity, but actually with the connivance of the officials in authority at that port. Here there are no such abuses, and, consequently, no such rapid process of transferring goods from the vessels in which they are brought from abroad into the hands of the importers or consignees. Hence, Philadelphia merchants prefer to import through New-York, subject as they are to occasional delays and the invidious discrimination of which we have spoken, and refuse to patronize those lines of steamships which have been started with a view to put our merchants in direct communication with Liverpool and the Continental cities."

If the merchants of Philadelphia who import goods through our Custom-House, choose to remain silent under such imputations upon their honesty, we have nothing to say against it; but Collector REDFIELD should not allow such charges to be made against him by a respectable paper with impunity. The charge of the Philadelphia paper is of a two-fold and somewhat contradictory character. It says:

"We know that the business of the customs, where New-York houses are concerned, is dispatched with marvelous expedition, and we are informed upon good authority, that, as compared with the manner of performing the same work here, there is a laxness, and even irregularity of proceeding in the collection district of Manhattan, which is not only deserving of the close scrutiny of the Government, but is the source of incalculable losses to the federal treasury."

If the Journal knows what it states, it should produce the evidence; and if it makes these gross assertions without sufficient evidence of their truth it should have better manners than to circulate groundless slanders of so serious a nature against a large class of respectable men. If frauds are permitted by the officers of our Custom-House, they should be exposed and their perpetrators promptly punished. Let our Philadelphia cotemporary produce the proof, or give information at the Treasury Department in Washington, which will lead to its investigation.

Two-Year Cruises.

The Journal of Commerce strongly enforces the recommendation of the late Secretary of the Navy, Mr. DOBBIN, that hereafter our national ships should be sent on two-year cruises, instead of three years, which has been the time our ships have heretofore been commissioned for. There are many very good reasons why the change should be adopted, though it would hardly be practicable in the case of ships sent to the Pacific and to the Indian Oceans, as the time consumed in making their passage would give them too little time on their stations to be of much service. The Journal insists on a good many other changes which would be likely to improve the character of the naval service, and make seamen more abundant. Among these changes which the Journal recommends, are increase of pay and the apprentice system. The latter system, says the Journal in a glow of enthusiasm, "should be cherished and watched, and guarded and improved, and persevered in, till our ships-of-war are filled with American seamen of intelligence and burning patriotism." But we fear that if the system were persevered in until the result anticipated were arrived at, none of the present generation would live to see it. The apprenticeship system has always failed in every instance where it has been tried; and the only fruit that we reaped from it in our own navy was the terrible tragedy enacted on board the Somers.

It is very surprising that the great number of those who advocate schemes for the improvement of the navy, and for increasing the number and efficiency of our seamen, overlook the only remedy that can ever cure the evils under which both the naval service and the merchant service have so long suffered. There is now no motive for an ambitious American boy to enter our naval service, where he is denied promotion; and it is the height of folly to expect that "American seamen of intelligence and burning patriotism," should enter a department of the public service in which merit goes for nothing, and where all promotion is denied them by law. Burning patriotism will very soon burn out where it gets no reward, and leave nothing but the cold ashes of discontent. Whenever an American boy can enter our navy with the prospect of promotion, we may hope to see our national ships manned by American seamen, and the general character of sailors improved, but not before. The best essay on the subject of Naval reform that has ever been published, was that written by FENIMORE COOPER, many years ago, in which he stoutly advocated the system of promotion from the ranks as the only method of elevating the character of our seamen, and inducing ambitious and intelligent Americans to enter the service. Commodore STEWART has also recommended the adoption of the plan, but no Secretary of the Navy has yet had the courage to recommend the system, the great objection to it being that it would deprive members of Congress of one of their sources of patronage, in the bestowal of midshipmen's warrants upon the sons of their political partisans.

Theatrical Ventilation.

When Dr. BELLOWS took upon himself the task of lecturing the theatrical world upon its duties and responsibilities, he did not say anything—because probably, as Serjeant BUZFUZ remarked of his junior's opening in Bardle vs. Pickwick, it was not his business to say anything—of the minor nuisances of the theatre, and which inflict upon the public almost as much suffering in the flesh as the immorality of the plays and associations causes them in the soul. We allude first and foremost to the fact that no manager of any theatre in this City has indicated by any portion of the internal arrangements of the house over which he presides, the smallest knowledge of the fact that fresh air is necessary to the support of animal life. A successful "hit" fills every disposable place in a building, containing no windows, and no means of ventilation of any sort, good, bad or indifferent. Some hundreds of gas-burners are then lighted up. In half an hour the air has been all used, and is breathed and rebreathed in a highly poisonous state, to the immediate discomfort of everybody, and the lasting detriment of a great number during the remainder of the evening. We have no hesitation in saying that three hours at any theatre in this City, no matter how moral the play or how good the acting, so far from proving a benefit, are as severe a drain upon the powers of both mind and body, as any sensual debauch of similar duration. Dr. BELLOWS held the drama up as a most useful and most legitimate means of recreation, after the toils and cares of business, of replacing the material lost by exertion, and of restoring to the mind its tone and elasticity. We believe he is right, but we believe also that all enjoyment, attended by intense physical exhaustion and lassitude, has, and can have, no effect upon either mind or body but a bad one. The drama, per se, may be a most excellent thing; but a mixture of drama, and carbonic acid gas, such as managers serve out to us every night at fifty cents the dose, is simple and unmitigated evil. If any tell us this evil is entirely physical, and does not interfere with the effect of a good play upon the mind, we reply by pointing to the influence upon every part of a man's constitution, mental, moral and bodily, of fresh country air, by rapid motion in it, by changes of it, and by the habit of breathing it. Physical and moral squalor generally go together. The foul air in which fevers are hatched, is generally that in which crime is bred. Virtuous resolves, noble sentiments, lofty aspirations, the power of feeling deeply, and judging wisely, do none of them flourish in a foetid atmosphere.

Consequently we cannot avoid feeling that when managers have done all that Dr. BELLOWS tells them they ought to do, as long as they take no steps to provide more comfortable accommodation both as regards seats and ventilation, the theatre will remain a place to which we would advise no man or woman to resort for recreation whose constitution is not more than ordinarily vigorous. No one who has seen the jaded crowds who issue forth from a three-hours' performance, with faces blanched by a surfeit of foul gases, temples throbbing under the influence of an unnaturally high temperature, eyes dazzled by the glare of light, and limbs cramped by sitting so long in an uncomfortable posture, but must feel that a process which thus inflames the lungs, relaxes the nerves and muscles, and stupefies the brain, is a process in all respects deleterious. It is folly to preach wisdom and beauty to people breathing the air of pot-houses and crouching on the benches of galley-slaves. Human nature is capable of a great deal, but it is not capable of being made either much better or wiser, while consuming second hand oxygen.

We make these remarks with all becoming humility. Managers will probably tell us that no change can be made, that they cannot possibly avoid selling the same places twice over, cannot recognize the existence of knees, and cannot supply fresh air at existing prices. It may be so,—but if it is so, all we can say is, that no amount of purity in the plays will ever make the theatre a rational place of amusement for either young or old. Moral lessons, not to talk of entertainment, acquired by risk to health and life, are too dearly bought. People will go, of course, just as people will: drink too much bad wine; but every such indulgence tends to the destruction of vigor both of mind and body, and of that invaluable robustness of nerve, thought, humor, and muscle, which the stage ought to cultivate and promote.

A QUESTION VERY EASILY ANSWERED.—The Charleston Mercury asks the following question in so serious a manner that we presume a reply is expected:

"Was not the Southern Review in its best days as brilliant as the Edinburgh Review in the time of JEFFREY?"

Speaking according to our own judgment, we should most decidedly say, not quite.

But admitting that the Southern Review was as brilliant as the Edinburgh, what a timdering disgrace to the South, and particularly to South Carolina, that such a periodical, so zealous in the support of Southern interests, should have been permitted to die for lack of proper appreciation by those for whose benefit it was published. The Southern Quarterly has ceased to appear, but in its last number it made a "final appeal" to the people of the South for support, which, we presume, was not responded to from the fact of its not having come out again. We make an extract from the appeal of the Southern Quarterly which gives an edifying insight into the manner in which Southern literature is supported:

"We have not realized over $600 upon the present volume, barely sufficient to pay for the paper upon which the Review is printed.

We have distributed 1,300 copies of each number of the Review to subscribers, which ought to have realized for us $6,500, and thus place the work on a firm basis.

If those who have received the Review the present year, could be induced to forward us one-half the subscription price, we would be encouraged to go on; but when it is known that our receipts have amounted only to about $600, and that we have paid to authors, printers, and others engaged upon the work, $1,450, the reader will easily discover that it is worse than folly for us to continue the publication.

This is the last appeal we intend to make for the Review. If its friends are determined that it shall die, we must submit, and close its pages before we become seriously involved."

The Edinburgh Review made its proprietors rich and its contributors famous; but the Southern Quarterly, which the Charleston Mercury intimates was as brilliant as the Edinburgh in its best days, made its publisher bankrupt, and consigned its contributors to obscurity. The contrast is certainly not particularly complimentary to our Southern brethren, but the Mercury boasts of it with great complacency, as though it was something to be proud of.

JUDGE MCLEAN.—The National Era replies to a charge in a Western paper that it favored the nomination for the Presidency of Judge MCLEAN, whom it speaks of as "the candidate of the Know-Nothings, and the Judge who breathed the breath of life into the Fugitive Slave act." The Era says that it never advocated any nomination, and took no part, as a journal, in the movement. The personal preferences of its Editor were for the nomination of either CHASE or SEWARD, but in this he was overruled by those who aimed at immediate success. Then he preferred Judge MCLEAN to Col. FREMONT, upon the ground that there were two elements to be secured for success—the Conservative and the Liberal; the movement itself would carry the latter, no matter who was the candidate; the man selected must carry the former. The Conservative element prevailed in Pennsylvania, New-Jersey and Indiana; they must be secured, or Mr. BUCHANAN would be elected. Colonel FREMONT could not carry those States—Judge MCLEAN could. Col. F., however, was nominated, and the result is known. The Era says further, that Judge MCLEAN "is not and has never been a Know-Nothing;" that he never approved the Fugitive Slave law, but was really the author of the bill which Mr. WEBSTER said he intended to offer as an amendment in the Senate, securing the right of trial by jury to the arrested fugitive; that, believing the act Constitutional, he could not, under his oath of office, do otherwise than so decide; and that at the last election he voted for FREMONT and DAYTON.

THE MONEY QUESTION.—The policemen are in a double quandary; first, they are at a loss which side to give their allegiance to, whether to obey Mayor WOOD or Commissioner DRAPER, and secondly how to get along without their pay. The money question is the more perplexing question of the two; and the difficulty comes upon them just at the most critical period of the whole year. Stopping the pay of some twelve hundred men, nearly all of whom have families dependent upon them, on May day must inevitably be productive of a vast amount of inconvenience, if not suffering. Policemen are not likely to have a reserved fund to fall back upon, and the very fact of the Comptroller refusing to pay them, must deprive them of their ordinary resources of credit. As the safety and good order of the City depend in a great measure upon the police force being kept in good condition, there should be some steps taken to pay the subordinates of the department their back wages, let the case of the contesting Commissioners be decided as it may.

Amusements.

ITALIAN OPERA.—To-night, VERDI's opera of the "Trovatore," will be repeated for the last time, with Mme. GAZZANIGA and Miss PHILLIPS in the principal roles.

A tolerable performance of "Linda di Chamouni" demands all the resources of a full company; a superior performance, an unusual combination of rare artists. A very superior performance of the Opera was given on Friday night, and the strength of Mr PAINE's company demonstrated in a highly satisfactory manner. Madame GAZZANIGA exceeded our most sanguine expectations, which were based more on the dramatic than the musical requirements of the rôle of Linda. But not only was she good as an actress, but at times approached excellence as a vocalist, stepping lightly over the hard places like a thorough-paced racer. All that could be bent to her own specialty was admirable; that is to say, about two-thirds of the music was given with rhetoric, skill and intensity. Linda is unquestionably one of Madame GAZZANIGA's best characters, and the Opera should be repeated in order that the public may have the opportunity of fully appreciating it.

Miss ADELAIDE PHILLIPS contributed in an eminent degree to the artistic fullness of the performance. She was in excellent voice and sang deliciously, meriting in the most exact degree the applause bestowed on her efforts.

Signor ARDITI's best part is Antonio, and he never played it better than last night, albeit suffering from the fragments of a cold. Signor ARNOLDI—the new tenor—appeared to be slightly hoarse. BRIGNOLI good, especially in the duet, and in the supplementary romance of the second act. Signor ASSONI—a buffo—made a successful début as the Marquis. He has a good voice; more humor and less buffoonery than most buffos. At the end of his scena act he was called out.

Altogether the performance of this Opera was in the highest degree satisfactory. The cast was complete in every department, and the Orchestra and Chorus excellent. We trust it will be repeated, for an Opera presented with such a rare combination of first-rate artists deserves to be heard more than once.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—A number of influential gentlemen have tendered Mr. LESTER—the popular and talented Comedian—a complimentary benefit. The affair comes off to night, and will unquestionably be one of great attractiveness. The pieces selected for the occasion are "Rob Roy," "A Decided Case," "Jenny Lind," and "A Day After the Wedding." A large proportion of the leading artists of the City assist in these performances, and Mrs. JOHN WOOD, from Boston, has come to town expressly for the purpose of lending her valuable aid.

WALLACK's THEATRE.—In consequence of the testimonial benefit to Mr. J. LESTER at the Academy of Music, there will be no performance here to-night.

LAURA KEENE's THEATRE.—A new piece called "Like and Unlike," will be presented here to-night, together with the popular burlette of the "Elves." The latter piece will be withdrawn after the present week.

BROADWAY THEATRE.—A new spectacle drama from the French, called the "Son of the Night," will be produced here to-night. It is adapted by Mr. CHAS. GAYLOR, a gentleman of experience and talent. Mr. and Mrs. DAVENPORT sustain the principal characters, assisted by the members of the excellent stock company.

BOSTON's THEATRE.—Mr. EDWIN BOOTH, concerning whom much interest is felt, makes his début to-night, appearing as the hump-backed hero in "Richard the Third." After the tragedy the piece of "Catching a Governor."

BARNUM's MUSEUM.—A new domestic drama, in five acts, by J. J. TROWBRIDGE, Esq., entitled "Neighbor Jackwood," will be produced here this evening. In the afternoon a variety of light entertainments.

NATIONAL THEATRE.—"Cleopatra," "The School in an Uproar," and the "Mendicant," will be played here to-night.

BUCKLEY's SERENADERS.—"Down in Alabama," "The Picture Gallery," and "Old Bob Ridley," with other entertainments, are on the bill for to-night.

Personal.

The Paris correspondent of the Brussels Independance writes: "I can state upon authority that the sudden departure of Mr. HUME, the spirit-rapper, was in obedience to an order from the Emperor. The Empress was so much affected that her nugust consort dreaded the continuance of the diabolical scenes. The ladies of honor were not less excited than their Sovereign. They could speak of nothing but the redoubtable conjuror. The Emperor made a wise revolution in the household, and the poor devil—who, though playing the part of a personage with 240,000 a year, was really penniless—has left for the country of the rappers. A few days ago the Emperor met the learned physician, M. BROQUEREL, and remarked, 'I want to consult you upon what I saw that trickster do;' and his Majesty then told how Mr. HUME had made a table turn round without touching it, and caused it to be struck by an unseen hand as many times as he liked. The Emperor received from the physician the very natural reply, 'Sire, I can say nothing upon facts which I have not witnessed.'"

GOTTSCHALK has fallen upon pleasant times in Havana. The Captain-General gave an entertainment in his honor, at which distinguished guests were present, and the populace, eager to do the great young artist a service, unharnessed his horses and drew his carriage through the streets. The concerts have been crowded with immense audiences, and the receipts handsome. M. GOTTSCHALK will make a tour in the Southern States before returning to the North.

HAGAN's "Venus Rising from the Sea" is on exhibition in Boston. The Advertiser says, "In this picture we recognize the accustomed skill of the best disciple of TITIAN. We might perhaps find fault with his representation of the sea, were it not that it is so entirely subordinate and accessory."

It is reported that WAGUNSELLER, the defaulting Cashier of the New Castle Bank, has made his escape, leaving his securities liable for the amount of the Bonds into which they entered for his appearance at the next term of the Lawrence county Criminal Court, and has not since been heard from.

Rev. W. W. SCUDDER, one of the oldest of the East India missionaries, sailed some time since from Arcot to visit the United States, bringing his infant daughter. A letter has been received from him, dated St. Helena, which states that he is detained there in consequence of the untimely death of his daughter.

On the 21st inst., a wedding party in North Brookfield, Mass., having arrived within half a mile of the house of the bride, were blocked in by the snow, and it required the laborious services of eight men for an hour before the banks were so shoveled away as to admit of a passage.

Dr. CHEEVER declines the invitation to speak at the approaching anniversary of the American Anti-Slavery Society, owing to the pressure of other engagements.

The Post announces, as official news from London, that the Grand Duke Constantine will visit England, and may be expected in London in the second fortnight of May.

Gen. TOTLEBEN, of Sebastopol celebrity, is to have a grand banquet in London, given by the officers of British engineers.

Mr. and Mrs. BARNEY WILLIAMS have made their first appearance at Glasgow, at the Theatre Royal.

The publishing firm of DIX, EDWARDS & Co., (publishers of Putnam's Monthly) is dissolved, Messrs. DIX and EDWARDS retiring.

Ex-President GUTHRIE has assumed the Presidency of the Nashville and Louisville Railroad.

STATE PRISON APPOINTMENTS.—The Inspectors have made the following appointments at Sing Sing:

Henry Newland, Utica, Principal Keeper; Lyman D. Orser, Yonkers, Keeper—reinstated; P. H. Hoffman, Poughkeepsie, Keeper; E. Williamson, Hamilton, and Wm. Mouldoon, Guards.

MARINE MATTERS.

There were 53 vessels lost last month, of which 11 were ships, 7 barks, 5 brigs, 29 schooners and a sloop. Total losses, exclusive of damages to vessels not totally lost, $1,648,700. Most of these were American vessels. The ship Arabella, reported from Bermuda, on Wednesday, as struck by lightning and burned, was insured in Wall-st., for $175,000 The total losses for the first four months in 1857 have been:

January	$3,552,700	March	$1,298,586
February	1,668,680	April	1,648 700

The loss of the fine Boston ship Cathedral, off Cape Horn, when Capt. HOWARD was sick, and about half his crew perished, is now supposed to have been caused by the shifting of her cargo while lying to in a heavy sea. The fact was overlooked by the mate, who instead of trying to get the ship before the wind, cut away the masts, thus only hastening her destruction. Another of ENOCH TRAIN's ships, the Star of Empire, from the Chinchas, was towed into Norfolk in distress, on the 1st. inst. Some half dozen of his ships have been lost, and they were the finest ever built in Boston.

A large reinforcement of marines, intended for the United States Squadron in the Pacific, will go out by the Illinois, on Tuesday, in charge of Lieut. JOHN LLOYD BROOME.

The bark Willard, of Yarmouth, arrived at Norfolk, from Newport, Eng., having on board the crew of the schooner Reindeer, which had been abandoned on the 19th April, the men taking refuge on board the brig Surf, from which they were transferred to the Willard, an hour afterwards. On the 20th they fell in with the bark Courier, of Southport, lying to in lat. 31° 10', lon. 73° 15', with foremast gone, and abandoned. Three days afterwards the bark was struck with lightning, all hands in the port watch knocked down, and one man badly injured.

The ship John Gilpin, from Honolulu, brought into New-Bedford, April 30, the crew of the schooner J. T. Bertine, of New-York, which was abandoned at sea on the 23d ult. in a sinking condition.

The steamship Fulton, Capt. WOTTON, sailed from this port at 12 o'clock on Saturday for Havre and Southampton, with 193 passengers and $111,000 in specie.

The steamship Hansa, from Bremen April 9, put into Boston for coal, and came thence through Long Island Sound, after landing 78 of her passengers in Boston. The Hansa passed five icebergs on the passage.

Advices from Malaga, April 8, state that owing to the great prevalence of westerly winds for the last month, the number of vessels wind-bound between that place and Gibraltar is very great. Collisions here in consequence been very frequent; some ten or twelve foreign vessels, including two Americans, have put into this port in a damaged state. The American are the bark Marion, HUGG, of and from Baltimore, bound here, and the bark Virginia Ann, WILEY, of Charleston, from Palermo for Baltimore. The Marion came in collision with the British brig Milne, of Pictou, N. S., not far from Malaga, and was very much injured. The British vessel, still more damaged, sunk in a few hours; her crew were taken off by the Marion and brought in here. Weather very heavy at the time; she is extensively damaged, and her repairs will cost a round sum. The Virginia Ann had touched at Gibraltar, and after waiting for some time took advantage of a light easterly wind, in company with a number of vessels, to get through the straits; the wind shifting, she was carried by the current into the Mediterranean, and beating about with westerly winds, was run into in the night by an unknown ship, carrying away her bowsprit and everything attached to it, sails, guys, stays, &c. She is now repairing as quickly as possible, but as this is holy week, will not probably get off before the 15th inst.

The missing Boston Pilot and his companion, who were supposed to have been lost in a heavy blow in October last, and whose boat was found bottom up on Cape Cod a few days afterwards, have turned up all safe; they having been carried to sea by the ship Samuel Adams, which arrived at Callao on the 22d of March. The two arrived home on the 19th ult. viâ Panama.

On the 15th ult., when about seventeen miles off Ushant, the steamer Tagus fell in with the Martin Luther, Captain GORDON, of Liverpool, bound with 498 passengers to Quebec, in a helpless condition, having lost all her spars but the foremast. The Martin Luther left Liverpool on the 9th ult., and proceeded to about lon. 8° W., lat. 500 N., where she became disabled. On the morning of the 13th, while attempting to secure the foresail, seven men fell with the mast; and the boatswain, JOHN WESTWOOD, of Dunfermline, and four other men were drowned. After losing her masts she drifted to the leeward, and, had she not been picked up by the Tagus, would in all probability have gone on shore on the French coast. It is stated that the loss of her spars is due in some measure to the slackness of her rigging.

☞ There were in this port on Saturday, 711 vessels—including 34 steamers, 162 ships, 114 barks 97 brigs, and 307 schooners.

The Missing Ship Highflyer—Government Relief.

The Harford Times says:

Gen. N. M. WATERMAN, of this city, brother of Capt. GURDON WATERMAN, of the missing clipper ship Highflyer, which it is feared has been captured by the Chinese pirates of Formosa Island, recently appealed to the Secretary of the Navy for government aid in rescuing any of the survivors of that ship, if possible, or at least of ascertaining the fate of the ship and those on board of her. The Secretary returned to him the following reply, by which it will be seen that he had already given orders that the required aid should be rendered:

LETTER OF HON. I. TOUCEY.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, April 23, 1857.

DEAR SIR: I have received your letter of the 20th inst., calling my attention to the loss of the ship Highflyer, and the apprehended fate of Capt. WATERMAN and wife, and of the crew. I had, previous to its receipt, taken the action you desire, and have directed Commodore ARMSTRONG, the Commander-in-Chief of the East India Squadron, to send one of the vessels of his squadron to the Island of Formosa, if he finds the report current in the United States concerning the loss of the Highflyer to have any foundation, that he may rescue any of the survivors, if any are found. I hope that the proposed visit of a ship-of-war may lead to the rescue of Capt. WATERMAN and his wife, or at least procure exact intelligence of the manner of their loss.

Very truly yours, I. TOUCEY.

N. M. WATERMAN, Esq.

Naval.

There has been no appointment as yet to fill the post left vacant by the resignation of Commodore BIGELOW, at the Navy Yard in Brooklyn. The appointment will probably fall on Capt. MCCLUNEY.

Orders have been sent from Washington to have the new foundry and boiler-shop completed at once. The new receiving store has been commenced. In excavating for the foundation, near the ship-house No. 1, the skeletons of three men were discovered, presumed to be the remains of three prisoners from the Jersey Prison ship, buried there during the revolutionary war.

The schooner Merchant, seized as a slaver, lies at the Navy-Yard Dock, in the custody of the command ant. The brig Helen, seized yesterday upon the same charge by Marshal RYNDERS, lies under the guns of the revenue cutter Washington.

The Department have contracted with Mr. DISBROW, of Rockland County, the well-borer, to bore an artesian well at the Navy Yard.

The Vincennes, now undergoing repairs at the Dry Dock, will be completed and out of dock in two weeks.

The sloop-of-war Decatur is ordered to the Coast of Africa, to relieve the Dale, which will return home.

Obituary.

JOSEPH K. ANGELL, a well-known writer on legal subjects, died at Boston on Friday, aged 60.

The law writings of Mr. ANGELL are well known in England, where they have been not only favorably noticed in the Law Magazines, but have elicited high commendation from Lord BROUGHAM while he was Lord Chancellor.

Capt. JOHN G. STARR, a returned filibuster, died at Savannah last week. He was in LOCKRIDGE's company, and dragged himself back to his home to die. He was buried with military honors.

Switzerland to America on Slavery.

The Evangelical Christians of Geneva, headed by Dr. MERLE D'AUBIGNE, have addressed an epistle to their brethren in the United States, beseeching them "to bring about the suppression of American Slavery, and the establishment of social liberty." The appeal concludes as follows:

"We live in solemn times. A new era is dawning on this question, not only in your country, but in the whole civilized world. Universal attention is aroused. Everywhere public opinion pronounces with decision on this subject. The time is certainly come when America must give satisfaction to the claims of Christianity. We know that it is not easy to find the means of attaining that end. There will be many

In which Miss Polly Marshall will appear.

On Tuesday, RICHELIEU. Wednesday, NEW WAY TO PAY OLD DEBTS

OPINIONS OF THE BOSTON PRESS ON THE ACTING OF EDWIN BOOTH

We seriously think that Mr. Booth last night showed the possession of more talent for the tragic drama than any actor that we have seen upon the stage of the Boston theatre.—Courier

His engagement has been thus far a succession of the most brilliant and complete dramatic triumphs it has ever been our pleasure to record.—Journal.

There is probably no other actor living who would attract such audiences in Boston.—Herald.

The dream scene in "Richard III" was represented with thrilling effect, and when at last the vision vanished, and the cosscience-stricken murderer rises upon his feet, his guilty soul was portrayed in every look and action—he plunges madly forward and falls on his knees—his teeth chatter against each other—his eyes glare, and seem bursting from their sockets—his voice gushes forth at intervals, or is lost in hurried and impotent attempts at expression.—Post

We found in Edwin Booth a finished actor and a tragedian of the best school.—Advertiser.

The closing scene of the play, in which the crafty plans of Sir Giles are thwarted, was given with a fearful power and intensity of action.—Bee.

He is the best tragedian on the American stage, already rivaling his father in his most famous characters, and excelling him, as many contend, in some of them.—New-Orleans Daily Crescent, March 30

THE ELVES.

LEGEND.—The mountain forests of Pastoria are inhabited, it is said, by Pixies, Spirits and Elves, who, like the Phantom Dancers of Germany, delight to entrap travellers into their realms, and torment them with their mischievous antics. Having the power of transferring the spirit, they often, in their malicious gambols, give life to the newly dead. Statutes, rocks and trees are seen fantastically moving in the forest; but it is only during the DAY they retain their fictitious existence; at the approach of NIGHT they resume their immovability.

POLICE INTELLIGENCE.

Rum, Rowdyism and Death

Notice was received at the Coroner's office on Saturday, that a man named Joshua Weeks, residing at No. 35 Lewis-street, was lying dead at that place, his death having been caused by a beating received a few days before at a drinking-place in Stanton-street. Coroner Perry proceeded to the place designated, and made arrangements for an investigation, and yesterday he began and concluded an inquest The following is the evidence taken on the occasion:

Mary J. Weeks, wife of the deceased, testified: On Monday the 27th of April my husband left the house to go to work, and I did not see him again until about 11 o'clock when he came home much bruised and hurt; one of his eyes was closed and there was a gash on the back of his head; I washed and dressed his wounds; he appeared to be sleepy and drowsy; he told me that he had been beaten in a liquor store at the corner of Stanton and Lewis streets, he said that Daniel Pierce knocked him down, and Gould Allen kicked him after he was down; he further told me that on Sunday last he struck a man named "Tom," and he supposed the attack on him on Monday was to revenge this; my husband was attended by a physician until his death, which occurred at 9 o'clock Saturday morning.

EVIDENCE OF PARTIES WHO WITNESSED THE ASSAULT.

Edward Jones, being sworn said: I keep a liquor store at No. 302 Stanton-street, where I also reside; on Monday, the 27th ult., about half-past ten o'clock A. M., deceased came into my store; there were a number of men in the store at the time; among others there was a man by the name of Pierce, and his brother; I saw deceased talking with Pierce; they were standing about the middle of the store; they had been talking a few minutes when I saw Pierce raise his fist and strike deceased, hitting him about the face, which knocked him down; Weeks fell backwards between the stove and casks; several persons sprung in and took Pierce away; saw no other person touch deceased; I only saw one blow struck; I did not hear the conversation previous to the blow being struck; deceased got up in about a minute; he was bleeding about the head; deceased appeared to be sober that morning, as also did Pierce.

Nicholas Andrews, residing at No. 279 East Sixth-street, was sworn and stated: I was in Jones' liquor store last Monday morning at the time of the affray with Weeks; I heard Pierce say to Weeks that he ought to be ashamed of himself for striking one Thomas the day before; I heard no more of the conversation, but soon after I saw Weeks fall; several men rushed in to interfere; they took Pierce away; when Weeks first came into the store, I heard Pierce say that he would "lick" him because he had, the day before, struck another man.

Christopher Doyle, residing at No 302 Stanton-street, testified: I was present at the affray; Weeks came into the store about 10 o'clock, and remained about five minutes without saying anything; when he was going to leave, Pierce said to him "You seem to be a fighter—why did you strike that drunken man yesterday?" Weeks answered that the man deserved to be struck; some few words then ensued, when I turned round to wash some bottles, and I heard the noise of a man falling; I turned and saw some persons taking Pierce away; deceased was on the floor; on Sunday I heard Pierce say that he was going to "lick" Weeks for striking the man Tom Coleman on Sunday; I did not see anything in the hand of Pierce at the time.

TESTIMONY OF THE ATTENDING PHYSICIAN.

Dr. Chapin, who attended the deceased, testified as follows: The deceased came to my office on Monday; I dressed a cut on his head near the eye, which was about one inch and a half long; I did not examine him for any other injuries; he told me that he had been knocked down and kicked; I called to see him the next morning and found that erysipelas had set in from the wound; he was perfectly sensible of the erysipelatic inflammation from day to day for three days; about the third day a mania ensued, having some of the characteristics of mania potu, which continued until his death; I think that the existing cause of death was the wound inflicted; the depraved condition of his system required a less cause to produce death than if he had been in a healthy condition.

THE POST-MORTEM EXAMINATION.

Drs. Finnell and Welsh, being sworn, say: We have made a post-mortem examination on the body of Joshua Weeks; we found a small contusion of the scalp at the junction of the frontal and parietal bones; this extended into the pericranium; both eyes were swollen, blackened and tinged; the tissues of the left one was filled with pus; at its external angle, there was a wound one inch and a half in length, extending to the bone; the brain was moderately congested with venous blood; a small amount of extravasated blood was found in the arachnoid membrane; this corresponded with the contusion on the scalp; there was no extravasation on any other part of the brain; there were abrasions and bruises on the arms and legs; the heart and lungs were healthy; the liver was much diseased—weighing six pounds; the kidneys and other organs were healthy.

We are of the opinion that the deceased came to his death by the combined effects of erysipelas and delirium tremens.

THE VERDICT

rendered by the Jury, after a brief address from the Coroner, was: "Death by injuries from a blow inflicted by Daniel H. Pierce, April 27, 1857."

Pierce, who was already in custody, was then held to answer. The deceased was a brother of J. Fisher Weeks, late Captain (for a few days) of the Tair teenth Ward Police. He was a native of the United States. His age was 29 years.

ANOTHER DEATH FROM VIOLENCE.

JOHN SWARNAY, a Corporation cartman, residing at 84 Frankfort-street, died at his residence on Saturday afternoon from injuries received on Thursday night. Coroner PERRY commenced an inquest upon the body of deceased yesterday morning, but did not conclude it. A post-mortem examination was made by Drs. FINNELL and WELSH, who reported the result to the Coroner. They found two contused wounds on the left temple. On opening the head blood was discovered in small quantities, in different parts of the substance of the brain. The brain was intensely congested. The heart, lungs, and other organs were healthy. The physicians were of opinion that deceased came to his death from compression of the brain, the result of injury to the head.

William Foley and Daniel Quinn, two men who were with Sweeney when he received his fatal injuries were examined. Foley stated: I reside at the corner of Pearl and Ferry streets; about half-past eleven o'clock Wednesday night I was at the Goats' Head in Jacob street, when John Sweeney, the deceased, came in and told me that he had got abused aboard the Fulton Ferry-boat while he was crossing over from Brooklyn; he asked me and a man named O'Donnell, who was present, to go down with him and "show him a sight or see fair play;" after taking a drink with him we started to go down; when on the sidewalk I saw that deceased was very much intoxicated, and I advised him to go back, as he was under the influence of liquor; he answered that he had been abused, and as we were friends of his we should go down with him; myself, O'Donnell, and Quinn went with him to the Fulton Ferry; deceased went on to the bridge of the Ferry and had a dispute and clinch with a person who I took to be a boat-hand, who met him on the bridge; two other men, who appeared to be boat-hands, clinched hold of Sweeney and took him away; deceased then went out of the gate; as deceased came out of the gate some one hit him and knocked him down; I was also hit by some one; the first blow knocked deceased down; we came in three or four minutes afterwards and picked deceased up and carried him home; he spoke to us coming home, and said "Foley, I am too drunk to fight;" I do not know the man who struck deceased; he was a large man; I think he was a boat-hand; he was not engaged in the first of the affray; I did not see anything in his hand, and I think he struck him with his fist; we had all drank half a dozen times or more that evening; I did not hear the conversation between Sweeney and the boat-hand on the bridge.

Daniel Quinn deposed as follows: I resids at No. 32 Frankfort-street; I went with Sweeney to the Fulton Ferry-boat, Thursday, by Sweeney's request, to see fair play; he said that he had got used badly on the boat; when we arrived at the boat Sweeney paid our fair at the gate; we all went on to the boat, and went into the ladies' cabin; as we were half way into the cabin we met a man; Sweeney went outside of the cabin; some words passed between them when Sweeney struck the man; two men caught hold of Sweeney; Foley said, "Let the man go;" Foley caught hold of one of the men, and I caught hold of the other; I then left the boat; when I went out of the gate I saw Sweeney lying on the ground with his head leaning against the railing; I saw the man that Sweeney struck standing outside of the gate when I went out; I seized hold of him and said, "I want to have you arrested," when the man at the gate said, "He is not the man that struck him;" so I let him go; Sweeney appeared to be pretty well under the influence of liquor. The case will be resumed to-day.

PASSING BAD MONEY

Wm. Hager, a waiter lately employed at the New-York Hotel, was arrested, Saturday evening, in Fulton-avenue, near Sixteenth-street, by Sergeant McGuingle, of the Eighteenth Ward, for passing spurious $2 bills on the Hartford Exchange Bank. Several of the counterfeits were found on his person, and he confessed having passed five of them during the day. He was taken, yesterday, to the Jefferson Market Police Court and committed.

LIGHTNING-RODS

VERSUS

PROTECTION FROM LIGHTNING.

There are at this time various parties engaged in vending several kinds of patent insulated lightning-rods, relying upon the popular prejudice in favor of glass insulators, and upon the certificates of a few professional men.

Occasionally they make an unwarranted use of some more eminent names, such as that of Prof. SILLIMAN,* of New Haven, and others.

In dealing with persons aware of the reputation of Quimby's Lightning-Conductors, these parties affirm, for their own purposes, that the insulated rods they sell are a new invention, superseding QUIMBY'S, and that the latter have failed to afford protection from lightning, giving alleged instances of this, always in some one unt place.

These statements are utterly and unqualifiedly false, and, if made by responsible parties, would subject them to legal penalties.

The subscribers discarded glass insulators many years since, and experience has justified them in so doing, as well as in the adoption of those principles upon which their mode of protection from lightning is based.

Having studied this subject practically for many years, with very perfect means and appliances for investigation, and with entire success as to results, the undersigned do not conceive it necessary to procure any indorsement of their views—nevertheless, it is proper to say that many of the more distinguished electricians in the world, including FARADAY and ARAGO, have agreed in considering insulation useless, while some go further and believe it an injury.

The subscribers are ready and able to satisfy any one interested on this point.

The frequency with which buildings have been injured by lightning, notwithstanding the patent insulated rods upon them, clearly proves that no rule or set of rules can be given which will enable every one to put up lightning rods so as to insure protection. It proves that the rod must be adapted to meet the peculiar circumstances of each case, to do which requires knowledge and experience.

The undersigned point to the uniform success of their mode of protection as demonstrative evidence that they have acquired this knowledge and experience which is so essential.

Lightning rods improperly constructed and applied endanger more than they protect, and it may be safely said that this is the case with nine-tenths of the insulated rods now in use.

These rods are very clumsily put up, often disfiguring buildings very much, and as a rule, they break apart and fall to pieces within a year or two after they are erected.

On the contrary, the rods erected by the subscribers are substantial and are very neatly applied, as the principal architects in the City will certify, and the result of the test to which they have been subjected proves that they fully deserve the reputation they have acquired as complete safeguards from lightning.

A CHEAP FAMILY SEWING MACHINE.—The Boston Journal, of a few weeks' since, contained a notice of a new family sewing machine, invented and introduced into practical use in that city, which, from its simplicity, durability and cheapness, promises to be of great value to the overworked wife and mother. The machines are sold for $12, $15 and $25. We understand that some 250 of these machines have been disposed of, and that they have given perfect satisfaction. They are now selling in Boston at the rate of fifteen per day. The inventor, Mr. S F. PRATT, is now in this City, at No. 63 Liberty street, up-stairs, and is prepared to make arrangements with any responsible party to manufacture and sell them. This would seem to afford an excellent opening for a money-making business, as the demand for such machines as these is without limit.

It being the commencement of a new season, the manager has taken great pains in having it ushered in with "not a little show." The theatre has undergone a thorough change as if by magic. Both exterior and interior has been repainted, the interior upholstered, repanmented, gilded, carpeted, &c., &c., and a new drop-curtain, representing the "Golden Horn," Constantinople, has been painted by Mr WILLIAMSON. A grand eastern-spectacle drama has been gotten up for the occasion in a most magnificent manner, entitled "Cleopatra, or the Battle of Actium," with new scenery, machinery, properties, music, costumes, &c. The laughable pantomime of a "School in an Uproar" will follow, and the whole terminate with the drama of the "Mendicant." Go early.

MONDAY, May 4—A. M.

The Foreign Trade at the port of New-York for the past week amounted, in the entries of Foreign merchandise, including the Dry Goods table in our last paper, to $4,790,774, against $4,194,409 for the corresponding week, ending May 3, last year. The clearances of Domestic Produce and Miscellaneous Goods during the week were quite moderate—$884,523, against $1,201,953 the corresponding week last year. The exports of Specie for the week were, to Europe, (including $111,000 by the Fulton, for Havre, on Saturday,) $1,224,486; and to the West Indies, $486,416; together, $1,711,390, against $1,844,638 the corresponding week last year. The movement to the West Indies is balanced, as it has been for six or eight weeks past, by the receipts of Foreign Coin, principally Spanish Doubloons, of which $400,000 came on the Africa, from Liverpool, on Friday. The Specie balances in the Government Sub-Treasury in this City stood, on Saturday afternoon, $14,408,112, against $14,563,605 at the close of the previous week. The deliveries of California Gold from the packet of 5th April, on Wednesday, were $1,489,060, against $1,860,182 the corresponding steamer last year. The total amount with which the packet left San Francisco was $1,935,000 against $1,919,000 the corresponding packet last year—the direct shipments to England by the West India steamers from the Isthmus of Panama being increased this season. The whole Specie movement of the week, including the Sub-Treasury, would appear to be a balance of $333,163 in favor of the Bank reserve. The official average, to be made up this afternoon, is not likely, therefore, to prove materially different from the last statement when the average of Specie stood $11,827,861. The interior exchanges are believed to be working decidedly in favor of New-York, but as Money is easy here, the balances against the near cities have not yet been called home in Specie. As considerable interest attaches to the course of the Gold export at this season of the year, we repeat, for reference, from our paper of last Monday, the compilation of the SPECIE MOVEMENT OF MAY AND JUNE, 1856.

While the receipts at New-York, from California may slightly fall off this season, from the cause just referred to—the increased direct shipments from San Francisco to Europe—the receipts of Foreign Coin at this port will be materially larger from Europe and other quarters, growing out of the peculiar nature of the exchanges with the Islands of Cuba and Porto Rico, where doubloons are the accepted currency. Thus these receipts for the ten months:

From July 1, 1855, to May 1, 1856, were.....	$705,000
From July 1, 1856, to May 1, 1857, were.....	5,061,000
Increased Foreign Coin at New-York.....	$4,355,000
Decrease from California.....	3 632,000

As we are promised the official Custom-House returns of the Foreign Trade for the calendar month of April, in a day or two, (when a summary table for the ten months of the fiscal year will be made up,) we omit this morning our usual comparison by weeks.

The course of the Money Market, through the week, was quite easy, and the last arrival from California, together with the moderate ruling and fair supply of Exchange, independent of the bills based upon Specie shipments, have contributed to the confidence felt in the condition of the market. At the same time a proper degree of caution is excited by the immediate high value of Money in London. The advices by the Africa were expected, in some quarters, to bring a further advance in the rate of discount, but, as about £700,000 sterling from the recent Australian arrivals had gone in the English Bank, the Court of Directors deemed it unnecessary to put any further restriction upon its terms of accommodation. Here the rates of Exchange are steady at 109¼@⅜ on London; 5.18¾@5.17½ on Paris.

The Stock Market was irregular through the greater part of the week, with frequent and violent fluctuations in three or four of the Railroad Stocks, and a very large general business. On Friday the dealings were characterized by much dullness, neither class of operators showing any disposition to move in the absence of the steamer's news, which came in the afternoon. On Saturday the previous activity was renewed, and at the close of the buying appeared to be more spirited than usual, particularly in New-York and Erie, and Cleveland and Toledo. The changes in these two Stocks during the week were:

The fluctuations in Michigan southern were from 63¾ to 67 and back to 64, closing about 65 ¾ cent. Illinois Central stock, after advancing early in the week from 131¾ to 134@135, stood firm to the close. New-York Central steady throughout. Rock Island firm and higher. The General Market looked well at the close on Saturday. Our cotemporary of the United States Economist repeats the advice which we have repeatedly urged upon holders of Stocks, and upon speculators for the rise, not to lend their Stocks, if they hope to see the Bearish spirit of the Street brought within less unreasonable and destructive bounds than it has lately exhibited.

We direct attention to the Kentucky Bonds advertised on another page of this paper by Mr. J. G. BROWN, No. 74 Wall-street. They are the first mortgage issue of the Lexington and Danville Road, the combination of the Kentucky Central line from Covington opposite Cincinnati, through Lexington to its connexions with the Southern and South-western Roads at Nashville and Knoxsville, Tenn.

The Treasury of the United States held in all its depositories, subject to draft, at the close of the month of April, the grand total of $23,262,126, against $24,885,073 at the close of April, 1856. The following are the principal items:

Stock-Gambling on Long Time.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

Having noticed your editorial of yesterday with reference to a "reform of the New York Stock Exchange," I beg to offer a few suggestions, which I shall be glad if they prove of any practical use. I have a thorough experience of the system prevalent on the Stock Exchange in London and other parts of Britain, and feel satisfied that it will only be when the operations on the New-York Stock Exchange are regulated in the same manner as there, they will assume the feature of proper business like transactions.

To arrive at this end I would propose that there be two settling days in each month, and what are called "make-up or clearing days," immediately preceding each of those settling days. On the "make-up or clearing day" all transactions gone into up till 12 o'clock, commencing from the previous settling day, would then be adjusted, when the various stocks sold but not to be delivered, would be carried over to the following account, fixing the differences at the Stocks' prices of the day, and at the same time arranging the transactions for which the stocks are to be delivered. The members of the Board who owe differences on the adjusted transactions, granting "promises to pay" payable next day, at an hour to be fixed by the Secretary appointed for that purpose, who will be empowered to receive those differences from the debtors and disburse them to the creditors. The system by which the squaring of the members' accounts is arrived at is very interesting and can be explained hereafter.

To regulate the payment of the differences, there should be a rule compelling each member of the Board to hand in to the Secretay before 6 P. M. of the clearing day, a statement showing what may be due to or by him, and further, compelling the parties who owe differences, to lodge the same with the Secretary by 12 o'clock on the settling day—the rules to be enforced, viz., the former by the imposing of a fine, and the latter by being declared a defaulter. After 12 o'clock on the settling day, the Secretary to pay over to those members who may be entitled to them, their various balances.

In this way the whole operations would be brought within a small compass, and the different transactions settled without difficulty.

I will be most happy to give you any further information to carry out the object you have in view, and, in the meantime, I subscribe myself,

W.

The Interest on the Northern Railroad.

From the Albany Transcript.

It will be observed by the proceedings had in Common Council yesterday afternoon, that the Board directs the Chamberlain to wait until action has been had by the Court of Appeals upon the decision of Judge ALLEN, in the case of Clark against the city of Rochester, and until otherwise ordered by the Common Council, before paying the interest on the Northern Railroad loan.

We have already stated that an application had been made by several of our citizens for an injunction restraining the Chamberlain from paying this interest, and that Judge WRIGHT, to whom the application was made, denied the application on the ground that neither of the applicants was a bondholder. As we understand the object of this application, it is merely to ascertain if the loan was constitutional. If it was constitutional, then there the matter will end, so far as opposition to the payment of the debt is concerned. But if it was not constitutional, the obligation of the city falls, as also does it with regard to the Albany and Susquehannah Railroad loan.

Those who have pressed this question say they have no intention to urge the city to repudiate these debts. To the contrary, they claim that it is their desire that the good old city should faithfully meet all her obligations; and to do this, in the event the act is pronounced unconstitutional, they propose to have the charter so amended as to permit of the creation of a sinking fund to be applied exclusively to the payment of these debts.

Pittsburg and Chicago Railroad.

From the Chicago Tribune.

We have received from the secretary of this road a pamphlet entitled: "Exhibit of the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railroad Company with relation to the general mortgage of $10,000 000." From this pamphlet we learn that a mortgage of $10,000 000 upon the entire road has been issued to JOHN FRAZER son and THOMAS E WALKER, of New-York, and is intended to become a first and only lien upon the road. The object of the mortgage is to provide security, first, for $3,000,000 of Construction Bonds, at 7 ₰ cent., having thirty years to run, the proceeds of which are to finish the road to Chicago, ballast and fence it, and thoroughly stock it; and, second, for $6 000,000 of Redemption bonds, of the same tenor, and bearing the same interest and date, the purpose of their issue being to make timely provision, by their sale or exchange, for the existing funded debt of the Company created by the assumption of the bonds and mortgages issued by the three roads prior to consolidation. In other words, the mortgage is intended, besides finishing the road, to consolidate the funded debt of the Company. A sinking fund for the reduction of the mortgage is provided for, by setting apart three-fourths of one ₰ cent from the net earnings for ten years, and one and a half ₰ cent. for the other twenty years, together with such other surplus funds as may from time to time accrue.

VOL. VI.....NO. 1755 NEW-YORK, TUESDAY, MAY 5, 1857. PRICE TWO CENTS.

THE BURDELL MURDER.

TRIAL OF MRS. CUNNINGHAM.

A JURY OBTAINED.

COURT OF OYER AND TERMINER.—MONDAY, May 4, 1857.

Before Hon. Judge Daves

The Court of Oyer and Terminer opened this morning for trial of Mrs. EMMA AUGUSTA CUNNINGHAM, indicted both as an accessory and principal in the murder of Dr. HARVEY BURDELL, on the night of the 30th of January, 1857

For the purpose of accommodating as large a number of the curious as possible, the Court sits in the Circuit room, and the folding doors which separate it from the Marine Court are thrown open. At 10 A. M. both rooms were filled with spectators, and the bar was crowded with lawyers. Nearly an hour was occupied in impanneling a jury for the Circuit Court. When the requisite number had been obtained, they were discharged until Monday morning. At 11 the Court commenced impanneling a Jury for the trial of Mrs. CUNNINGHAM, who was then brought into Court, accompanied by her daughters, AUGUSTA and HELEN, and in charge of Officer BARTHOLF, and his deputies, Messrs. BISHOP and BUCHANAN They were seated on the right of the Judge until the panel was called. The prying curiosity of spectators and professional gentlemen was disappointed for some time, as Mrs. CUNNINGHAM'S presence in the deepest mourning apparel—with veil large and impenetrable to other eyes than her own, rendered criticism of her countenance impossible. The arrangements for the trial of the case are good; and, although, the many present were evidently intensely interested, there was not much noise or confusion. JOHN GRAHAM, Esq., counsel for JOHN J. KOHLY, was present, as were Mr. DEAN, Mr. THAYER and Mr. CLINTON for Mrs. CUNNINGHAM, and A OAKEY HALL, District Attorney, and S. B. CUSHING, Attorney-General of the State of New-York, for the prosecution.

When the panel of five hundred had been called, the Judge said all who had not answered to their names, would be fined twenty-five dollars, for every day of the term. Much time was consumed in calling the panel for excuses. Toe case was not called from the calendar until near one o'clock, when Mr. HALL, the District Attorney, rose and asked if the Court were ready.

The Court—Yes, Sir.

District Attorney—Then I call up from the calendar of the Court the indictment against Mrs. Cunningham, charging her with murder. We are ready to proceed with that case—to take the arraignment and impannel a Jury.

Mr. Dean—The prisoner is ready.

The Court—Bring the prisoner to the Bar.

Mrs Cunningham was conducted by an officer to a seat beside her counsel, and removed her veil. Her face was much flushed, and she trembled slightly. Generally her appearance exhibited few of those traces of bodily exhaustion and mental distress which, from her long incarceration and the solemnity of the position in which she was now placed, people would naturally be led to look for. Eckel, who occupied a seat beside his counsel, appeared nauseally hearty. He conversed pleasantly and with great freedom. After Mrs. Cunningham was seated,

Mr. Clinton rose and said: "We waive the reading of the indictment, and would put in a plea of Not guilty."

Mr. Dean asked that the Clerk, in calling the names, be directed to give the residence and occupation of each Juror.

The Clerk was instructed accordingly.

James Mahoney, of the Twenty-first Ward, was the first Juror called. He was challenged for principal cause. He was asked whether he had expressed an opinion, and answered that he had.

Mr. Dean held that that disqualified him to sit as a Juror.

The District-Attorney held that he had a right to ask what the opinion was, that it might be known whether it legally disqualified him.

The Court allowed him to be interrogated.

District-Attorney—[to Juror]—What was it you said when you expressed an opinion? A.—I said that the evidence, as far as I had read, was not sufficient to convict Mrs. Cunningham; that is my opinion still; I have no opinion of her guilt or innocence.

Q.—[By Mr. Dean]—Have you an opinion whether, in point of fact, Dr. Burdell was murdered or not? A.—I have.

The Court did not admit the question, as allowable, under the rule.

Mr. Dean said they would deny that a murder had been committed there [No. 31 Bond-street.] It would be an issue in the case, and therefore he thought the question necessary.

The Court, in passing upon the challenge, said he understood the ground of challenge for principal cause to be the expression of an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner. By opinion was meant a settled conclusion or result to which the mind arrives on hearing a state of facts and considering them. Webster defined an opinion to be a settled judgment or persuasion. He (the Judge) did not hold, therefore, that this juror had formed an opinion within these definitions of the term. The challenge must consequently be refused.

Counsel for the prisoner excepted, and challenged to the favor.

Messrs. Sanxay and Cowdrey were appointed triers.

Mr. Dean challenged the juror on the ground that he had expressed an opinion and was biased against the prisoner.

Mr. Mahony said he had read the first part of the testimony taken on the inquest, and the editorial comments thereon in the Herald; but they had made no impression upon him.

Mr. Dean—How was it that you received no impression from the comments of the Herald?

Mahony—The comments in that paper seldom [illegible] any impression upon me.

[illegible]d read accounts in other papers, and his general impression was that the testimony was not sufficient to convict Mrs. Cunningham. Nevertheless, he [illegible] she was mixed up in some way, in the murder, and he had a bias against the prisoner.

District-Attorney asked him whether he could [illegible] the bias, if sitting as a juror.

Dean objected to the question.

Court said it had been decided by the Court of [illegible] that an answer to the question was proper to [illegible] the triers.

Mr. Mahony answered that he did not think he could lay aside his bias.

The triers held him not indifferent.

Charles Suydam was next called, and having formed and expressed an opinion, was set aside.

Others called as follows:

John K. Fisher.—He had not formed what would be called an opinion. He had no decided opinion and could not say whether the prisoner was guilty or innocent from any testimony he had seen.

Challenge for principal cause was withdrawn, and he was challenged for favor, and answered as before. He had no impression as to the guilt or innocence of of the prisoner. He had formed various conjectures, but had no prejudice against the prisoner, although he would require some evidence to convince him of her entire innocence.

He was set aside.

Gilbert Oak could not say that he had any impression in regard to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, and was not prejudiced against her. He had an impression as to who committed the murder, and suspected that Mrs. Cunningham might possibly know something about it, as it occurred in her house. He was sworn as a Juror.

William Linden thought Dr. Burdell could not have been murdered by any body else than those in the house. He was set aside.

Jonathan Sarles had formed an opinion, and was set aside.

John J. Michaels' hearing was pretty good. He thought he was born in the City of New York, and knew that he had lived in one spot nearly 40 years, therefore he ought to be pretty well known. He was a [illegible]—not a chairmaker—and had formed an [illegible]. He was set aside.

[illegible] Gardner was not aware that he had an [illegible] the prisoner was guilty of the murder, [illegible] it would require evidence to remove the im[illegible] that the parties in the house knew of the [illegible]. He was set aside.

[illegible]y had formed, and expressed, and still re[illegible] opinion of the guilt or innocence of the [illegible]. He was set aside.

[illegible]ve had formed an opinion, and was set [illegible].

[illegible] Class was asked whether he had said he would like to hang both Mrs. Cunningham and Eckel, without Judge or Jury, and answered that he had [illegible]. He denied that he had offered to bet $100 that [illegible]mer's Jury would implicate Mrs Cunningham [illegible]kel. He had an impression it would require [illegible]ce to remove. He was set aside.

[illegible]ner C. Mega had expressed an opinion and [illegible]ained it. He was set aside.

[illegible]s A. Suydam, Francis Bonney, Thos. L Van [illegible] Jacob N. Ruhte and Jarard Wilcox were set [illegible]ving formed an opinion

[illegible]r L. Norton had read all the testimony taken [illegible] the Coroner. He had formed no opinion and [illegible] prejudice. He had known Dr. Burdell as a [illegible] acquaintance, but had not seen him during [illegible] six or seven years.

Mr. Norton was sworn as a Juror.

The Court then took a recess until 4 o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

Soon after 4 o'clock the Court convened again, and, impanneling a Jury, was continued.

Francis Gahagan had read all the testimony, but had formed no opinion with reference to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner. He had not suspected any one. He was sworn as a Juror.

James Gibson had not formed an opinion, but had an unfavorable impression, which it would require evidence to remove. He was set aside.

Thomas S. Hart, Stephen W. Jones, Austin Melville, John Muller, Jacob Miles, Samuel A. Lambert, Benjamin W. Merman, Frederick Mayer, Simeon Watts, Israel Jarvis, Harvey Watson, J. Stearns Lane, Samuel Torrens, and James H. White, were set aside, having formed an opinion.

William L. Lockwood had formed an opinion at first, but had no opinion after that, or rather he had changed his opinion. He thought the scene had changed He was sworn as a Juror.

Samuel Turney was set aside.

Daniel Cary had not formed an opinion. He had read Farrell's evidence. Had no impression whatever—having read only Farrell's evidence—at least that was all he could recollect. He was challenged peremptorily.

Julius R. Cogswell and Francis G. Smith were set aside.

Charles F. Hunter had not formed an opinion, but suspected that a murder committed at the time of night must be known to those in the house. He had no bias against the prisoner. He was sworn as a Juror.

David Newman was set aside.

Richard Heathar had read the testimony; was not prejudiced. He was challenged peremptorily.

Mr. Dean wished to say here that when, in the morning, he had said they would deny that any murder had been committed, he did not mean to be understood as denying that Dr Burdell had been killed. What he meant was that they would deny that the homicide had been committed under such circumstances as constituted a murder; it might have been in self defence

Charles Hodges, Stephen Philbin, Justus Dill, John H. Tesling, Morris Duffy, John H Decker, Hiram A Pettibone, Joseph Potter, Duncan Hagar, Isaac Haber, William S. Smith were set aside, having formed an opinion.

Henry Krochl had an opinion, but had none now; his mind was unbiased; he thought he could give a verdict in accordance with the evidence. He was set aside.

John G Sims, Robert M. Gleason, David H. Clarke, John Fisher, Robert Robinson, David Clarkson, Jr., Lewis H. Gorham, John McNight, Samuel A. Church, Richard C. Combes, Lewis Reynolds, Aaron N. Thompson and John Ward were set aside.

Horatio D Randall had read a portion of the testimony, but had no opinion. Challenged peremptorily.

James McElroy, Robert G. H Huntington, Ernest Tunne, William Stebins and Henry Palmer were set aside.

Luke C. Cole was not challenged. He said he had reasons which he wished to state, but they were not heard, and he was sworn as a Juror.

George Stewart had read some of the evidence and had heard it talked of. He did not recollect having expressed any opinion, and had no impression. He was challenged peremptorily.

Cyrus A. Hubbard and Samuel C. Clarke were set aside.

John Green had formed no opinion. The challenge was withdrawn, and he was sworn as a Juror.

Edmund Kiby, John Crean, George W. Thorpe, and Edward Turner were set aside

George Tugnot had an impression the morning after the murder, but as soon as he saw the evidence of the marriage of Mrs. Cunningham to D. Burdell his impression was removed The challenge was withdrawn and he was sworn as a Juror.

Wm. H. Conklin had no bias save in favor of being excused from serving on the Jury The triers declared him competent, and he was challenged peremptorily.

Joseph Garradet had formed an opinion, and he was set aside.

David W. Doughty had formed no opinion in the case. He had heard who was implicated, in the Coroner's Jury's verdict. He had read a portion of the testimony, now and again, as he had time. He was sworn as a Juror.

Thomas Cesey and Aaron Buerlein were set aside.

Nathaniel W. Chater had formed no opinion. He had had an impression, during the inquest, that was modified or changed as the evidence progressed. He thought Farrell's testimony important, and had an opinion as to its truth. If true, he thought it would implicate Mrs. Cunningham, as an inmate of the house. He had an impression, concerning her guilt or knowledge of the murder, unfavorable to her. The triers thought him competent. He was challenged peremptorily.

Joseph B. Guttenberg was set aside.

Frederick A. Goetze had formed no opinion. The challenge was withdrawn, and he was sworn as a Juror.

Samuel Emberson was set aside.

Martin Ulrich had an opinion that she was guilty, but he had given that up, and was not now decided. He thought she knew of the murdor. He was set aside.

James T. Dubois had not formed any decided opinion, but had a strong impression. He was set aside.

Isaac Benjamin, Philip Cochran, John Thomas, Bernard Carberry, Lorenzo Powers, Charles J. Hine, Philip Van Volkenberg, Chas. T. Edward, were set aside.

Clements Lutze had an opinion the first day, but he could not hold that opinion any longer. He could not read English very well, and was excused.

Cornelius B Anderson had expressed an opinion, but had none now. But he had an impression, which it would require evidence to remove. He was set aside.

Edward P. Griffin, John McKinney, Daniel Moran, Albert K. Buffum, set aside.

John Archibald—Challenge withdrawn, and Mr. Archibald sworn in as the eleventh Juror.

Lewis Schuman, Benjamin L. Swan, John C. Andrew, and Theodore Saltus, were set aside.

Lewis Jones was excused.

John Galligan was set aside.

Gilbert W. Barnes had not formed an opinion. The challenge was withdrawn, and he was sworn as a Juror.

This completed the Jury, as follows:

Gilbert Oakley, merchant, Ninth Ward.
Chauncey L. Norton, President, Ninth Ward.
Francis K. Gahagan, sandpaper business, Eighteenth Ward.
William L. Lockwood, produce dealer, Eighteenth Ward.
Charles F. Hunter, merchant, Eighth Ward.
Luke C. Coe, silk merchant, Fifteenth Ward.
John Green, builder, Sixth Ward.
George Tugnot, forge worker, Eighteenth Ward.
David W. Doughty, pickler, Nineteenth Ward.
Frederick A. Goetze, tobacconist, Eleventh Ward.
John Archibald, agent and fancy goods, Fifteenth Ward.
Gilbert W. Barnes, iron railing manufacturer, Eighteenth Ward.

Of the 500 jurors summoned upwards of 100 were absent. Of the 400 who answered nearly every man was tried as to his competence.

The jurors not sworn in were dismissed till Monday morning next.

The Judge then ordered the Court to be adjourned till Tuesday morning at nine o'clock, and intimated that he would sit all day until the case was finished.

To this counsel for the defence demurred on the ground that if so occupied they would not have time to prepare their defence.

The Judge thought otherwise, and said that he would allow the jurors a recess of from one till two and from six till seven o'clock, for refreshments. But he felt called on, inasmuch as the Jury were to be kept together till the case was ended, to devote every available minute to it.

The announcement that the Jury would not be allowed to go to their homes met with considerable opposition both from Jurors and from the prisoner's council.

The Judge expressed himself as personally opposed to their separating, and would only yield to the united wishes of counsel on both sides.

After some conversation as to the advisability of inforcing the intimation of the Court,

The Judge yielded thus far, viz: that he would allow each of the jurors who wished, to go to his home accompanied by an officer, with whom, after making whatever arrangements their affairs imperatively demanded, they were to return to French's Hotel, and there remain all night under charge of the deputies. In the morning, at as early an hour as they might deem necessary one of them might, under charge of an officer, go to his place of business, and, having completed his arrangements there, was to return in time for the opening of the Court, which, for the nonce, would be deferred till 10 o'clock.

Accordingly at about 9¼ o'clock P. M. the Court was adjourned till Tuesday morning at ten, when the District Attorney, Mr. Hall, will state the case for the prosecution.

Mrs. Cunningham's Marriages.

From the Express, May 4.

Allowing that Mrs. EMMA A. CUNNINGHAM was married to Dr. BURDELL, she must have been married three several times, as shown by the Records in the Brooklyn Surrogate's office, which, through the kindness of HORMAN B. DAWSON Esq., the Surrogate, we have been permitted to examine.

By these records we find the last will and testament of CHRISTOPHER HEMSTEAD, the father of Mrs. CUNNINGHAM, who died in March, 1839, bequeathing his property, which was very moderate, to his family. His daughter EMMA AUGUSTA in this will, is mentioned as the wife of HENRY CUNNINGHAM, and in a codicil to the will the following bequest is made:

"I give and bequeath to my daughter, Emma Augusta, one bed, bedstead and bedding; one bureau, twelve curled maple chairs, two trunks, one large ingrain carpet, one mahogany drawer, and one new family Bible, to be purchased for, and given to her, by the executors of my will, as soon as may be after my decease."

This will was proven on the 3d of May, 1839, at which time (the will says) Emma Augusta was not yet twenty-one years of age.

In another volume of the records we find the last will and testament of George D. Cunningham, who died on the 1st of June, 1854, leaving his wife Emma Augusta, and five children named Margaret, Augusta, Helen E., Georgiana, George D., and William S. Cunningham, over whom he appointed Rodman B. Dawson, the present Surrogate, as guardian—Mr. Dawson then being a clerk in the Surrogate's office under Surrogate Jesse C. Smith.

This will was procured on the 22d of November, 1854. In it the testator revoked all other wills, testaments and codicils, making his wife Emma Augusta his sole heir and executrix

At the trial he obtained the life insurance of $10,000; he took it in his wife's name, so that it might not be made responsible for any of his debts, as he was at that time pretty heavily involved.

His personal property outside the insurance, as above, was all appropriated to the payment of these debts, so that the only property actually accruing to Mrs. C. was the $10,000, and his last will was dated on the 15th of August, 1849.

THE NEWBURG TRAGEDY.

THE MYSTERY DEEPENED!

A Case of Circumstantial Evidence Destroyed—Reappearance of Miss Sarah Bloom—The Body of the Murdered Woman Still Unrecognized—Great Excitement.

The excitement under which the quiet town of Newburg has labored since the discovery of the murder of last week, was fanned into fever-heat, yesterday, by the occurrence of a series of remarkable circumstances.

On Saturday it was positively announced that a young woman, named JANE BLOOM, residing in Shawangunk township, had identified the body of the murdered woman as that of her sister, SARAH. The young woman was very positive of the fact, described with great accuracy and minuteness certain physical peculiarities of her sister, and insisted that the body was hers, notwithstanding directly opposite testimony given by one WILLIAM JENKINS, who saw SARAH BLOOM on Tuesday. The public excitement was somewhat appeased by the supposed recognition of the remains, and efforts to find the murderer were at once set on foot. But, on Sunday afternoon the original SARAH BLOOM appeared in Newburg alive and well. The young man JENKINS, who, as we stated yesterday, had been confined to await the result of the Inquest, was at once set at liberty, all cause for suspicion against him having been removed by the discovery that Miss BLOOM was living. The question then came up—how could Miss BLOOM'S sister have been so deceived as to testify positively that the dead body was that of her sister? The result of a comparison of marks upon the bodies of the two women, however, settled the doubt. The peculiar marks on the dead body and those on the body of SARAH BLOOM are identical in form, position and number. The body had a scar on the left eyebrow; SARAH BLOOM has the same. The body had a scar on the middle joint of the middle finger of the left hand; SARAH BLOOM has the same. The two middle toes of the left foot of the corpse are grown together, nearly to the first joint; a similar peculiarity exists in Miss BLOOM. The toes of both feet in the corpse and in those of Miss BLOOM are compressed, as from wearing tight shoes. A mark, as from a ring which had been roughly drawn from the finger, was found on the hand of the murdered woman, but the ring was not found. Miss BLOOM wears a cornelian ring on the corresponding finger. These curious coincidences, very remarkable as far as regards physical peculiarities, seem to justify the conclusions which were arrived at on Saturday. Miss SARAH C. BLOOM, however, was not murdered, but is alive and quite amazed at the notoriety she has gained and Mr. WILLIAM JENKINS, instead of being a tenant of the lock-up, has his liberty again, free from all suspicion.

The funeral of the unknown victim was attended on Sunday morning, by an immense concourse of citizens and strangers. The services commenced at the Court House at 9 o'clock. They were conjncted by Rev. DAVID BUCK, Pastor of the Second Methodist Episcopal Church in Newburg, who read from the Book of Genesis the narrative of the death of Abel. He said he had but a half-hour's notice to officiate on this occasion, and was unprepared to offer any extended remarks; yet he felt that the text of Scripture which declares that "the way of the transgressor is hard," was peculiarly applicable to this case. He improved the occasion to the edification of his hearers. Rev. Dr. FORSYTH, Pastor of the Reformed Associate Presbyterian Church in Newburg, closed the service with a fervent prayor, and the throng then formed in procession, and followed the body to the Episcopal burying ground, where it was deposited in a vault. The coffin was without an inscription, although it was then supposed the body was that of SARAH BLOOM.

A REMARKABLE SCENE.

During the progress of the funeral ceremonies a remarkable scene occurred, which wraps the event in still deeper mystery. A small woman, apparently 50 or 60 years of age, who described herself as a Creole, and bore the appearance of a Quadroon, reached the Court-House while the funeral services were going on, laboring under great distress of mind. Her story was that she was a resident of Brooklyn; that a niece of hers left Brooklyn a week ago, on Thursday, to go to Newburg; that this niece had kept company with a young man for three years; that the girl is missing, and the young man has not since been heard of. This woman did not give her own name, or that of her niece, nor could she tell whether the girl and the young man went to Newburg together. She appeared exceedingly anxious to see the body, saying she believed it was that of her niece. Not applying to the proper authorities, she was unable to obtain access to the remains, but told her story to a knot of eager listeners, none of whom seem to have lifted a hand to help her. She disappeared as suddenly as she came, and nothing is now known of her whereabouts. Information of her visit having come to the ears of the Coroner and Sheriff, these officers took immediate measures to discover her, but were only able to ascertain that she returned to New-York by the Hudson River train at 9 o'clock yesterday morning. The police authorities of this City and Brooklyn are earnestly desired to communicate to the Coroner at Newburg, or to the Sheriff of Orange County, any information of which they may be in possession, either of this woman or of persons missing. It is now thought that the woman, could she be found, would be able to throw some light upon this mystery.

THE CORONER'S INVESTIGATION.

The Coroner's Jury reassembled at the Newburg Court-house at 9 o'clock yesterday morning. The large Court-room was densely packed by an anxious crowd, whose excitement at the sudden appearance of Miss BLOOM was intense. It was announced that Miss BLOOM was at her home in Shawangunk (a village in Newburg township, some twelve miles north west from Newburg,) until Sunday afternoon, when she heard for the first time that she was supposed to have been murdered, and straightway went down to Newburg to correct the error. Her testimony being very important, Miss BLOOM was accordingly the first witness sworn:

TESTIMONY OF SARAH BLOOM.

Sarah C. Bloom, sworn: My name is Sarah C. Bloom; I am the sister of Jane Bloom.

Q.—Where does your sister live? A.—At Shawangunk, with Mr. John Cooley.

Q.—Were you in Newburg on Tuesday? A.—I was; I came here on Tuesday with Mr. Robinson's son William.

Q.—Where does he live? A.—At Galeville.

Q.—Did you return to Shawangunk with him? A.—I did not.

Q.—When did you return to Shawangunk? A.—On Tuesday night, with Mr. William Jenkins; I went to Mr. Kemp's store, and asked Mr. Jenkins if he could take me.

Q.—What time was this? A.—It was about five o'clock when I called at the store, I should think, as near as I can recollect.

Q.—Why did you go to see Mr. Jenkins? A.—I went because I missed my chance to go home with some person else.

Q.—What did he say? A.—He at first hesitated about taking me, but finally consented to do so.

Q.—What time did you start from Newburg. A.—A little after nine o'clock in the evening.

Q.—By what route did you go? A.—By the South Plank-road; we went through Walden; we got lost on the road.

Q.—Where did you get lost? A.—The place was where we ought to have turned down, by Lutin Kidd's; we went down by the mill at Walden instead of going the right road; we went down to the mill, and then turned back.

Q.—When did Mr. Jenkins leave you? A.—By Pruyn's barn; I intended going to Mr. Morris Masten's house; Mr. Jenkins left me about two rods from the house.

Q.—Did you go to Mr. Masten's house? A.—I did.

Q.—How long did you stay there? A.—About three-quarters of an hour, but could not get in.

Q.—Where did you go then? A.—I left, and went to Widow Dougherty's.

Q.—Where does Widow Dougherty live? A.—About five miles from the Basin.

Q.—When did you first hear that the body supposed to be yours was found? A.—On Sunday morning.

Q.—Who told you? A.—(Hesitatingly)—Mr. Byron Donnelly.

Q.—At what place did you get into the wagon with Mr. Jenkins? A.—In High-street.

Q.—Were you at any time previously in company of Mr. Jenkins? A.—I was not.

Q.—Where were you on Tuesday? A.—At Mrs. Tice's.

MISS BLOOM RECOGNIZED.

James M. Mitchell, (an old gentleman, well known in Newburg,) called and sworn:

Q.—Do you know Sarah C. Bloom? A.—I do.

Q.—Do you recognize this young lady (pointing to witness) as that person? A.—I recognize the person who has just left the stand as Sarah C. Bloom.

Q.—How long have you known her? A.—Almost from a child; at least, for several years.

This testimony appearing to establish the identity of Miss BLOOM, no further witnesses were called.

DESCRIPTION OF THE REMAINS.

We are indebted to Dr. EDWARD S. DUNSHER, of Newburg, for the following accurate description of the murdered woman:

On Saturday, May 2, I was present at a post mortem examination of the body found murdered on Thursday, near Marlborough; I went with Dr. Ely, and, at his request, to render him any assistance that I might be able to give; the body was that of a female; age variously surmised at from twenty to twenty five years; length of body five feet three inches; skin fair, smooth; limbs small, delicately moulded; form slender; the hair is a very dark brown; when wet, looks as if it were black; on the forehead it was shaved back about three-quarters of an inch deep, and an inch or more wide; eyes blue; over the left cheek-bone, about an inch below the eye, is a circular, or rather curved scar, quite prominently marked, and about three-quarters of an inch long. On the left leg, about half way between the knee and ankle, and on the inside, or rather between the inside and front, is a small mole. The nails of the small toes present a peculiar curved growth, and the toes are compressed, as from wearing tight shoes. Teeth prominent and not very good; the right front incisor was filled obliquely, across the inside corner, in a somewhat peculiar manner. These are all the natural marks that I took notice of.

A SEARCH.

The Inquest was adjourned yesterday, till such time as the Coroner sees fit to call the Jury together. Soon after adjournment, Sheriff EDWARDS and Coroner FENTON drove out of town together, saying they were going north. It was currently reported in Newburg that some clue had been placed in the hands of these gentlemen, and that they proposed to ride twenty miles up the river last night, to search for further information. The whole affair, meantime, is more mysterious than ever.

INTERESTING FROM KANSAS.

Speech from Gov. Stanton—Proposal of the Free-State Men to Take Part in the Election.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times:

LAWRENCE, Kansas, Saturday, April 25, 1857.

Last evening the new acting Governor, Secretary STANTON, paid Lawrence a social visit, and it was an event that he will not be likely to soon forget. He was entertained at the Cincinnati House, took tea with Gov. ROBINSON, and early in the evening over five hundred of our citizens gathered in the street in front of that house to see the new man, and, if possible, get a speech from him. After many invitations he came out upon the piazza and spoke to the large assemblage for over an hour. He alluded to the great importance our future course must have upon the destiny of our own country, and even more indirectly upon the whole human family. He confessed himself a Southern man by birth, education and interest, and he should vote to make Kansas a Slave State, provided he might be allowed to vote at all. At the same time, he loved the Union above all other considerations, and would sacrifice the beloved institution, or give his life even, to preserve it. He said the Territorial laws must be obeyed, at which the audience sent up one unanimous "Never," whose echo rang out over the distant prairies as an admonition to the new Governor, that he could neither flatter or frighten a Lawrence audience. But he went on and told them they would be obliged to submit, for the President, the Territorial officers and Congress for at least the next two years would all sustain the action of the so-called bogus legislature. He was several times interrupted by outhursts of disapprobation; also, they often cheered his conservative remarks, when he counseled peace and promised us equal justice.

On the whole, the Governor has impressed us rather favorably, as an honest, accomplished Southern gentleman, who advocates Slavery from principle, upon philosophic grounds, and is frank at all times to avow his true position without the least equivocation.

He urged us all to vote in the coming election, but said he was in favor of submitting the constitution to the people, and the Convention itself had all power to provide for this.

He was followed by Judge SMITH and Gov. ROBINSON, after which a most excellent supper was furnished by Mr. GATES, at which general good feeling, conviviality and wit were ably exhibited. General MCLAIN, of Lecompton, was also present, and toasts were offered expressive of both shades of Kansas politics. At about midnight they dispersed, feeling that both sides had been fairly represented, and hoping that a better intercourse and more general sociability would be encouraged hereafter.

The question of participating in the Constitutional election is one of the gravest character. No greater one has been before us. We proposed to the Governor last night that, provided it could be so arranged, that one Pro-Slavery man and one Free-State man could jointly take the census in every county, then that four judges of election be appointed, two of each party, and the signature of three of them be necessary to every certificate of election, then we would go into the election in good faith and expect justice at their hands. The matter is still under consideration. RANDOLPH.

What the Free-State Party in Kansas Expect to Do.

From the Lawrence (Kansas) Herald of Freedom.

The NEW-YORK TIMES seems to think our Topeka Constitution dead, and beyond the hope of resurrection. In this the editor errs. Our hope of making Kansas a free State is partly centered in that Constitution. When the Pro-Slavery Party sends their Constitution to Congress, we expect to send ours there—the one formed by the actual bona fide residents of the Territory. We expect in a memorial, signed by a large majority of all the legal voters in the Territory, to show the fraud and violence which has characterized the past legislation of Kansas; show how the bogus Legislature was imposed upon us; show the infamous code they have enacted for our enslavement; the late Constitutional Convention movement; the designs of the leaders in that movement, and the villainous schemes connected and artfully carried out, to engraft a Pro-Slavery Constitution upon the people, in opposition to the will of nine-tenths of the entire population. We intend to show that the citizens of the Territory took no part in that election, and that their frauds are clear of all connection with the bogus Constitution; that among other reasons we send aloof from the election, was the fact that DOUGLAS, TOOMBS, and the entire party now in power, had assumed the position that an enabling act should be passed by Congress, before the people of a Territory had a right to form a State Constitution; that, knowing Congress had vested no such right in the Territorial Legislature, it was usurped authority on their part, and something we could not recognize. We will close by asking Congress to pass a law submitting both of these Constitutions, after the same shall have been published three months in all the papers of the Territory, to the actual voters of the Territory, after throwing suitable guards around the ballot box, and allow the PEOPLE to decide for themselves which of the two they want, and whichever is adopted, to that we will submit.

FROM WASHINGTON.

The Rejection of the Dallas-Clarendon Treaty—Relief of the Filibusters.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Monday, May 4, 1857.

I telegraphed to you yesterday that intelligence had reached the State Department of the rejection of the Dallas Clarendon Treaty by the British Ministry. The announcement took the President and Cabinet entirely by surprise. The whole tenor of Lord NAPIER'S conversation, both official and personal, since his arrival, had encouraged the belief that Great Britain would readily acquiesce in the modifications made to the Treaty by the Senate and that the whole difference between the two countries would thus be settled.

No explanations accompanied the announcement. Indeed the statement itself is not properly official, as it is understood to be from Mr. DALLAS, and to convey what he understands to be the decision of the Ministry, rather than any communication from the British Foreign Secretary himself upon the subject.

It is reported here that the cause of the British refusal to ratify the treaty relates to the affairs of Honduras, which are still in an unsettled state, and that the English Government will insist at all hazards upon their rights to receive the stipulations of the Honduras Government for the perpetual exclusion of Slavery from their territory, and to make it a matter of absolute treaty obligation.

I am inclined, however, to regard it as probable that the real difficulty is in the determination of Great Britain to retain possession of the Bay Islands, which by the treaty were surrendered to the State of Honduras.

The Administration has been engaged to-day on Central American affairs, and especially upon the question whether our Government shall interpose for the relief of the filibusters in Nicaragua by bringing them away. It is conceded that WALKER'S career is ended, and that all that can now be done is to aid his men in regaining their homes in the United States.

[FROM OUR REGULAR TELEGRAPHIC REPORTER.]

WASHINGTON, Monday, May 4.

The rumors of the rejection by Great Britain of the Dallas-Clarendon treaty is confirmed by the reception of a letter from Mr. DALLAS himself to the President. Lord NAPIER is expected shortly to communicate the fact officially to our Government, when the subject will be considered by the Cabinet. Both the Administration and Lord NAPIER were at first inclined to believe the treaty would be ratified by England, but the recent debates in Parliament and more especially the late English elections had changed their opinions.

The Navy Department having reason to believe that the crew of the Highflyer, wrecked on the coast of Formosa, were murdered, instructions have just been issued to the East India squadron to proceed thither to make investigation.

The orders of the late Administration regarding the protection of the persons and property of citizens of the United States at Panama remain in force, and require this to be done at all hazards, even to the seizure of the Isthmus.

There was no meeting of the Cabinet to-day, hence the report, that they had under consideration the rejected treaty, was erroneous.

Secretary FLOYD is recovering from the sickness which has confined him to the house for the past week.

The Court of Claims resumed session to-day.

The receipts into the Treasury for the quarter ending April 1, were nearly $20,500,000; of which $19,000,000 were from the Customs, and over $1,000,000 from the Land sales. The expenditures were $17,250,000.

THE LATE ATTEMPTED INSURRECTION—ARREST OF THE ARCHBISHOP AND SEVERAL PRIESTS—THE BRITISH DIFFICULTY—FILLIBUSTERING AGAINST SONORA.

NEW-ORLEANS, Sunday, May 3.

Advices are received from the City of Mexico to the 18th of March.

The archbishop and several priests have been arrested for being implicated in the late attempted insurrection. The archbishop is to be banished.

Two British vessels had arrived at Sacrifices, causing some excitement, as it was supposed their object was to bully the Government and hasten the settlement of the English question.

The threatened fillibuster demonstration from California upon Sonora also created much anxiety.

Further Indian Disturbances in Iowa.

ST LOUIS, Friday, May 1.

We have advices from Fort Desmoines, Iowa, of the 27th ult. A band of five or six hundred Indians on the Saturday previously crossed the Desmoines River in the neighborhood of Fort Dodge. It is supposed their intention was to attack that Fort, and much anxiety is felt as to the result. As the place is weakly garrisoned, several families had sought refuge at Desmoines, and companies were organizing to go to the assistance of Fort Dodge.

Opening of the Memphis and Charlestown Railroad, &c.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Saturday, May 2.

We had a jubilee day here, yesterday, on the occasion of the opening of the Memphis and Charleston Railroad. The city was crowded with people. It is estimated that there were 15,000 strangers present. The display was very fine. A quantity of water from the Atlantic Ocean was poured into the Mississippi to commemorate the union of the roads.

Lake and River Navigation.

BUFFALO, Monday, May 4.

Navigation is partially opened, and many vessels are leaving here, dropping down the river to Chippewa, whence they pass through the Welland Canal feeder to the Lake. The ice is still packed in the bay and around the entrance of the harbor, but the heavy rain of Saturday must have weakened it considerably, and we are looking for its entire disappearance in a few days.

CITY AFFAIRS.

IMPORTAN OCUMENT.

Special Message of Mayor Wood Concerning the State Legislation on City Matters.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, NEW YORK, May 1, 1857.

Gentlemen of the Common Council:

In my annual message of last January I protested against the contemplated action of the Legislature with reference to this City. I stated that the schemes then on the political anvils at Albany and New-York were fraught with incalculable evils, and would, if passed into laws, transfer much of the government of this City to the central power at Albany. I entered up an indignant remonstrance against these iniquitous measures, portraying the evils which would flow from their enactment in such terms as seemed appropriate to the subject.

An attempt was made by me, as on a previous occasion, to arouse the Common Council of this City, and the people it represented, to a just sense of their own municipal rights, and to the assertion of a bold determination to maintain them at all hazards. If I failed in producing these sentiments, it is certain there was no error in my apprehension of the danger, or the necessity of action.

The evils then prognosticated are now unfortunately upon us; the very bills, in form and substance, which were alluded to by me as having been privately prepared at a caucus at a hotel in this City, were soon after put upon their passage in the party caucus at the Capitol, and have since gone through the legislative forms of laws. It now becomes again my duty to call your attention to the subject, not as before to urge a preparation for defence, but as advisory of the way to meet the danger, now that it is here. A series of bills have been enacted which are as disgraceful to the parties responsible as they are repugnant to the constitution and to our dearest rights and liberties.

The Legislature has treated this great emporium as a subjugated City. Under the theory which manifestly governed that body in making laws for us, we have lost not only all our ancient rights, but much of our modern power and prestige. We are not only deprived of the authority common to all communities—of the power to form their own municipal regulations—but have fallen to such a feeble state of vassalage as to be bereft of any voice in the selection of our own masters. These are to be furnished us by the central kingly power, without our consent, but at our own expense.

The independence of the municipality thus abused is a principle of corporate liberty which is recognized in every civic (?) part of monarchial Europe. Neither the Crown nor the Parliament of Great Britain would dare to thus encroach upon the ancient privileges of the city of London. These are held in ravenent esteem, as an almost sacred prerogative—next to that of the throne itself.

If regard for the rights of communities in their own local independence is thus manifest in countries where too often "might makes right," and a powerful consolidated government rules all, how should it be with us, where the whole theory of our laws and constitution is based upon representative government—upon the acknowledged right of the people to select their own public agents, from the smallest to the highest in place and power? In this State the people fixed it in the organic law. So jealous had they become of an attempted absorption of control over the localities by a ruling political dynasty at the Capitol, that they caused to be inserted in the last constitution a clause expressly forbidding any interference with the selection of county, town, city or village officers. Indeed, the immediate cause of the creation of the convention which framed that instrument, and the prevailing spirit which influenced its deliberations and results were antagonism to centralization of State power—a desire to obtain security for the future by a dessemination of local independence in the choice of local agents to administer the local governments. It was to place these interests beyond the reach of just such arrogance, tyranny and corruption, which, unfortunately for the good name and welfare of this commonwealth, have obtained possession of the State Government, that this wise and truly patriotic principle was indelibly and unalterably placed in the constitution. Whether it shall be evaded by so clumsy a subterfuge as has now been devised will be for the Judiciary to determine.

What are our duties under the several measures as presented in another and more immediately pressing question, to be settled by ourselves.

These bills may be designated thus, viz.:

A Charter for the City of New-York.
The Metropolitan Police bill.
A bill to erect a new City Hall.
A bill to improve the Central Park.
The Port Warden's bill.
The Excise bill.
The New-York Harbor bill.
Relative to Stage Routes.
To regulate the use of the slips, and wharves, piers 2 to 12.
To amend the Pilot laws, and Relative to Tax Commissions and Assessments.

There are others more general in their operation, but which bear to some extent oppressively upon our interests. I shall now refer only to those which I am called upon officially to notice. That there may be no misapprehension as to my views in reference to them, as well as to the course which in my judgment should be pursued by the Common Council, I take them up somewhat in detail, giving what I deem a fair and impartial view of their prominent features.

THE CHARTER.

This instrument contains very few, and, in my judgment, very unimportant improvements over those it has repealed. But it does contain provisions heretofore unknown to a city charter, many clearly injurious to the public interests, and some of unquestionable unconstitutionality. Whilst it is elaborately minute in the specification of the powers granted to the Departments over which the partisan friends of those who framed it happen now to preside, it is vague and indefinite as to the few given to the less favored and less trusted. Whilst it secures every incumbent who is of easy political virtue, or of the faith and kin of the dominant party in the field, enjoyment of his office, it promptly and summarily ejects those who are of opposite principles, or who cannot be seduced into a compliance with the terms offered. It permits every head of an Executive Department whose office is not abolished, to serve the term for which he was elected by the people, except myself; and though elected for two years, I am allowed to serve but one year. It gives to the Governor of the State the power to remove the Mayor—a condition which, if not unconstitutional, as it is, would prevent any man worthy and capable of filling the office from holding it. It thus attempts to degrade the people in the person of their Chief Magistrate. It takes from the office of Mayor the power to appoint the Receiver of Taxes and several other posts of trust and importance, whilst it does not give him the power to appoint a single head of department during my term of office, nor does it impart any additional authority at any time to that which he formerly possessed over them. This serious defect in the amendments to the Charter passed in 1849 and 1853, is not only contained in this, but what little could be gathered in them by implication is entirely destroyed in the express delegation of authority to others.

It gives large and dangerous powers to the Department of Finance, with increased patronage, and without any practical accountability. The day may come when this office, which is continued elective, will fall into the hands of an unscrupulous man, and add millions to the liabilities of the Corporation, or who may misappropriate hundreds of thousands before detection can correct the wrong.

It abolishes the Department of Repairs and Supplies, although the incumbent of the office had nearly two years to serve, (not, it is to be supposed, because he was elected by the Democratic Party,) and partitions his patronage and powers among those who have never been tainted with such a political heresy. It abolishes both Boards of the Common Council at the end of the year, though one half of the Board of Aldermen had another year to serve, for no other apparent reason than to carry out the general party scheme manifest in the whole document. It "gerrymanders" the City into seventeen Aldermanic Districts, forming them of such Wards and parts of Wards as will best secure a majority of members adverse to the Democratic Party. It abolishes the office of Lamps and Streets, because its head has fallen under suspicion in consequence of making a few Democratic appointments to office, and as with the Repairs and Supplies, partitions its power and patronage with those who have not committed a like offence. It modifies the restrictions of previous charters, limiting the expenditure to two hundred and fifty dollars, without a contract, so as to give the Common Council the power, under certain circumstances, to dispense with it altogether. It abolishes all license fees and licenses for the sale of articles of food, which deprives the City of large revenues, and takes away the necessary wholesome check to illegal and improper practices in trade. It orders a separate election for Charter officers at an unusual and improper period of the year, within a few weeks of the general election, and at a time when the people, fatigued by recent attention to political subjects of a more general or national character, will be apt to feel little concern, and give up without a struggle to those whose pecuniary interests in the spoils will excite more activity and energy.

It is not to be submitted to the people for their acceptance or rejection, but is forced upon us, not only without our consent, but against the remonstrance of the Mayor and the two Boards of the Common Council officially expressed, as well as of the representative of this City, in the Legislature.

Thus it legislates for persons, and not for principles. Its requirements are made dependent upon the political proclivities of the present incumbents, and not upon considerations connected with an improvement in the City Government. All is prostituted to the partisan designs and personal animosities and preferences of the framers. The constitution, the corporate rights, the vested prerogatives, the ancient privileges, and the general public good of New York, have been made to yield to the behests of the higher power. Instead of reformatory changes, existing evils have been enlarged and new defects and deficiencies introduced. Instead of the consolidation of power in the hands of the Chief Magistrate, as generally asked for by the people, much of it heretofore existing has been transferred to subordinate officers, over whom he is given no control. The Mayor has been deprived not only of much of the power which had been granted by previous charters, but has been stripped of pretty much all that can give respect or prestige to the office.

He has been made almost powerless for good, though he cannot escape at least a portion of the responsibility of the maladministration of public affairs which is sure to be introduced. Instead of being in fact, as well as in reason, the chief executive officer of the City Government, clothed with necessary authority to give effect to its acts and dignity to its authority, he will become the mere figure-head of the ship of State, without influence or control in determing its course or directing its action.

This I believe to be a correct statement of the provisions of the new charter for the City of New York. Such as it is, it is now before us, and it is our duty to consider it with reference to future proceedings.

The question presented to us is, what are our duties under this instrument? I have no doubt as to the best course to be pursued. We should comply with all such parts of it, odious and unpalatable as they may be, which, in the opinion of competent counsel, do not conflict with the Constitution of the United States or of the State of New York. It is not sufficient that many of its provisions are infringements of our corporate rights, and that the whole is intended as a scheme for political power. By the sovereign will of the Legislature such parts of it as are consistent with the Constitution have been legally enacted, and we must submit. Parts of an act may be valid and parts invalid. Thus while certain sections of this charter should at once be contested, there are other parts about which there can be no question, and to carry out which preparations should be made by the Common Council and by the departments.

THE METROPOLITAN POLICE BILL.

The first section of this act, in the appointment of the Governor of five Commissioners to perform the duties of appointing and governing the Police force of this City, is a palpable violation of not only the letter, but of the whole scope and spirit of the Constitution. This fatal objection is so patent that no respectable lawyer who values his professional reputation, has been found to declare otherwise. With this fact before me, so strongly vouched for by some of the ablest legal counselors in this State, I have taken my position against its recognition, from which I shall not be swerved until compelled by the decisions of competent judicial tribunals.

The proceedings already taken to arrive at a final adjudication, present only this question. No other has been raised, but every exertion made to push on to a speedy disposition the determination of the single point involved in the constitutionality of the appointment of the persons who assume the right to exercise the duty of Police Commissioners. It is unnecessary to present to you any history of those suits. The cavils, quibbles, and evasions of counsel to meet the single issue shall not be discussed by me now. These are as apparent as the law itself is unconstitutional and void. It is only necessary to add that if on a final hearing of the case by the Court of Appeals it shall be decided that the Metropolitan Police District act is not repugnant to the Constitution, I will assume the whole expense of carrying it there. The Corporation of New-York shall not suffer a dollar of expenditure at my instance while Mayor, when I assume the whole responsibility of the proceeding. But as odious as is the disregard of the Constitution, there are other features almost equally obnoxious. The bill takes a large amount of City property, including twenty pieces of valuable real estate, and confiscates them to the State without compensation. It deprives the Chief Magistrate of the City of all control over the police, and declares in terms that orders, promulgations, or the regulation and supervisions shall be transferred to this new Board, and officers to be selected by it. Riot, invasion, conflagration and pestilence are not made exceptions. It is provided that the power heretofore exercised by the Mayor over the police of the City in such emergencies, shall be possessed by the Superintendent of Police to be chosen by the Board.

It gives the new Board extraordinary powers in the indirect control of the elections to be held in four counties, including this City; without its authority no person shall approach within two hundred feet of the poll for voting, except it be its own police agents; no tickets, booths or tables shall be placed within the same distance; it shall have the exclusive charge of the ticket boxes in which the ballots are deposited—appoint the poll clerks, place as many officers (temporarily made for the occasion) in an around the voting places as in its judgment are required; and in this way one class of voters are to be kept off or overawed, the rights of another class facilitated, and the ticket boxes to be at the mercy of men whose past political lives offer no guaranty of regard for the purity of the franchise. It invades the rights of citizens in disregarding the common law principle that a man is presumed to be innocent until found guilty—laying him liable to be convicted as a "common gambler" for being found upon the premises where gambling is carried on, though he may be there for the collection of a debt, as a servant, on professional service, or in pursuit of a derelict son or friend. The fact that he is found there is deemed sufficient evidence to convict him of an infamous offence, no other proof being required than that he was found upon the premises. This sweeping and illjudged provision subjects any man who enters such a house, without knowing its character, upon a cry of murder, or for any other purpose, however humane or necessary, to certain degradation, if not loss of liberty. It gives to the Commissioners the power to create an indefinite number of private policemen, entirely independent of all local authority, and not for public purposes, but to be used by private enterprises, and for their own profit and purpose, no matter of what kind soever that those who pay them may demand. The direst oppressions and cruelties may be perpetrated against citizens in their personal and domestic relations through the action of this secret and unknown police. Not only the Commissioners, but others who obtain this privilege, whether for revenge or avarice, may thus institute an inquisition over every man's household, or place an officer at every man's door. A secret institution can be planted, by this means, among us more dangerous in its tendency and more destructive in its results than to be found in any other country over which modern law is recognised as government. It adds nearly $200,000 per year to the City taxes for salaries alone, to say nothing of the enormous contingent expenses which will necessarily follow the action of a Board who are placed by State Legislature beyond the reach of any local accountability.

It will send from adjoining counties persons to perform police duty here, and, in return, will at the proper time overflow those counties with electioneering and political agents under the garb of metropolitan policemen. The people of four large and populous counties are thus to have quartered upon them for life, an army of Black Republican officials, created by a Board appointed at Albany, over whom they can exert no control—whom they cannot remove—but whose enormous expenses amounting to over one million per year, they will be obliged to bear.

These are the principal characteristics of the Metropolitan Police bill, which I have felt it a sacred duty to resist, and next you wonder that those who alone are to be benefitted by it, should cling to it with such tenacity. Should the people of this abused and derided City be surprised that men who are to be made princes and potentates should clutch with so much eagerness the dazzling sceptre of mere than regal prerogative. If they are successful in the present contest, and the police authority with all the extraordinary and unusual additional powers which this bill grants, shall devolve upon them, then this is indeed a conquered City. Not only will its glory have departed, but also individual rights, the security of life and property, the privacy of the domestic household, the heretofore secure exercise of suffrage, and many other guarantees of constitutional liberty, so dear to the heart of every true American.

THE BILL TO ERECT A NEW CITY HALL.

This act is obnoxious to the same objection in the mode of the appointment of Commissioners. It has given to the Governor power, and of course he has used it, to appoint, without our consent, a Board of five persons, who, without the least responsibility to the Corporation of New-York, are empowered to build a City Hall, to cost, it is to be presumed, many millions. We are to have no control over the plans nor the expense, but like the Police Commission, the Board is sovereign and independent. We are to submit to what these persons choose to give us, and to fund the bill without a murmur. Having become subjugated by the Police bill it is supposed we will behave with becoming docility under this additional humiliation. Not only is this Board clothed with the authority to tax us without our consent, but the Legislature have in this instance attempted to deprive us of the right of disposing of our own real estate. This Commission has conferred upon it the power to open negotiations with and to dispose of to the General Government a site for a Government Post-Office to be taken from the Park. It is unnecessary to comment further upon so flagrant an insult to the Corporation of New-York. The whole bill is so clearly repugnant to the Constitution and to the rights of the City that it is presumed no time will be lost in testing it in the Courts. Until it is pronounced valid, after a full and impartial hearing, it is, in my opinion, entitled to no consideration whatever.

CENTRAL PARK BILL.

The same disregard of the provision of the Constitution, in the appointment of Commissioners to improve and govern this park, is manifested in this act, with the difference that the Commissioners were named by the Legislature, and not by the Governor. It is to be regretted that a work so intimately connected with the pride and welfare of the City is liable to so serious an embarrassment as may arise at any time in contesting the legality of the appointment of the governing authority. The validity of the contracts for its improvements, of the bonds issued for the payments therefor, and many other questions as to the acts of the Commissioners, will be no doubt raised, to the detriment, delay, and probable postponement of the work for some time. If, however, the central power at Albany will assume the right to select our officers, it is better to delay or give up altogether public improvements until its authority to do so is submitted to Judicial decision. As warm a friend of the Central Park as I am, and have been, and as high as I appreciate the advantages and necessity of its rapid completion, I feel that there is a great principle involved here, of more consequence to the Corporation and people of the City than any public improvement which can be projected.

The bill also deprives the Mayor and Commonalty of any control over the work as it progresses. Nay, more—it is declared in the act that the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty, shall be divested of the authority conferred by the City Charter over this 760 acres of the public land, and that the ordinances of the Commission—not of the Common Council—shall be operative and recognized therein as law.

If a member of the Board is interested in any contract he is declared guilty of a misdemeanor, but he is not deprived of his position or power in the Board; there is no mode by which a member of the Board may be impeached or deprived of office. If a majority of the Board should become notoriously interested in contracts, the minority are powerless to prevent any fraudulent exercise of authority by the majority. A member of the Board is appointed for five years, and no power of removal is reserved in the law; he is a member for five years, unless he dies or resigns.

The Board is to report annually in January the amount of its receipts and expenditures; but the law does not limit the expenditures in any one year, except by implication. The Board is prohibited from adopting any plan of improvement" of which the entire expense shall require for the payment of the annual interest a greater sum than one hundred thousand dollars." If a six per cent. stock is created $100,000 will be the annual interest on $1,666,666 66. This, then, is the limit of expenditure for improving the Park; but a majority of the Commissioners may legally expend the whole amount in three months.

The Board, in conjunction with the Bureau of Lands and Places of the Street Department, are "to make and adjust the permanent width of the streets and avenues bounding said park and the permanent grades thereof, and the grades of the adjoining streets affected thereby."

Here is a power conferred on a Board of Commissioners responsible to no one—men who cannot be impeached or removed, even if notoriously guilty of the most glaring frauds, which the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty never possessed. This Board is empowered, in conjunction with the Superintendent of Lands and Places, to alter the entire grade of the centre of our City; they may stop the work now under contract of grading and paving any of the streets adjacent to the park, and subject the City to an unlimited and almost inconceivable amount of claims for damages, not only for contractors, but owners of land affected by any change in the grade. The Croton Aqueduct Department must stop building sewers, the gas companies must discontinue laying pipes, the system of drainage so necessary to the health and improvement of the lands lying East and West of the park, from river to river, must be suddenly arrested, while our citizens and their representatives in the Common Council have no power to avert the evil. Let our tax-payers endeavor to realize the amount of damage which the City at large may become liable for to owners of property affected by any change in the grade of so large a portion of the City.

The Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City are required to borrow on the credit of the City any sum demanded by the Board; have no voice in the amount of money to be expended annually, no choice in any plans of improvement that may be submitted; and if they were not necessary to borrow money, their existence would be entirely ignored.

The Supervisors of the County are required to levy a tax every year hereafter to pay the interest upon the money which the Mayor, Aldermen, &c., are required to borrow, when directed to do so by the Board of Commissioners. The Commissioners fix the salaries of engineers, surveyors, clerks and other officers, make all the appointments, and give the Supervisors the power to raise the funds.

Thus it will be seen that the act for the regulation and government of the Central Park in the City of New-York, recently passed by the Legislature, divests the City of all control, for the ensuing five years, over a very large and valuable portion of its real estate; it authorizes any change in the grade in any of the streets adjacent to the park which a majority of the Commissioners named in the act may determine upon; it requires the corporate authorities of the City to raise over a $1,500,000 at any time when said Commissioners demand it, and forbids the corporate authorities to exercise any control over the manner in which the money is expended. The improvements upon all that portion of the City lying between the Eighth-avenue and the Hudson River, and the Fifth avenue and East River, north of Fifty ninth-street to One Hundred and Sixth-street, are checked and suspended whilst the new grade is being determined upon by the Commissioners. The Croton Aqueduct Department must discontinue the building of sewers; and the plan of drainage adopted must be changed if these Commissioners say so. The grading and paving of streets must be stopped, until this extraordinary power conferred on the Commissioners has been fully exercised. People living in any of the streets affected by the new permanent grade, (Query—How often during the next five years can the Commissioners change their determination as to what the permanent grade shall be eventually?) may be prepared to see their houses perched upon a hill or sunk in a hollow. Owners of property who have recently been assessed for regulating, grading and paving the streets, may prepare to pay another assessment for regrading and repaving. During the full term of five years, property adjacent to the park will be held subject to this uncertainty. The laws of the United States authorizing the appointment of Collectors of the Customs, Marshals, Land Agents and other officers, for four years, reserve the right of removal at any time previous to the expiration of their commission. This law reserves no power of removal, but confers upon the Commissioners the exclusive right to fill all vacancies which may occur by the death or resignation of any of their associates. At the end of five years, when the money is all expended, and the City saddled with a large debt—to say nothing of the endless claim for damages which may arise from any change in the grade of the avenues or streets bounding the park, or the grade of the street affected by such change—the Mayor and Common Council are to be allowed to resume their charge of this portion of the public property; but until then our citizens, and their representatives in the Common Council, are as effectually deprived of all power over the lands recently purchased for a Central Park, as if said lands were located within the Regent's Park in London.

THE PORT WARDENS' BILL.

This act creates nine Commissioners or Port Wardens, with enormous fees, and centers the most extensive power over the navigation and commerce of this port over before attempted. These favored gentlemen are to have the control of ships and cargoes arriving at this port, and to exercise an arbitrary and exclusive authority over divers commercial and legal questions, to the exclusion of Courts and Juries. In other respects the act is so repugnant to the interests of commerce, and so shameless of common decency in the opportunity it gives to the partizan of the central power to fatten upon the earnings of trade, that preparations are being made by those affected to test its constitutionality. No one can doubt the result.

THE NEW YORK HARBOR BILL.

This bill takes from the owners a large water front on the westerly side of the City, without compensation. It gives to the State, Corporation as well as private property, without consideration. The individuals whose interests have been interfered with will resist this encroachment of the State authority, and the Corporation should not once take measures for a like protection of its own property.

THE EXCISE BILL.

This is another of the encroachments upon individual rights for which the dominant party are so much distinguished. It will probably be as fruitless in the prevention of intemperance as it is antagonistic to the theory that should govern all American laws. The distinction that it makes between the selling of liquor by the rich man and by the poor man, in affording facilities for the trade to the former, which it denies the latter, is consistent with the dogmas of a party which has always acknowledged the possession of property as a proof of merit. Under this ancient tenet of its leaders crime and immorality are to be tolerated if the perpetrator belongs to the privileged classes, but to be severely punished when discovered in one who is lowly born. Under the bill a man who can number twenty freeholders among his immediate friends and neighbors shall be allowed to sell the destroying element which, according to these gentlemen, deals death and destruction to all who partake of it; but the unfortunate poor man, whose condition deprives him of the support, is denied the privilege of transacting a legitimate trade, recognized and endorsed by law. By this condition a class of monopolists is to be established, whose merit lies in property and rich friends, while the equally honest and worthy are to be shut out from any participation in the same traffic. The original Stamp act of the British Government, so indignantly repudiated by our forefathers, was far less exacting.

It is unnecessary to refer in this document to the details of the other bills that this Legislature has imposed upon us. It is sufficient for my present purpose to thus expose the objectionable features. What is the duty of the Common Council in the premises is a grave question. In my judgment, its course should be dictated by prudence and caution. Conflict of authority should be avoided, and those parts of the several laws which it is incumbent upon us to carry out, and which are clearly not obnoxious to palpable legal objection, we should readily accelerate by our official sanction.

If our rights have been invaded beyond judicial redress, the people in their sovereign capacity will sooner or later render us a sure verdict. In this country, all should trust to this tribunal, and bow with submission to its final arbitrament. If the public servants who, in an evil hour, the excitement of last November threw into governmental positions, have prostituted their trusts in the perpetration of these great wrongs, we may rest content that the powers that created will destroy, and that the good time will speedily come when their masters will deal as summarily with their pretensions as they have dealt with our interests and our rights.

FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

Board of Aldermen.

The Board convened at five o'clock last evening the first session of the month. The President was in the chair.

THE NEW CHARTER.

Alderman BLUNT presented the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas, A special Committee was appointed by this Board, Jan. 17, 1857, to whom was referred that portion of the annual message of his Honor the Mayor, relative to the drafting of a new City Charter, and a Charter was reported to the Board, (as will be seen in the minutes of Jan. 12,) laid on the table and ordered to be printed at length in the minutes, and at a subsequent meeting the Charter was taken from the table, and a Special Committee authorized to proceed to the Legislature and ask them to pass said Charter for the City of New-York; and

Whereas, The Committee on Cities and Villages made the following report to the Assembly, by which it appears they adopted four-fifths of the Charter presented to them by the Common Council, as will be seen by the Charter here annexed, passed by the Legislature April 14, 1857; and

Whereas, The said Charter is now in full force and effect, and no legislating can be done in the City of New-York except under said new Charter, be it therefore

Resolved, That this Board act under the new Charter, passed April 14, 1857, and strictly comply with all its sections and clauses, until said Charter is proved to be unconstitutional.

Resolved, That a Committee of five be appointed to draw up ordinances to organize the departments and to report the same to this Board at the next meeting.

On motion of Alderman MCCONKEY the resolutions were laid on the table by a vote of 12 to 6.

The Reader commenced to read a message from the Mayor, but was soon interrupted with a motion by Alderman ADAMS that the further reading be suspended, and the usual number of copies and the document be made the special order for Thursday next.

The ayes and nays were called, and the motion prevailed by a vote of 12 ayes, 6 nays.

Alderman ADAMS moved that the Board adjourn to Thursday, which they did, after being in session about 15 minutes.

Board of Councilmen.

The Board of Councilmen met on Monday, the President, J. N. PHILLIPS, Esq., in the chair.

Some explanations were offered by the members put under arrest during the April session, which were at last deemed satisfactory.

Several petitions were then received.

A motion being in progress, Councilman OTTERSON begged leave to interrupt, and to ask whether the Board was proceeding under the provisions of the new Charter?

The President replied that the Board was acting under the laws of this State.

Councilman OTTERSON expressed himself satisfied.

Councilman BRADY moved the adjournment. The motion, seconded by Councilman WARNER, was lost.

STREET CLEANING.

A resolution was offered that the Seventeenth Ward be cleaned by the City Inspector. Several members complained of the state of the streets in each of their Wards. It was proposed by Councilman CLARK, as an amendment, that the whole City be cleaned. Laid on the table.

A long communication was received from the Mayor. It was agreed to lay it on the table.

A communication was received from Richard Busteed, Esq., Counsel to the Corporation, in reference to pay of members under the new Charter. It was read by the President. In substance it amounts to the expression of his decided opinion that members are not entitled to receive pay after the 1st day of May.

After the transaction of some unimportant business the Board adjourned to Wednesday.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT—MAY 4.

MUCIO IN COURT.

Judge NELSON, having returned from Connecticut, this morning took up the case before the Jury of Jeremiah Carhart et al. vs. Stephen T. Gorden et al. This is an action brought to recover damages for an alleged infringement of a patent issued to the plaintiff, Mr. Carhart, on June 24, 1856, for an improvement in the manner of making the bellows in melodeons and other wind instruments. The defendants do not deny that they have sold instruments which are infringements, provided the plaintiff has a valid patent. But they claim that there is nothing new or patentable in the alleged invention of the plaintiff. To support their defence they produce various old instruments containing, as they say, the same invention as the plaintiff's. The testimony is illustrated by music upon the various instruments, which doubtless makes it more clear, though as a musical treat it is not equal to some of our public performances.

The real defendant is said to be William Mason, the musician. He is in court, watching the progress of the case.

The Police Commission.

SUPREME COURT—GENERAL TERM.

Before Hon. Justices Mitchell, Roosevelt and Davies.

CONTINUATION OF THE POLICE COMMISSION CASE.

Ex-Judge Edmonds asked the Court to assign a day for the hearing of the quo warranto in the case of The People ex rel Fernando Wood vs. Simeon Draper et al. The answer of the defendants had been served on Saturday with a proposition to accelerate the hearing, to which he was willing to accede.

Mr. Field was ready to proceed with the case at the first possible moment. He then read the following letter:

SIR: We send you an answer herewith. Upon it an issue of law can at once be raised by you by demurrer. This issue of law may be tried at Special Term, and we will assent that an immediate judgment be entered in favor of the constitutionality of the law to the end that you may appeal forthwith to the General Term. We will be ready to argue the appeal on Monday next, or on the earliest day thereafter which may suit you. Yours, &c.

BROWN, HALL & VANDERPOEL,
Attorneys for Defendants.

HON. S. B. CUSHING, Attorney-General.

NEW-YORK, May 2, 1857.

Mr. O'Connor stated that he also had a letter to read, which was as follows:

Brown, Hall and Vanderpoel, Esqs.:

GENTLEMEN: Your proposition, dated 2d inst., did not come to hand on the day of its date, and for that reason alone was not properly answered.

The proposition therein contained is hereby accepted.

I submit, however, for your consideration, whether it is expedient that we unite in a request to Judge Peabody to suspend his decision on the injunction until the judgment of the General Term can be had, or at least until the close of the argument. The reasons for this course are so obvious that a detailed statement of them is unnecessary.

My associates in this case await you at the General Term, upon your arrival. They will unite with you in an application to the Court, to assign a day for the hearing. To morrow would be quite agreeable to me and my associates. It will take what remains of this day to prepare the papers for the Court. Yours truly,

J. W. EDMONDS, Jr.
J. B. CUSHING, Attorney General.

NEW-YORK, May 4, 1857.

After some conversation, it was agreed by both sides that a judgment be entered at Special Term pro forma, and the appeal be argued at the General Term to day. Mr. Field was at first unwilling to agree to this proposition until Judge Peabody should decide the injunction argued before him. He finally, however, acceded to the arrangement, and the Court made an order accordingly. Shortly after, Judge Peabody rendered judgment for the defendants pro forma, and rendered the following order:

This action coming on to be heard on the issue of law joined herein, after hearing the Attorney-General, Mr. O'Connor, and Mr. Edmonds, of counsel for the plaintiffs, and Mr. Evarts, Mr. Field, and Mr. Van Cott for the defendants.

It is ordered and adjudged that the demurrer be and the same is hereby overruled, and that the said issue of law be, and the same is hereby decided in favor of the defendants, on the merits thereof.

And it is further ordered and adjudged that the said defendants have due warrant of law to hold, use and enjoy their respective offices of Police Commissioners for the Metropolitan Police District of the State of New-York, with all the powers and authority pertaining thereto, and do now lawfully hold the same, and are entitled to hold and enjoy them, and have not in any manner usurped the same or any part thereof.

It is, therefore, further ordered and adjudged that the complaint be and the same is hereby dismissed upon the merits of the case, with $26 costs to the defendants, to be paid by the said Fernando Wood.

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

Before Hon. Justice Mitchell.

DECISIONS.

Alexander vs Chapman.—No extra allowance should be granted. The question whether the defendant shall have taxable costs, is reserved.

Spofford vs Hatch.—Order for commission, granted.

SUPERIOR COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

Before Hon. Justice Hoffman.

DECISIONS.

Joseph Wright, President, &c., vs. Joseph H. Howard, &c.—Upon the defendant's depositing, within ten days from service, an order, the amount of the judgment in this case with costs, and two years' interest at three per cent., and $100 additional to meet future costs, the judgment may be opened, and the defendant admitted to defend, but not to set up usury in any such defence in any of the transactions put in issue.

George G. Burns vs. Thos. Haddock.—Motion granted, with $7 costs.

Esther Payne vs. Joseph S. Ridgway, impleaded, &c.—The successful party is entitled, as of cause, to costs on appeal; with two exceptions; neither exists in this case; the items only are open for revision.

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS.

Before Hon. Judge Russell.

The May term of this Court commenced yesterday, Judge RUSSELL occupying the bench of justice. The Grand Jury were not empaneled, as there was not a sufficient quorum. The petit Jurors answered to their names; those who had excuses to make made them; and those discharged by the Judge, because their excuses were good, left the Court rejoicing.

Alice Magee and Joseph Renn were first placed on trial. They were charged with stealing $60 in gold, from a newly-imported young German named Frederick Dreyer, in a lager bier saloon at No. 66 Greenwich-street on the night of the 23d April. The complainant, it appeared, had just left the ship which brought him from Bremen, when he strolled into the saloon, and after drinking a glass of lager bier, became unconscious. He had on his person about $60 in gold, and when he recovered himself the money was gone. Police officer Roche found a portion of it in the woman's pocket, and $35 was afterwards delivered up by her. She had also given $10 to the male defendant. The case was withdrawn from the consideration of the Jury, at the woman's wish to plead guilty to petit larceny. She was sentenced to six months in the Penitentiary, and Renn was discharged.

Lemuel Freeman, a colored Lothario, was next tried for bigamy. On the 29th March last, after three days' acquaintance with her, he married a colored damsel of 19 years, named Catharine Johnson, being previously married to Melinda Smith. The marriage was proved by the colored minister, who performed the ceremony. Counsel for defence offered, in argument for Freeman's acquittal, that as the parties, by the decision of Judge Taney, were not citizens of the United States, they could not engage in a civil contract. The Judge would not allow such pleading. The Jury found Freeman guilty, and the Judge sentenced him for two years and three months to the State Prison.

John Kelly, a youth of 18 years, was tried for stealing 90 yards of stair carpet, worth $30, from Mr. David Clarke, doing business at No. 519 Eighth-avenue. The young fellow seized the carpet, ran off with it, threw it away when he found himself pursued, but was caught. The jury found him guilty of petit larceny. Sentence reserved.

Brusesto Bartolomeu, a Frenchman, who had fought at Balaklava and Sebastopol, was charged with stealing a horse and bridle worth $160, from the stable of Mr. Galliard, in Sixty-sixth-street. The prisoner, who could not speak English, was found by police officer Whetten in possession of the horse. The jury found him guilty.

COMMON PLEAS—TRIAL TERM.

Before Judge Brady.

THE LIEN LAW.

John Lynch vs. Mary A. Cashman.—The plaintiff files a lien against a building of defendant's situated in Thirty-fourth-street. It appeared in evidence that the plaintiffs were sub-contractors, and had agreed to erect the stairs in said building for one Eggleston, contractor; that they had done the work; and that the defendant paid Eggleston the full amount of money due on the contract. The plaintiffs claimed that the payment was made fraudulently, and offered evidence to prove that the money was paid before the work was done, with the intent to cheat the plaintiff. The defendant's counsel objected to any evidence of the matter of fraud alleged in the complaint, and moved to dismiss the same on the ground that the lien given by the Act of 1851 does not give the claimant any equitable remedy other than to receive the money due from the owner to the contractor at the time of filing the lien, and that there was no evidence of fraud adduced by the plaintiff. This Court dismissed the complaint with costs.

John Moody for plaintiff. C. Hessler Smith for defendant.

TREMENDOUS FIRE AT APALACHICOLA—2,450 BALES OF COTTON BURNT.—The following particulars are hastily prepared, and give but an imperfect idea of the scene of painful surprise and apprehension which filled every mind, when about 2½ o'clock on Thursday, the 23d inst., the alarm cry was heard, "The Union Warehouse is on fire." This warehouse, the largest in town, and near the centre of the business portion, was quadrangular in form, around an open court, and externally safe. It contained at the time about 2,000 bales of cotton, all of of which is lost. There were about 300 bales outside the warehouse, ready for shipment, most of which was lost.

Well directed and intense efforts saved the Hydraulic press and wareheuse, though only divided by a street, and the wind blowing directly upon it. The Post-office, Advertiser office, and other buildings on Centre-street, being of wood, were soon in flames—the heat extended across Centre-street and ignited the old Hospital, when all of that block and the block below, lying between Commerce and Market streets, were burnt over, rendering houseless about fifty families.

Meanwhile the intense heat had set fire to the Mitchel Row, North of the Union, and this with the intervening buildings were destroyed—most of the goods of the stores having been removed.

There were several hundred bales of cotton on the wharves, just landed, which being showered with burning cinders were often on fire; but with persevering care all of this was saved more or less damaged.

The ice-house was in line with the fire, and destroyed, leaving its contents a pyramid of ice in the midst of the scene of desolation.

The P. D. warehouse was in great danger for an hour—the tin melted from its doors—but by desperate and heroic exertion and fortitude in the face of almost unendurable heat, it was saved with its valuable contents, worth $150,000.

A negro boy, about 12 years of age, belonging to Mr. Thomas Orman, while in the act of assisting at the fire, was buried beneath the wall.

We cannot make room for the many other particulars, and especially of individual or combined service, which ought to be mentioned—but add a condensed statement of the loss so far as ascertained, and the amounts insured:

Cotton lost, 2,450 bales—value	$160,000
Union warehouse and other stores	21,500
Dwellings and shops	15,500
Other property	3,000
Total loss	$200,000
Total insurance	166,000

We learn of but 100 bales Cotton in all that were not insured, divided among several owners.—Apalachicola Advertiser, 23d ult.

CHANGE IN RATES OF INSURANCE.—The Insurance Companies of this City have resolved to make a deduction of 5 per cent. on the premiums charged on warehouses which are provided with parapets or fire walls built high enough to give a more effectual protection to roofs and skylights, in case of a fire in the adjoining buildings. The expense of constructing such walls will be more than saved in the diminished amount of premiums.—Journal of Commerce.

THE SLAVE TRADE.—In giving in our issue of yesterday, a list of the vessels recently purchased at Havana, to be employed in the African Slave trade, we omitted one, which has since come to our knowledge—the schooner Wyannooka, a Spanish vessel, for which $5,300 were paid by the purchaser—Savannah Republican.

OFFICE OF TROW'S DIRECTORY,
H. WILSON, Compiler, No. 379 Broadway.

NOTICE.—THE PUBLIC ARE RESPECTFULLY informed that the CANVASS for this work will commence on the 2d May. Persons doing business down town and residing in the upper part of the City, are solicited to leave full information respecting their business, and places of business, the street and number, (if residents of this City, Brooklyn, Williamsburg or Jersey City,) of their residence.

Where several individuals occupy one office, a list should be made out with full particulars as above, and left for the canvasser.

By these means, the annoyance of repeated calls for information, and the greater one arising both to the compiler and the public, from errors and omissions, may be in a great measure avoided.

The canvassers employed on this work are furnished with a written authority. They are authorized to receive money for the insertion of names in capital letters, and for extra lines to be inserted in connection with the name, but for no other purpose whatever. They are instructed to leave receipts, with which they are furnished, for all amounts, however small, received by them. Payment for the book to be made on its delivery, for advertisements in front or back, or colored leaves, after publication, and on presentation of the agreement signed by the advertiser. JOHN F. TROW, Publisher.

THE ELVES.

LEGEND.—The mountain forests of Pastoria are inhabited, it is said, by Pixies, Spirits and Elves, who, like the Phantom Dancers of Germany, delight to entrap travellers into their realms, and torment them with their mischievous antics. Having the power of transferring the spirit, they often, in their malicious gambols, give life to the newly dead. Statues, rocks and trees are seen fantastically moving in the forest; but it is only during the DAY they retain their fictitious existence; at the approach of NIGHT they resume their immovability.

EVENINGS WITH TOM MOORE.
Anecdotal, Historical and Biographical, at the Stuyvesant Institute, MONDAY EVENING, May 11, 1857, at 8 o'clock. Tickets 50 cents; to be had at the principal music and bookstores.

PETE MORRIS, "THE BOWERY BOY" and melodist, has formed a coalition with "the learned Elephants" and the American Circus Company, and will travel for the benefit of all the high contracting parties. Pete says he took "an active musical interest in the last Presidential campaign for the Republican Party," and is indignant that the leading Fremont journals have not taken more notice of his new campaign with the Elephants. Republicans are ungrateful.

Pete Morris, with feelings of "distinguished consideration" to the editors of the New-York Leader, for the above highly complimentary "first-rate" notice, begs leave to state that he feels nowise indignant towards the leading Fremont journals, and, in fact, feels very highly delighted with the kindness they have extended to him for his humble services in the "vocal" line during the last campaign, and likewise for his elephantine exploits during the coming Summer. Verb sapt. PETE MORRIS.

PURDY'S NATIONAL THEATRE.—DRESS Circle 25 cents; Pit 12½ cents; Orchestra Chairs, 50 cents; Private Boxes $5. Doors open at 7; curtain will rise at 7½ o'clock. THIS EVENING, May 5, Grand Eastern Spectacle Drama entitled

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The steamship Indian arrived at Quebec yesterday about noon, from Liverpool on the morning of the 23d of April—consequently her news is four day's later than that brought by the Africa at this port. The political advices, by this arrival are not generally important. There is nothing whatever relative to the rejection of the Dallas-Clarendon Treaty, as amended by the Senate. The Ministerial programme for the new Parliament had not yet been promulgated. The House of Commons is classed as follows, by the London Star: Palmerston, 265; Derbyites, 227; Reformers, 110; Liberal Conservatives, 53. EVELYN DENISON had been officially announced as the Ministerial nominee for Speaker. From Spain, indications seem to warrant the conclusion that the Mexican difficulty is in a fair way towards a pacific arrangement. New impediments in the way of a settlement of the Neufchatel trouble had arisen, but the reassembling of the Conference at Paris, excited hopes that an amicable adjustment would yet be arrived at. Commercially, everything seems to be quite dull.

We have received, by telegraph from New-Orleans, two weeks later news from Mexico. The Government has taken prompt and energetic measures to punish the instigators of the late attempted insurrection. In arresting and banishing the Archbishop and several priests for their complicity in that plot, and for their notorious rebellion against the constituted authorities, President COMONFORT has taken the bull by the horns, and if he only receives sufficient support from the people, he may yet weather the storm that threatens to throw the country once more into revolution and anarchy. Much anxiety was felt in Mexico on account of the threatened fillibuster demonstration from California upon Sonora.

By the news, which we publish elsewhere, from Great Salt Lake, it will be seen that the Saints are organizing and are making other preparations for an armed resistance to Federal authority. The present aspect of affairs is by no means favorable to the future peace of the Territory.

The trial of Mrs. EMMA AUGUSTA CUNNINGHAM, indicted as a principal in the murder of Dr. BURDELL, was commenced yesterday before Judge DAVIES. The entire day and evening, until 9 P. M., was consumed in obtaining a Jury. Many of the five hundred who were impanneled were absent, and many of those present had formed an opinion. There was a large number of spectators present, and much interest was evinced in the proceedings. Mrs. CUNNINGHAM was present, dressed in deep mourning, and accompanied by her two daughters. ECKEL was in court and sat beside his counsel during the day. The District-Attorney will open the case for the prosecution at 10 o'clock this morning, to which time the Court adjourned. An officer was detailed to go with each member of the Jury to his home and return with him as soon as possible, that they might sleep together. In the morning they will be accompanied to their several places of business, but after that they will not be permitted to separate until the conclusion of the case. The Judge, who is obviously bent on losing as little time as possible, has signified his intention of sitting from 9 o'clock in the morning till as near midnight as may be found practicable.

The Newburg tragedy became more mysterious than ever yesterday. The body which was recognized on Saturday as that of SARAH C. BLOOM, of Shawangung, proves to be that of some other person as yet unknown. The sister of Miss BLOOM, who swore positively to the identity of the body, was deceived by the perfect similarity of certain marks and physical peculiarities, and SARAH BLOOM herself appeared yesterday before the Coroner's Jury; affording conclusive proof that she had not been murdered. Mr. JENKINS, who had been detained in custody, was thereupon discharged. The body of the murdered woman was buried from the Newburg Court House on Sunday. During the funeral ceremonies, an elderly woman, apparently a quadroon, who said she came from Brooklyn, made her appearance, greatly affected, with a sad tale of the disappearance of her niece, who left Brooklyn to go to Newburg on Thursday week, and has not since been heard of. Before her testimony could be taken, this woman returned to this City. The case is as far as ever from explanation, and the Inquest is for the present adjourned. The sudden reappearance of Miss BLOOM destroys a remarkable case of circumstantial evidence.

The Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, has arranged with the Adams Express Company for the transportation of the new cent coin, at the cost of the mint, to all points of the Atlantic States accessible by railroad and steamboat, and all other places which can be reached by means of conveyance not incurring unreasonable expense.

The heavy rains of the past few days have caused freshets in the Hudson, Schuylkill, and other rivers. At Albany yesterday the water was several feet above the docks, and was still rising.

☞ We publish this morning Mayor WOOD'S message to the Common Council last evening, in reference to the new City bills, passed by the last Legislature. His Honor makes an indignant protest against all the bills, the new Charter, the Police Commissioners, the Central Park bill, the new City Hall Commissioners, the Harbor bill, and the Port Wardens; but, while he exposes what he conceives to be the unconstitutional usurpations of the Legislature in enacting these measures, he does not express any decided opinions, or give any advice as to the proper course for the Common Council to pursue in relation to them, beyond the expression of his determination to abide by the decisions of the courts in relation to the Police bill. He intimates that the legal authority of the Park and City Hall Commissioners will be contested, but does not indicate any intention of instituting any proceedings against these Boards himself.

The first May Session of the Board of Aldermen held last evening was a very short one. Resolutions were presented by Alderman BLUNT, to the effect that the Board comply with the provisions of the New Charter, and that a Committee be appointed to draw up ordinances for the organization of the several Departments of the City Government, but they were tabled by a vote of 12 to 6. A message was received from the Mayor with reference to the acts passed by the late Legislature affecting this City, which was ordered to be printed.

In the Board of Councilmen, last evening, after an hour spent in personal recrimination,—the text being the attempt of members held under arrest for contempt of the Board to judge themselves,—the Mayor's Message was laid on the table, and Corporation Counselor BUSTEED's opinion read, to the effect that after the 1st of May they were entitled to no pay under the new Charter.

The Quarantine Commissioners have bought and paid for Seguine's Point $23,000, as a Quarantine site. The erection of buildings at that place will proceed at once.

The Pilot Commissioners have resolved to let the shad poles remain in the deep water of North River through the present shad season.

The new Port Wardens have up hill work of it. Not one of them has yet got into his place—nor is he likely to at present.

The Democratic General Committee held a special meeting at Tammany Hall last evening. The names of the persons to form the Committee authorized to determine in what manner a new General Committee shall be selected, was announced. Resolutions were adopted approving of the appointments for this City made by the President, condemning the recent acts of the Legislature in reference to this City, and in favor of appointing a Committee to assist in the arrangements for the indignation meeting to be held in the Park next week.

The inquest upon the body of JOHN SWEENEY, who died from injuries received on Wednesday night at a disturbance at the Fulton Ferry, was concluded yesterday. The verdict rendered by the Jury was: "That the said JOHN SWEENEY came to his death by injuries from a blow inflicted by one of the boatmen of the Fulton Ferry boat Nassau, April 29, 1857,—and that said boatman was acting in self-defence."

The City officials who went up to Comptroller FLAGG'S Office yesterday for their month's pay, went away empty. Other demands were more pressing, and there was not enough in the Treasury to pay all.

The Court of General Sessions opened yesterday, for the May term, before the City Judge. There was no Grand Jury empanelled, but considerable business was done for the first day of term.

There was a Convention of Cricketers at the Astor House last night, for the arrangement of matches for the coming season, &c. Some important matches were agreed upon.

Two new Brooklyn ferry boats, the Geo. Washington and Geo. Law, were running yesterday in fine style, up to time and loaded down all day with dead-heads, between South Tenth-street, Williamsburg, and Roosevelt-street—the James-slip accommodations not yet being perfected. Since, in spite of "the high price of coal," this Company carries commuters for $8 instead of $10, as the Peck-slip Company does, and instead of $30 as the Union Company affords the same accommodation for, there would doubtless be a great rush for tickets, if more boats were completed. Two others are building, however, and will, they promise, be soon completed.

The Police magistrates of Brooklyn seem to construe the Excise law differently than the same class of officials in New-York. Here they construe it that that portion relative to the arrest of intoxicated persons does not go into effect until ten days after the Excise Commissioners are appointed.

The Brooklyn Gas Monopoly triumphed in the Board of Alderman, last night, over the hopes of the gas consumers, having come to a direct vote.

The Dallas-Clarendon Treaty in England.

During the month which has elapsed since the Dallas-Clarendon Treaty, as modified by the Senate and the President of the United States, was sent back to the British Government for reconsideration, the public feeling on both sides of the Atlantic had generally settled down into a quiet confidence that the dreary and weary imbroglio of Central American affairs was rapidly drawing towards a satisfactory dénouement.

The Cabinet at Washington professed to believe that the Government of Lord PALMERSTON would make little difficulty in accepting the Treaty as returned by America; private advices of the highest authority favored the same belief, and Lord NAPIER himself, the new Envoy of England, coming to us fresh from the Foreign Office, and from a confidential colloquy with Lord CLARENDON, made no secret of his convictions that such would be the speedy result of the renewal of negotiations in London. Hardly a week ago we published an extract from a letter written by a gentleman closely connected with the British Cabinet, in which it was stated as beyond a peradventure that the "Treaty would pass smoothly—not one soul in England caring a twopenny-piece about the matter."

It is with some natural surprise, therefore, that the community now hear it asserted, in the most positive manner, that the Treaty has been rejected on the other side of the Atlantic—with some natural surprise and with much natural regret.

No authentic statement has as yet been made of the grounds on which the Treaty has been rejected by Lord PALMERSTON, and it is, therefore, proper for us to defer any decisive comments upon the fact until we shall have been fairly put into possession of the motives which have determined the British Premier to take a step upon which he certainly could not have ventured without such reason for it as he could fearlessly present for the approval of the new Parliament.

The House of Commons, which was to meet on the 1st of May, is a much more strongly Liberal House than any one which has been elected for twenty years past. As we have already taken occasion to say it is by no means a Palmerstonian House in the sense of ready and unquestioning adhesion to whatever policy the Premier may choose to advance; but while it will be found disposed to do all justice to the patriotism and the personal spirit of a Minister who has shown so much of these qualities in the defence of English honor and the maintenance of English rights, it will hold Lord PALMERSTON to a strict accountability for any measure which may seem likely to endanger the peace of the country abroad, or to interfere with the progress of liberal principles at home. To suppose, therefore, that Lord PALMERSTON would come before such a House as this, at the very outset, with a tissue of flippant, or spiteful, or unreasonable objections to an arrangement which was designed to settle, at once and forever, certain vexatious questions at issue between Great Britain and the United States, is to suppose that the astute old statesman has suddenly lost his wits.

If Lord PALMERSTON has indeed rejected the Dallas-Clarendon Treaty, we may be sure that his action has been taken on such grounds as will rally to him the support of all the liberal sentiment of England.

When the American question was brought forward by Lord DERBY, in the debate on the Queen's speech at the beginning of the last session of the late Parliament, Lord CLARENDON took particular pains to make it understood that England neither had nor claimed to have any "interest in Central America beyond that of possessing a free transit across the Isthmus." It was upon this point alone that England insisted on the draft of the Treaty, and upon this point the United States were most willing and even desirous to meet British views. The modifications introduced into the Treaty by the Senate and the President left this point, of course, untouched. Where, then, does the difficulty lie?

If we are not very much mistaken, we put our finger upon it more than a month ago, when the Treaty as "amended," was dispatched to Mr. DALLAS, to be by him laid before the English Government.

There was made public at that time what purported to be a draft of the Treaty with the additional articles proposed by the Senate. One of these additional articles referred to a convention signed between England and Honduras for the cession to the latter State of the Colony of the Bay Islands, and we were then informed that the "phraseology of this article had been so modified as to avoid the recognition by the United States of a point in the Treaty between England and Honduras, prohibiting the future introduction of Slavery into those Islands."

In commenting upon this extraordinary language, we assumed that the Senate had gone no further than to withdraw the countenance of the United States from this salutary prohibition. This, of course, was going quite far enough.

The manifestation by an American Government of such an impertinent anxiety to clear the national character of any suspicion of disloyalty to Slavery ought to have satisfied the most exacting of Southern politicians. More than this, we had not supposed that any of them would venture to ask, and we presumed that no English Government would take the the trouble to insist upon our being more true to Republican principles than we ourselves might choose to be.

But the course of Lord PALMERSTON affords us every reason for suspecting that the demands of the Pro-Slavery agitators in the Senate have been more outrageous than we had imagined them to be, for Lord PALMERSTON could not ask a more splendid opportunity of confirming his position in Parliament and before the country than would be afforded him by such an issue as he could raise on these demands—an issue at once of English honor and of the abstract principles of liberty. The English people abhor the Institution of Slavery. To use the emphatic words of one of the most popular of living English writers. "No man would be listened to quietly across an English dinner-table in defence of that Institution." And England has made a treaty with Honduras into which she has introduced a provision prohibitory of Slavery. To this Treaty she invites the assent of the United States and the United States decline to accede to it, as they have a perfect right to do. But if, at the same time, the United States refuse their ratification to another and independent Treaty drawn up between themselves and Great Britain, excepting on condition of such modifications as shall essentially impair and interfere with the operation of the Anti-Slavery clause in the convention between Great Britain and Honduras, it is clear that Lord PALMERSTON would have all England at his back in a flat rejection of such modifications.

If events shall prove our inferences to have been correct, there will be little difficulty in deciding upon whom the blame of this new complication of our foreign relations is to be thrown, and we have sufficient faith in the honesty, the spirit, and the political intelligence of the American people, to believe that they will hold themselves ready for an impartial verdict, a righteous sentence, and a speedy execution of justice upon the proved offenders in the case.

THE NEW-YORK CUSTOM HOUSE.—The reference, in yesterday's TIMES to certain severe strictures, in a Philadelphia paper, upon the integrity of our Custom-House officials, has elicited the most unambiguous assurances from the proper quarter, of the totally slanderous character of the charges made, and a desire that we should challenge the journal in question to name a single instance which has ever occurred, of unpunished connivance at fraud, on the part of any officer, however insignificant, employed at this port.

The Philadelphians are laboring, just at this instant, under the effect of a painful spasm of jealousy, occasioned by a change in the destination of one of the lines of steamers, which has hitherto plied from Europe to their city. This is, certainly, a subject of regret; but should be borne more philosophically, especially in consideration of the fact, that, while the said steamers did run to Philadelphia, one half of their cargoes were generally consigned to New-York houses, and had to be forwarded here, at the expense of the steamers themselves, before freight could be collected. The commerce of Philadelphia, that is to say, is so far behindhand, as compared with ours, that bottoms would have remained empty, if the condition of receiving freight had not been entered into, that it should be sent free to New-York.

The most authentic quarter from whence information and just opinions concerning the integrity and efficiency with which business is conducted, by our Custom-House, must necessarily be the Treasury Department at Washington. If affairs have been so managed, and the interests of Government so cared for, during more than four years, under the administration of high-toned heads of Department like Mr. GUTHRIE and Mr. COBB, as to give to them entire satisfaction, we do not think that more could be asked for. Not only, however, has this been the case, but much, in addition, that is reassuring and gratifying. The New-York Custom-House has, of late, been made the invariable model, at Washington, upon which business, elsewhere, has been conducted. The revenue laws and Treasury regulations have been enforced by the Collector, Surveyor and Naval Officer, with such clock-work precision, and the warehousing department, under the care of Mr WALDEN, has justly obtained such a wide-spread reputation, that Clerks have been repeatedly sent from New-York to other ports, to assimilate them to this. Officers at those ports have been formally instructed to apply to this as their standard, in cases of embarrassment or difficulty. All this is perfectly natural, as two-thirds of the revenue is collected in New-York, and as many questions of law and practice arise here, that never or very rarely come up in other places. These require a great amount of talent and practical knowledge to manage, and we venture to say that it would be difficult to find gentlemen in any other ports upon this continent, who can compare with Messrs. CLINCH, FRANKLIN, WALDEN, and others, whose names have been identified, for so many years, with the honor of our City, and who keen-sighted, upright scrutiny with which they protect the interests of the Government. Collectors and Administrations pass away, but they remain, because they cannot be dispensed with, as depositories of the aggregate wisdom of half of a generation.

If our Philadelphia brethren have complaints to make, we beg them to be explicit. Let them state the how and when, but not indulge in vague, random charges. We shall then be prepared to give an equally precise and explicit answer.

The Washington Mystery.

A feeling of intense dissatisfaction pervades the public mind at the manner in which the mystery of the National Hotel disease has been treated by the authorities of the City of Washington. From every quarter of the country come in denunciations of what is styled—not without warrant—the determination on the part of interested parties to stifle inquiry and hoodwink suspicion concerning what has every appearance of being the most gigantic and startling crime of the age. The simple fact that twenty-five or thirty persons have died, and that three times as many more have been, and still are suffering, under severe, lingering and dangerous illness, from some cause or other connected with the National Hotel, is, of itself, enough to excite the most intense feeling and stimulate to the most rigid and persevering inquiry. Such mortality is of very rare occurrence in any age and in any country. That it should have taken place in Washington, at this precise time and under the peculiar circumstances which surrounded it, is among the most remarkable incidents of the day. The disease appeared at Washington immediately upon President BUCHANAN'S visit there on the first of February:—it had not been heard of before:—it broke out suddenly and attacked nearly all who were living, lodging and eating at the National Hotel;—and among those who were affected by it none were more seriously, or, to all appearance, more dangerously ill than Mr. BUCHANAN himself. He returned to Wheatland with the disease upon him:—and so threatening were its symptoms that a medical gentleman who saw him there within a fortnight of his departure a second time for the capital, wrote a private letter to this City stating that the President was very ill,—that it was not the result of fatigue or of anxiety,—that his symptoms baffled inquiry and that in his opinion it was very doubtful whether he would ever be able to go through the ceremony of the Inauguration, if, indeed, he should live until that time. This letter he refused to allow to be published, and beyond a distant allusion to the serious nature of the President's illness which appeared in the columns of the TIMES, the whole matter was kept from the knowledge of the public. But the President has not yet recovered from its effects. The disease hangs around him still, as it hangs around scores of others who were seized by it at the same time.

The official and other attempts that have been made to explain this remarkable mystery, are worse than absurd. They look more like endeavors to cloak and conceal, than to detect and expose, the cause of this fearful mortality. At first it was reported that arsenic had been used to poison rats, and that they had found their way into the tank from which the Hotel was supplied with water. But the prompt and emphatic denial of the proprietors of the Hotel put an end to this attempt to mislead. Then came the story that rats without arsenic had done the mischief. But this was also silenced by the statement that the water-tank was absolutely inaccessible to rats or vermin of any kind. Next came the rumor of copper utensils employed in cooking, which might have caused the sickness,—but this was met by the contradiction of the proprietors, which was complete and conclusive.

Finally, we had the official report of the Board of Health,—that it was the result of bad drainage, causing impure air and miasmatic exhalations in the Hotel;—and this has been received as a sufficient and satisfactory explanation by eminent professional gentlemen, and, until within a few days past, by the public at large. But a little reflection has satisfied the common sense of the community that, as an attempt to account for the extraordinary features of this case, it is absolutely ridiculous. Bad air undoubtedly injures health, produces sickness and sometimes causes death;—but no air which people accustomed to the common comforts of life could breathe for days in succession, without constant and intense disgust, could possibly produce effects so marked and so malignant as these. There are lodging-houses in this City, where, in a room under ground, not twenty feet square, nor six feet high, thirty or forty human beings sleep every night,—the air of which not one of the guests of the National Hotel could breathe an hour without suffocation; yet even in the worst and most loathsome of these dens,—where poisoning by bad air is carried to the extremest height of incessant activity,—there has never been witnessed such startling mortality as has distinguished this experience at the National Hotel. The symptoms are far too acute,—the disease is far too deeply seated and clings with too much tenacity to its victims, to be accounted for by so shallow an explanation as that with which the Washington Board of Health has for some weeks amused public credulity and evaded the scrutiny of justice. It is high time these devices were abandoned and the real character of the transaction looked fairly in the face.

There is abundant ground for suspecting that the disease is the result of poison administered in the food served to the guests of the Hotel. The enormity of the crime shocks the public sense and leads some to pronounce it incredible. But, startling as it may be, it is not half so incredible as the supposition that such results should have taken place without any adequate cause. The deaths that have occurred,—the lingering disease that still prostrates the energies of the President and of scores of others who were exposed with him, are facts which demand explanation of some kind, and which must be traced to some influence equal to their production. And the great mass of the community can see thus far nothing which affords a more reasonable clue to this dreadful mystery than the supposition that it is the result of poison.

Politics and the Bench.

The Evening Post seems disposed to draw from the course pursued by the Judges in the case of WOOD vs. The Police Commissioners, some very desponding conclusions as to the future of both the bench and the bar. It thinks that the attempts made by the judiciary to arrogate to itself powers to which it has in reality no claim, will lead, at no very distant day, to the curtailment of those which it unquestionably possesses,—that the legislature will limit the exercise of its authority to a few cases or classes of cases rigidly defined, and that, thus shorn of a great portion of its dignity, its members will sink into insignificance and drag the bar down with them.

Now, whatever we may think of the contest between the Corporation and the new Commissioners, or of the New-York Judges, and the mode of their election, we must say that we can see nothing in the action of the Courts, as yet, to call forth either severe criticism or ingubrious prophecies. No Judge, that we know of, has evinced any disposition to arrogate to himself, in this instance, jurisdiction which he does not possess. Two preliminary injunctions have been granted, as matters of course, on ex parte applications, pending a final decision. One has been already dissolved upon a technical point of law, and we must say that, for clearness and conciseness, the judgment by which this dissolution was decreed was worthy of any Court in the world. Judge DAVIES performed his duty admirably, and nothing more than his duty. Judge ROOSEVELT'S injunction was a temporary one also. Whether he had the right to grant, or not, is still an open question. Neither he nor anybody for him claimed the privilege of laying down a precedent in the matter, and it was no more his business to decide upon the Constitutionality of the Police act upon the motion before him, than to refuse an order of arrest against a fraudulent debtor, until all the pleadings on both sides had been filed. No jurisdiction has been usurped by any body, and none of the bar complains of any such usurpation.

The impatience of some of our cotemporaries at the obstacles thrown in the way of the operation of the Police law is, we admit, considering their opinions on the subject, very natural. But we cannot help regretting that it should lead them into undeserved censure of a body of men, which ought to stand higher in public estimation than any other in the State, and which, unhappily, has already faults enough, which admit of no denial, without being charged with others of which it has not been guilty. This tendency to blacken and vilify every order of men whose position forces them into real or apparent opposition to the prevailing sentiment, is one of the worst tendencies of the age. We do not object to general comments upon the character or standing of either bench or bar. They fall within the legitimate sphere of every journalist. But we do object to dragging the judges into the arena of politics and then pelting them because they do not at once proceed to pummel our enemies. If the Courts declare this act of the Legislature unconstitutional, they will only have done what they have a perfect right to do, in the exercise of a function secured to them by the Constitution itself. It is very well known by everybody that it is their duty and theirs only to decide whether the legislative decrees are in accordance with the fundamental law. No one has ever doubted or denied this, and the outcry which is now being raised against them for the simple, orderly, lawyer-like performance of one of their highest duties, is something which we cannot help calling a piece of very mischievous and very foolish partisanship.

This partisan threatening and browbeating of the judges, now becoming so common, is a very bad sign of the times. We know of nothing better calculated to demoralize the people politically than to be incited into wreaking vengeance on the judiciary at the next Convention, by stripping them of some of their powers, because, in a case in which fierce political passions are excited, they happen to decide against the prevailing sentiment.

This is exactly what the Evening Post, it seems to us, is doing, in the article to which we have referred. We need hardly say that the notion that the Legislature or the people either can ever reduce the Bench into insignificance by confining their jurisdiction to a few cases, and forcing people into dispensing with litigation by greater care and caution of their dealings with one another, is totally erroneous. To bring about this result, a new language would have to be invented, and human nature recast. Legislatures may lay down principles, but no Legislature that ever existed could regulate the application of those principles to the hundred thousand varied forms in which the commonest transaction between man and man presents itself from time to time. Even if fraud, cunning or avarice were wholly banished from the world, as long as two persons can by any possibility differ upon the construction of phrases, or upon the causes or consequences of events, judges will not only be necessary, but powerful. By legislating against them, and dragging them down into servile dependence upon the majority, we may very readily make them corrupt and incompetent, but as long as we are not governed by martial law, we can never make them either feeble or insignificant.

From Kansas.

We have, in a letter from our Kansas correspondent, a distinct statement that the Free-State Party have proposed to Mr. STANTON, the acting Governor, to take part in the pending election for delegates to the Constitutional Convention. They ask only some reasonable guarantee that their rights may be respected, and that such arrangements may be made as will secure them the degree of weight in the election to which they may be fairly entitled by their numbers. They propose that the Census shall be taken in each District by one Pro-Slavery and one Free-State man acting together: that the receipt and canvassing of votes shall be attended to by two of each party, and that the signature of three shall be essential to the validity of the returns. If these propositions shall be acceded to, they declare themselves ready to take part in the election. Our correspondent states that this proposition was submitted to the acting Governor, in a friendly interview between himself and the leaders of the Free-State Party, at Lawrence, on the 25th of April, and that it was "still under consideration."

This intelligence fully confirms the reports we have already received of the disposition of the Free-State Party to recede from the position of inactivity they have occupied hitherto, and also confirms the construction which we put upon the Free-State Address in the TIMES of yesterday. They abandon the stand which they have been represented as holding, namely, that they could not, in any way or to any extent, recognize the authority of the Territorial Legislature, and indicate their willingness to vote under its direction, provided they can have guarantees against fraud.

The propositions they have made to the acting Governor are eminently reasonable and just. If he has any power to modify the regulations prescribed by the Legislature, he cannot well refuse to accede to these proposals. And we hope that no merely technical objections will be allowed to prevent such action as will meet the moderate and just views of the Free-State Party as thus expressed.

THE BOARD OF ALDERMEN vs. TAMMANY HALL.—As a sequel to the recent election of Sackems at Tammany Hall, and the defeat of the so-called "Wood" ticket, we must regret to have perceived a cause of action, on the part of those who were discomfited on that occasion, which bids fair to establish a dangerous, and, in every way, reprehensible precedent. We refer to the adoption by the Board of Alderman, on Thursday evening last, of a series of resolutions, offered by Alderman WILSON, of the First Ward; which virtually turns that body into a mere caucus of the minority faction of the Democracy. The preamble to the resolution, is classed off into eight lengthy, separate Whereases, setting forth that New York is "the first commercial city in the world;" that its "history dates from a century before the Revolution;" that the "recent enactments of the Legislature" have "reduced it to a mere dependency upon the central power of the State;" after which come "miseries and oppression"—"stripped us of rights"—"criminal neglect"—"common invasion and danger"—against which "all classes of men" are called on to resolve—WHAT? Why, that "the electors of this city and county be authorized to elect five delegates from each Ward, to meet in a City Convention," ostensibly to express the voice of the people, as to the recent legislation of the State; but in reality, to lay the foundation of a counter-organization to Tammany Hall, which shall be of such a color and stripe as may be determined on by the "inspectors hereafter to be designated" (!) who will really have the appointment of the members.

The whole affair is too transparent for comment. It simply means that the Common Council have organized themselves into a caucus to renominate FERNANDO WOOD for Mayor next Fall, over the heads of his own party. For our part, we do not care to meddle with the action of any body of men who act legitimately; but such practices on the part of the Corporation, at a time when its undivided activity ought to be engrossed by public business, and in devising modes of extricating the City from its financial embarrassments, is simply abominable, and beretofore, we believe, unheard of.

THE BOARD OF TEN GOVERNORS AND THE TWELFTH WARD SCHOOL.—A difficulty arose some time since between the authorities of Randall's Island and the Trustees of the Twelfth Ward School, which has been continued ever since and is now assuming a form highly injurious to the public interests.

Our readers probably remember that some time since a complaint was made by Mr. ELDRIDGE, the Warden of the Island, against Miss JACKSON, the teacher of the School, of cruelty in her punishments; and without making or asking for any inquiry into the facts of the case, the Randall's Island Committee of the Board of Governors, consisting of Messrs. TIEMAN, OLIVER, and MALONY, sent a communication to the Trustees of the school demanding Miss JACKSON'S dismissal. The trustees declined to comply with this demand, but instituted a public inquiry into the charge, at which the Committee were present, and which resulted in Miss JACKSON'S acquittal. At the next meeting of the Board she was accordingly reinstated. Upon this, by a vote of the Ten Governors, taken when the Board was not full, the children on Randall's Island were withdrawn from the school, and are now receiving no instruction.

Five of the Governors, on the 14th of April, addressed a letter to the Trustees, stating that they had understood it was their intention to transfer Miss JACKSON to another school, under the belief that the Board of Governors would thus be induced to continue the tuition of the children on the Island under the Board of Education,—and objecting to such a course being taken as it would not change their action in the least.

On the 27th of April the Trustees replied to this letter, rehearsing at considerable length all the circumstances of the case, and saying that the hope of reconciling the differences which exist between the two Boards had induced them to contemplate such a change as the one suggested. But the objections of the Ten Governors show that their real object is to obtain control of a school which is placed by law under the exclusive supervision of the Trustees. This control they cannot yield,—nor can they be coerced into abandoning their duty in the premises even by the extraordinary step which the Governors have taken of withdrawing from the school the children for whose especial benefit it was established.

The length of the correspondence prevents us from publishing it entire. We have given, however, its essential points, and from these the public will readily see the importance of a prompt adjustment of a difference which makes itself felt wholly in the injury it inflicts upon the children maintained at the public expense on Randall's Island.

SOUTH CAROLINA.—The Edgefield (S. C.) Advertiser announces that General HAMMOND declines peremptorily to be a candidate for Congress in the district left vacant by the death of Mr. BROOKS. He is disinclined to reënter public life, and authorizes the Editor of the Advertiser to state, that, while he does not suppose he could be elected, he would not serve if he were elected, unless it should be absolutely necessary. General H. is one of the ablest, and also one of the most ultra, of the Southern champions of Slavery.

JOURNALISM.—The National Intelligencer has been busily engaged ever since the adjournment of Congress in publishing the Senate debate on the Iowa Contested Election Case. Yesterday's paper gives five columns of the speeches and brings the discussion down to the 9th of January. The Intelligencer has a good excuse for publishing this matter, as it is paid we belive $7 50 per column for so doing. But as no pay is given for reading it, we presume that part of the job remains to be let out upon some future contract.

Amusements.

BURTON'S THEATRE.—Last evening Mr. EDWIN BOOTH made his first New-York appearance at this theatre. He was greeted by a large and appreciative audience, and succeeded in securing the approbation of the majority present. Tragedians must appear in "Richard," and it is, perhaps, an indication of strength that in most instances they assume a rôle so difficult at the outset. Certainly by doing so they challenge the severest criticism, for not only does the character demand high mental capacity, but a superior physical organization, capable of extreme exertion and fatigue. Mr. BOOTH—the bearer of an illustrious name, and of whom the dramatic world hopes much—was right in selecting the hump-backed hero for his first impersonation, for although an imperfect performance in some respects, it was superior to any we have seen on the stage of late years, and sufficient to place him above the mediocrities and the respectabilities of his profession. Mr. BOOTH has a fine, intelligent bearing; a keen eye, susceptible of extreme dilation; a voice of considerable compass, sometimes a little husky, but always distinct; a well-balanced elocution; and a walk not extremely theatrical, but tending that way. The performance of last night was more remarkable for well-sustained finish and completeness, than for startling originality of conception We mention this circumstance in praise and not in censure. The straining after new readings has been hugely overdone. Mr. BOOTH gave to the character sufficient fire and energy without bolstering it up with mouthings and absurdities. In a word he succeeded in creating a favorable and well merited impression. An artist so young and promising is indeed an acquisition to the tragic stage. He was cordially received and called out frequently.

BROADWAY THEATRE.—Mr. CHARLES GAYLOR, a gentleman who has his office on an Atlantic steamer, and occupies himself on the passage in transleting French plays for this ungrateful country, produced a magnificent spectacle drama last evening. It is an American version of Le Fils de la Nuit, and is called by the same name, "The Son of the Night." To do justice to the plot would require a supplement, which we do not feel justified in issuing for this beneficent purpose. It will be sufficient for the moment to state that it is a play of the most ultra romantic school; that most of its incidents are delightfully improbable; and that its language is loaded with love, heroism, revenge, joviality, daring, and every other virtue or vice which ennobles or degrades mankind. There is a prologue with a cradle in it, and two inexpensive babies. It is the destiny of these unhappy infants to be changed by their nurse, who is also the parent of one of the interesting twain. This incident, which every one will recognize as strikingly original, is the key of all the mysteries which follow. By the exercise of the most creditable ingenuity the authors have concluded a play of unquestionable interest and of more than average merit. The "situations" crowd on each other in a manner perfectly breathless; there is no time to pause and think in the excitement which prevails for at least three hours. The curtain goes up on a tableau and comes down on a tableau; in fact, every one and everything is more or less a tableau from beginning to end. To this we may add that the dialogue, without being in the slightest degree pretentious, is above the average, both in distribution and substance. If the "Son of the Night" does not have a long run we shall lose all confidence in high pressure melodrama.

The play was well cast, and played with unusual spirit and excellence—one of the best performances we have ever witnessed at this theatre—the costumes good, the scenery and mechanical effects very superior. Indeed, if for the latter only, the play deserves a lengthy career. It was a decided success, and will be played indefinitely.

EISFELD'S SOIREE.—Mr. EISFELD, one of our best and best-esteemed resident musicians, gives his last classical soiree this evening. Against all obstacles he has continued this instructive series for a number of years, and has, we are happy to say, been properly appreciated. To-night being the last opportunity of the season, should be signalized by a brilliant gathering.

A gratifying mark of esteem was paid to Mr. EISFELD last week by the members of the Philharmonic Society of this City, who presented that gentleman with a gold watch and chain. The watch is a valuable one, and bears the following inscription: "Presented by the Members of the Philharmonic Society to THEODORE EISFELD, Esq., as a testimonial of their high appreciation of his valuable services, as conductor of the orchestra. May 2, 1857."

Letter from Gen. Hornsby, of Nicaragua, to Lord Napier.

NEW YORK, Monday, May 4, 1857.

LORD NAPIER: That portion of the American press which is notoriously devoted to British interests has added to its rejoicings over the reverses of the Americans in Nicaragua the false statements that "LOCKRIDGE'S party were protected by the British gunboats from the Costa Ricans, who had followed them down the river." This bold fabrication is circulated by the "allies," to call public attention away from the infamous and tyrannical efforts of the British officers ot San Juan to force the Americans out of the river.

England is in close partnership with Costa Rica for the destruction of American interests on the Isthmus, and on this charge I arraign you, Lord NAPIER, and your government, before the American Union.

It is your mission here to delude my countrymen into some faith in British friendship, but I pledge myself to prove to their entire conviction that England is the active and deadly—though secret and deceitful—foe of American progress in Central America.

I will prove that she has treacherously aided and abetted in the slaughter of American citizens and the plunder of American property on the Isthmus. I will prove that her officials have sanctioned and sustained the destruction of the Nicaragua route to California.

I will prove that her officials have opposed and defeated every attempt to recover the steamers employed on that route, and have used every means in their power to keep this world's highway closed to American trade and travel.

It will be impossible to expose the whole chain of British duplicity and British outrages on the Isthmus in one letter, but I shall continue to favor your lordship with a succession of interesting truths on those points, until our press and people take them up in a better mode.

This Government, either in blindness, temerity or policy, has affected to believe somewhat in British sincerity, but no man who has spent a single year in Nicaragua can misunderstand the course of England.

It is her standing object to obtain such a commanding power over all our routes to the Pacific that she can at will cut off our inter-state communications, and, at any moment which may suit her plans, deprive California of military aid in case of war, or in peace of the prompt commercial support of the Atlantic States.

If she could confine our trade and travel to the one transit of Panama, and can keep that transit wholly in her power, she may hope to retain our Pacific interests in trembling subservisncy to her policy.

She foresaw that the success of the Americans in Nicaragua would make our commerce independent of her dictation, by giving it a choice of waters to the Pacific, and as other interests would not permit her to act openly against us, she made use of Costa Rica and the other States of Central America to do her bloody work of destruction.

This is the key of British policy in Nicaragua, and I hope, Lord NAPIER, I make the charge distinctly enough for your comprehension. I accuse your Government of a deceitful conspiracy with the savages of Central America, to slaughter thousands of our brave citizens, and exclude us from the transit. The allies would have been insignificant enemies without the arms, counsels and protection of England.

It will not be difficult to prove to the people of the United States, that Nicaragua has been robbed of her peace and independence, and our citizens deprived of their best highway to the Pacific, by the intrigues and interference of England, and I hope to bring this fact home to them and to you, before I have done with your lordship. Yours, respectfully,

C. C. HORNSBY.

Young Men's Christian Association.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

I noticed a list of clergymen remaining in the above Association, published in your paper Monday morning, as an off set to those who had retired. Probably these gentlemen did not know that they were members until they saw their names published. Therefore the inference from this is valueless. Many clergymen have been admitted without their knowledge, their names being added, and fees paid by some friend, as a compliment. That was the case with Dr. SPRING, who retired, and also with Rev. Mr. CRAIGHEAD and Rev. Mr. BEECHER, who are published as remaining. Neither of these gentlemen knew they were members until weeks after their admission—one of them only by being told of it this morning. If was the same with the others who remain. AN EX-MEMBER.

South-street Obstructions.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

West-street is by no means the only one obstructed by the accumulation of all kinds of goods and chattels upon the sidewalk. On our side of the town I refer to South-street, and particularly that part of it below Wall where it is narrowest. Our walks are used for weighing teas, coffee, iron, hides, and all other kinds of merchandise, which are piled up in mountain heaps on the walk, covering the passage-way completely, and compelling pedestrians to walk through the mud dy street in order to get along. This practice has grown into an unbearable nuisance in the ewer part of South-street, and calls loudly for correction. Will not Mayor WOOD turn his attention to this unconstitutional abuse? SOUTH-STREET.

NEWS FROM SALT LAKE CITY.

The Weather—Organization of Militia—Defiance of Federal Authority—Brigham Young on Immigration, Marriage, &c.—Failings from Grace.

We have received files of the Deseret News to the 25th of February. During January the highest range of the thermometer was 50 degrees, the lowest 3 degrees below zero. During the months of November, December and January, there fell 8 feet 1½ inches of snow, producing 2,120 inches of water to the solid foot of snow. There also fell one half inch of rain.

On the 15th January, BRIGHAM YOUNG, as Governor, approved the following:

AN ACT for the Organization of the Militia of the Territory of Utah.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, That the present acting Lieutenant-General of the Nauvoo Legion, aided by six or more commissioned officers of the line, or staff, to be selected by him, is hereby authorised and empowered to draft, and adopt a system of laws and regulations, for the militia of the Territory of Utah, and create and fill such offices as are, or may be necessary for the organization: which system of regulations shall be subject to the revision of the Legislative Assembly when in session, and shall be in force from and after their publication, unless annulled by Legislative enactment.

SEC. 2. That the Lieutenant-General shall hereafter be elected by the people, at such time and place as shall be directed by the Governor.

Generals H. S. Eldride, James Ferguson, A. P. Rockwood, and G. D. Grants; Colonels H. S Clawson and L. W. Hardy; Lieutenant-Colonels. Wm. H. Kimball and Wm. Hyde, and Major P. T. Burton.

The services of JOSEA STOUT, Esq., Territorial Attorney-General, are respectfully solicited.

The News has an article intending to prove that the United States Government has no power to appoint Territorial officers, and closes thus:

"So far as free, untrammeled consent and expressed wishes of the governed are concerned, should the majority of the citizens in a Territory choose to waive their constitutional rights and prefer a state of vassalage, a state of being ruled by officers thrust upon them and legislated for by usurped authority, we see no reason why their choice should not be complied with, at least upon the principle of the voluntary consent of the governed. But when said majority, even to the extent of an entire community, are known to most persistently prefer officers of their own election to those foisted upon them by arbitrary power, and purely republican laws of their own enactment to laws carved, dictated and forced upon them by a power to which the Constitution gives no such authority, we are constrained to say that most truly are men prone to oppose their fellows. How long, think ye, can such oppression be quietly endured? How long, think ye, will any people submit to the dictates, slanders, corruptions and abuse of officers whom they have no voice in electing, and whose efforts are constantly put forth, to their utmost, for the destruction of the people among whom they are sent? Suppose ys that the few dollars parsimoniously doled out by Congress can buy from on to overlook such glaring, inconsistencies?"

In the meantime the President of the Quorum of Seventies, calls upon all the Quorums to report themselves to him for proper training, and the Colonel of the First Invincibles has opened a school for the advancement of his brethren in infantry and cavalry tactics.

The following warlike recommendation obtains:

1. Lieutenant JOHN TOBIN, of the Lancers, having opened a school in this City for instruction in various branches of cavalry manœuvring, incinding the sabre drill, it is recommended by the Lieutenant-General commanding, that the officers and men now enrolled or expecting to enroll themselves in that branch of the service, embrace the opportunity thus offered to qualify themselves for duty.

2. From Lieutenant TOBIN'S experience in the regular army of the United States, and his excellent natural abilities, he is well adapted to teach. By order of DANIEL H. WELLS, Lieut. General.

JAMES FERGUSON, Adjutant General.

President HEBER C. KIMBALL, sermonizing in the Tabernacle on the 21st of December, uoctuously enumerated his polygamic offspring as "23 boys living, 10 dead, and lots of girls."

BRIGHAM has lately expressed his views of immigration. He declares that he does not want the Saints to have regard for silks and satins, but rather to come and he blessed—and bring their cash. In his sermon of the 1st of February he thus exhorts:

"I will now say something about our immigration this season. Previous to the death of JOSEPH SMITH, he said the time would come when the Saints would be glad to take a bundle, if they could get one, under their arms and start to the mountains, and that they would flee there; and that if they could pick up a change of linen they would be glad to start with that, and to go into the wilderness with anything, in order to escape from the destruction that is coming on the inhabitants of the earth. This we believed, or at least I did—though it seemed to be pretty hard that people should be obliged to leave their houses, farms, friends, and comforts that they had gathered around them, and run from them all. I am going to take that as a leading item for this season.

We have been experimenting. Five companies, I think, have come across the plains with hand-carts, and they have come a great deal cheaper and better than other companies. I believe that if a company was to try it once with ox teams and once with hand-carts, every one of them would decide in favor of the hand-carts, unless they could ride more and be more comfortable than people generally are with ox teams. I count the hand-cart operation a successful one, and there is a lesson in it which the people have overlooked. What is it? Let me ask the sisters and brethren here what better off are you to-day than as though you had started with a bundle under your arm? You started with an abundance, but have you any oxen or wagons, or trunks of valuable clothing or money? "No." What have you got? A sister says, "I have the underclothes I wore on the plains, and a dress, and a handkerchief which I pinned over my head in the absence of my sun-bonnets, which were worn out and I am here." Are you here? "Yes." Did you come across the plains? "Yes." Do you feel bad? "Oh, no; I feel pretty well." Now reflect, what else do we want of you, and what else do you want of yourselves? "Why," says one, "I want a dress and a pair of shoes." Well, go to work and earn them, and put them on and wear them. "I want a bonnet." Go to work and earn it, and then wear it, as you used to do. What do you want more, but yourselves? Nothing, but yourselves and your religion; that is all you want to bring here. If you come naked and barefooted—I would not care if you had naught but a deer skin around you when you arrive here—and bring your God and your religion, you are a thousand times better than if you came with wagon loads of silver and gold, and left your God behind.

If I want to take a wife from among the sisters who came in with the hand-cart trains, I would rather take one that had nothing, and say to her, "I will throw a buckskin around you for the present; come into my house; I have plenty, or, if I have not, I can get plenty." Some want to marry a woman because she has got property; some want a rich wife; but I never saw the day when I would not rather have a poor woman. I never saw the day that I wanted to be hoppecked to death, for I should have been if I married a rich wife. I asked one of my family, when in conversation upon this very point, what did you bring when you came to me? "I brought a shirt, and a dress, and a pair of slippers, and a sun-bonnet," and she is as high a prizeas I ever got in my life, and a great deal higher than many would have been with cart-loads of silver and gold. The people are what we want. Reflect about this; and let the elders, when they go upon missions, sound this in the ears of the Saints; and, if you please, philosophize upon, weigh the matter well, and see what else there is that is in reality good for anything, but just the Saint at the gathering place; let the Saint come, and we have all we can get. I want you to keep in mind what Joseph said, "that the day would come when the Saints would be glad to take a bundle under their arms and run to the mountains."

What else have they done this season. Men and women started with their fine things, they had their gold and their silver, their flocks and their herds, and their abundance, but they have nearly all come here naked and barefooted, comparatively speaking—thank God for that. What do I care, if not the first particle of the property that is left behind is ever gathered up again? You are situated precisely as we were when we left Nauvoo, Kirtland, Missouri, &c. We started naked and bare. If I only take myself, and my God, and my religion, it is all I want. The heavens are full, the earth is the Lord's, and we have nothing to do but to go to work and organize the elements and get what we want. This is the day in which we are to learn, and to increase in our knowledge. Have we got a good lesson this time? I think we have. What is it? That the saints, when they start from England, may stop buying their silks and satins, their ribbons and finery. You cannot bring them here, unless Providence provides different for you than it did for the immigration last season. If you have a fine silk mantilla, a fine satin dress, fine kid shoes, a fine lace bonnet, and you say that you want to carry them to Zion, do as they did last season. Here are the poor we had to bring over. Now let me tell you that if you had taken the money you paid to WILLIAM WALKER to bring out the baggage, and used it for the gathering of the honest poor, it would have done some good, but that property is spoiled, I understand, and I am glad of it. Much of it was spoiled before it was taken from Iowa City, or, if it was not then, it probably is now. And I expect that the goods are all spoiled at the Devil's Gate.

You will pardon me for my abruptness, but I will tell you what that operation made me think of—that what you did not leave in hell's kitchen you had to leave at the Devil's Gate. If you only honor your God and your religion, the silks and the satins, and the money you paid out for them, may all go to hell with the balance. I will say to the Saints abroad, if you can get some good hickory cloth, or some buckskins, and let the sisters make dresses and garments that cannot be easily torn, and that will last till you get here, and come and bring yourselves, that is all we want. And for the time to come let the P. E Fund money alone, and let your silks and satins alone, and take the means you have, and bring yourselves to this Place. The Lord, in his providence, has shown you and me and the community in this Territory, and will show to the people in the old countries, if the elders are faithful, that they may bid farewell to bringing their millions' worth of goods here. If they bring anything, let them bring their sovereigns here; the gold will do them more good here than anything else; do not peddle it out in the world. Get the Lord to send an angel with you; get his Holy Spirit to travel with you to this place, and leave all trash behind. If the companies are composed solely of young females, they may come by tens of thousands if they like, for I have never yet seen anything in this market that can equal the hand cart girls."

At a later date he, however, concludes and says:

"I pray the God of Israel to bless you forever and ever, for you are the best people on earth. I can say that I am happy that you are doing so well as you are."

Notwithstanding which, several or the faithful have fallen from grace.

The Baltimore Railroad Riot.

A GUERILLA WAR BETWEEN THE MOB AND THE MILITARY.

We condense from the Baltimore Sun of yesterday an account of the occurrences of Saturday and Sunday:

It being the determination of the Company to dispatch its trains under the protection of the military of the State, at 2 o'clock, requisition was made upon the Independent Grays, under Capt. BASSE, and Baltimore City Guards, under Capt. WARNER, who were conveyed from their armories to the Camden Station, in omnibuses, during the heavy fall of rain, and placed on board a special train to connect with the tonnage trains at the junction. They filled three cars. The paymaster's car attached was occupied as before, by Sheriff POLE, of this County, and his posse, and was followed by a fifth, closed car, fitted up as an arsenal, in which were several chests of muskets, boxes of cartridges, bags of balls and buckshot, and other munitions of war. Heavy axes were distributed through the train, to be used in case boarding was attempted. The services of an experienced surgeon, JOHN A. STEVENS, M. D., was also obtained, who came aboard with his case of instruments, &c. Shortly after 4 o'clock, the order was given to move, and the train, under the command of Capt. AUGUSTUS P. SHUTT, of the Railroad Company, left Camden Station and moved on towards the Locust Point Junction, where the connection was to be effected. During the run to this place, the most warlike preparations were being made by the soldiery and others. The cartridges were served out, and the troops ordered to load their muskets with ball. Arms were also being distributed to the conductors and brakesmen, and others; the side lights and windows were opened to be used as embrasures for the muskets, and every available location was occupied by resolute men, determined to stand to their posts.

At 4½ o'clock the war train arrived, and halting at the junction the connection with the trains was effected. The whole length of the trains connected was over half a mile, and was composed of 80 cars freighted with goods and merchandise, valued at a million of dollars. The crowd assembled to witness the departure of the trains was not great, and the proclamation issued during the day deterred and kept many from the localities. It was rumored, however, that armed parties to the number of several thousands were collected at Jackson's Bridge, the scene of the former attack, and at 5 o'clock the immense train was put under way and moved upon that spot. As the first engine approached the bridge several hundred men were seen upon and about it, and others lying off in the fields. A stone was thrown, which seemed to be the signal for an attack, and several guns were fired from the bridge and fields upon the head of the train. The fire was returned by the guard upon the engines with deadly aim and several of the rioters fell, which causing a panic among them, they scampered, but as the train passed its length along they rallied upon the paymaster's car, in the rear, held by the Sheriff and his officers, who from the side-lights and platform continued to discharge their muskets and revolvers upon them, which was continued along the route at intervals until the train entered the deep cut a mile from the bridge. Here were collected five hundred men, composed of the most determined characters, armed with weapons and a brass swivel, which was posted on the bank in such a position as to rake the first engine. Here a most desperate attack was anticipated, and a hundred cocked muskets lay leveled from the windows or bristled from the side-lights, awaiting the onset of the rioters, and the word to fire. Meanwhile the attack had been commenced on the guard in front, who were returning the fire with great rapidity and precision. A party on the hill in endeavoring to get off the swivel, the charge of which was dampened by the rain, were shot down by the military, although no regular command was given, and the battle now become pretty general along the train, though orders were given to waste no random shots but select a man. It is supposed that four or five were wounded at this point. One man standing on the hill with an umbrella over his head and apparently a spectator, was shot through the brain and fell dead. Another of the rioters received a ball in one shoulder which passed around under the flesh of the other; a third was seen to press his hand on his side and drop down. The discharges were more generally effective than on the previous occasion, as previously arranged, the order here was to stop the train at the commencement of the attack, when the troops were to disembark with fixed bayonets, pursue the rioters and either shoot down, stab or capture them, but the engineer in front either misunderstood the order or willfully disregarded it, and applying the more steam, kept on dragging the train away, which met with no further molestation or detention until it arrived at Gwyu's Falls, and near the scene of the onsanguinary conflict of the previous day. Here, about a half mile in advance, the six o'clock train from Ellicott's Mills had been thrown from the rails by some obstruction, it is supposed, placed upon them, and the wreck obstructing the road the train was detained at this point from seven to nine o'clock. Meanwhile the rain poured in torrents, and the woods and high hills around adding to the extreme darkness, nothing could be seen for awhile but the dark line of the immense train with here and there a lighted lantern moving among them.

Finally, at about 9 o'clock, the track was pronounced clear, and the train moved on at a slow pace, and arrived at Ellicott's Mills. A freight and stock tonnage train from Martinsburg, under the charge of Mr. BOILMAN, was here lying off, awaiting an escort to the city; and as the services of the military would be required no further, the cars containing the military, sheriff and posse were connected with this train, and at 10 o'clock the train was approaching Baltimore, with a guard upon the engine. The clouds now broke away, and the moon shone out, which enabled the engineer to follow the rails in advance with his eye, as it was more than probable that the strikers and others, foiled in their endeavors to drive back the trains, would either tear up the track or place obstructions upon it. In this manner the track was discovered in several places to be obstructed with pieces of wood, &c. When within two miles of Mt. Clare depot the clouds suddenly closed over the moon, and the train, now moving more rapidly, ran with great violence upon a short T rail spiked down across the track. The engine was thrown off its own track upon the other, tearing up the sleepers, and dashed down an embankment, a crushed and broken mass. The tender and five cars followed, and, dashing upon one another, were broken to atoms. A moment after the concussion the troops were disembarked and marching upon the scene of the wreck. Private JOHN D. ELLIS, of the City Guards, was found lying beneath a portion of the engine. He was borne to the military car in the rear, and Dr. JOHN A. STEVENS examined his wounds. His right leg was found to be broken in two places below the knee. Splints were supplied by tearing the panels from the door of the car, and the limb was set. THOS. HALL, private, of the Independent Greys, was thrown upon his head, and may have received a concussion of the brain. Both of the injured, with others, occupied the post of guard upon the engine, and they with the engineer and fireman were thrown violently to the ground. Several of the muskets in their hands, cocked at the moment, in expectation of an attack, were discharged. The noise of the concussion was so great as to be heard at Mt. Clare station, nearly two miles distant, and a messenger was dispatched to ascertain the result—but before he arrived, Mr. BOILMAN, master of the road, had gone in under guard to bring out a train in which to convey the military and others to the city. Some delay being occasioned, a carriage was furnished by H. H. EVANS, Esq., who resides near the scene, and the wounded were placed in it and driven to the city. The military then took up the line of march, leaving the Sheriff and his officers with Capt. SHUTT in charge of the disabled train. The several companies arrived at their armories about 3 o'clock on Sunday morning.

From the manner in which the rail that threw off the engine was arranged, it is clearly shown that none but persons conversant with the road and its workings could have perpetrated so diabolical an outrage.

A portion of the track at White Oak Grove, on the Washington road, was taken up on Saturday night, with the intention of throwing off the down passenger train, but the track was replaced, and the train passed over the route in safety.

A train from Wheeling, in charge of Conductor SNYDER, due at the Camden station Saturday night, was detained at Piedmont by a heavy slide, and arrived last evening.

At an early hour the master of the road, with a large number of men, began the work of clearing away the obstructions on the track, and before noon it was again ready for service, though no tonnage trains were started yesterday.

Throughout the whole day the line of the track was filled with persons, drawn thith r by curiosity to witness the scene of conflict. All, however, was quiet, and it was said no further demonstration would be made until after a meeting of the board of directors shall have been held.

The only person killed, so far as we could learn, was HENRY HORNER, living at No. 624 West Pratt-street, whither his body was brought at 10 o'clock on Saturday night.

An inquest was held upon his body, and a verdict rendered that he came to his death from two gun shot wounds at the hands of some person or persons to the jury unknown."

On Sunday afternoon the Law Grays, Captain THOMAS BOWERS, were ordered out. They proceeded to the Camden station and were conveyed in the Washington Train to the Relay House, where a tonnage stock train was awaiting their escort to the city. This train arrived at that point on yesterday morning, freighted with hogs, from the far West, but it was deemed advisable to carry it into the city forthwith, which was accomplished without any difficulty. A dispatch from Washington at 9 o'clock states that the train that left Baltimore at 5¼ arrived at 7:55, encountering no opposition or obstruction. Dispatches from points further west remark quietness.

The President of the road, C. BROOKE, Esq., has offered a reward of one thousand dollars for the detection and apprehension of the parties who placed obstruction upon the rails on Saturday night, whereby the tonnage train was thrown from the track; and also the additional reward of five hundred dollars for information concerning parties or persons seen to obstruct, fire upon or throw a missile at the trains, such as will lead to their apprehension and conviction.

Mayor SWAIN issued a proclamation warning the people to keep away from the scene of the riot.

THE RIOT SUPPOSED TO BE AT AN END.

[TELEGRAPHIC.]

BALTIMORE, Monday, May 4.

No resistance was offered to the trains last evening, and it is believed the riot is over.

BALTIMORE, Monday, May 4—P. M.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad difficulty is not yet settled, but there is a prospect of a speedy settlement. Several military companies started this afternoon to the scene of disturbance. No rioters appeared, and they returned about 9 o'clock this evening, unmolested.

The Randall's Island School.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

The misunderstanding which at present exists between a majority of the School Officers of the Twelfth Ward and that portion of the Ten Governors who profess to feel a lively interest in the temporal welfare of the children committed to their care, seem likely to produce consequences, the opposite of which should obtain in all of our public institutions. The Governors, unable to force the School officers to accede to their demand to discharge Miss JACKSON, passed a resolution, three weeks since, to keep the children from attending school. This resolution is still in force; the children are losing the opportunity of improvement, and the salaries of the teachers have to be paid by the City. Five of the Governors are anxious to have the School entirely under their control. The Warden, too, who has, at present, no control over the teachers, is working strenuously to effect this change, so that his authority may be increased—he finds, that under the present system he cannot apply the gag law to the teachers, for they tell mention facts which do not appear on the surface of things; and it would be well for the poor children if the Governors would take a peep behind the curtain—would ascertain for themselves whether the Warden and those under his authority attend efficiently to their several callings.

The teachers have frequently to complain of the unclean state in which the children are sent to school. The poor young creatures are sometimes so annoyed with vermin which have accumulated on their heads, that they are unable to sit quietly on their seats. In July last, a teacher informed the Warden of a boy whose head was literally covered with vermin, and the skin of the scalp excoriated in several places. During the most severe weather of last Winter the smaller children were often sent to school without caps, and this was only partially remedied after the teachers had complained. The teachers have also informed the Warden that the children bring food to school in their bosoms, and often besmear the books with grease and other substances; this, as well as the other evils complained of, still exists. No doubt these facts are new to the Governors, but it would be well for them to attend to their own legitimate business, and leave the Trustees to attend to theirs.

A few words with reference to Miss JACKSON. Four or five of the Governors, in many men, will not allow their wrath to be appeased, unless Miss JACKSON be discharged. This lady has been an acceptable and efficient teacher of the same school for 17 years, and during her residence on Randall's Island she has frequently given practical proof of her kindness of heart to teachers, matrons, and children. After toiling all day in school, Miss J. has sat up night after night and watched at the sick-bed of teacher and matron; oftentimes she has bound up wounds on little hands and arms, which have been neglected by those whose duty it was to have performed that office; and, now, because she inadvertently committed an act, which no one more deeply regrets than she, an effort is made to wound seriously her professional reputation. It has been stated by the minority of three of the Trustees that her usefulness on the Island is at an end. I challenge the proof. Not one of the minority has visited the school since Miss J. was reinstated, and their assertion cannot be borne out by fact. If the welfare of the children were the only interest involved, this matter would soon be at rest. OBSERVER.

Another Bloody Tragedy—Two Old People Murdered for their Money.

The Pittsburg papers of Saturday contain the particulars of another shocking tragedy, committed in the borough of McKeesport, Penn. The victims were an old and decrepit couple, brother and sister, between sixty and seventy years of age, by the names of GEORGE and ELIZABETH WILSON.

The old couple lived in a small cabin on the main road leading to Elizabethtown, and had, by economy and industry, succeeded in accumulating some money, whereby they might support themselves in their declining years.

It appears that, a day or two previous, there came to the cabin a large and masculine-looking female, who craved shelter for charity's sake. The boon was freely granted, and, during the first day of the stranger's stay at the house, she made particular inquiries concerning the pecuniary circumstances of her benefactors.

About 8 o'clock last Friday morning, a neighbor's little girl proceeded to pay her accustomed visit to the old couple at their cabin. She opened the door and entered, but instead of being received with a welcome and a smile as was usual, a horrid spectacle was presented to her gaze. The brother had been stabbed to the heart, and the knife which inflicted the deadly wound, lay a short distance from the corpse, all covered with blood. By the side of the brother lay the sister, mutilated in a manner shocking to the senses, and sickening to the heart of humanity; her head was bruised and beaten so horribly that it would have been impossible to recognize it apart from the rest of the body, as the representation of anything human. A poker, besmeared with blood, was lying on the hearth, and it is supposed to have been the instrument used in performing this act of barbarous butchery.

The woman spoken of, who claims to be married to a man named FIFE, has been arrested on suspicion, as was her pretended husband, and a man named MOSS STEWART. Blood was found upon FIFE'S clothing, and it is stated in a postcript that CHARLOTTE JONES, or FIFE, (the woman spoken of) has disclosed the whole affair, implicating the men arrested and two others—her brother one of them.

A CHILD SCALDED TO DEATH.—Coroner CONNERY held an inquest yesterday, at No. 25 Church-street, upon the body of SAMUEL SIMWAY, aged two years and four months. The Jury found that he came to his death "by accidentally falling backwards into a tub of boiling water, and being so severely scalded as to cause gangrenous inflammation, from which the child died on Saturday evening, May 2, 1857."

AGRICULTURAL.

FIELD AND GARDEN SEEDS,
AT THE NORTH RIVER AGRICULTURAL WAREHOUSE.
GRIFFING, BROTHER & CO.,
No. 60 Cortlandt-st., New-York.

GENTLEMEN HAVING COUNTRY SEATS AND GARDENS WILL FIND THE IMPROVED POUDRETTE of the subscribers ONE OF THE BEST FERTILIZERS, as well as the GREATEST substitute for manure, where there is difficulty in procuring sufficient for garden and farm purposes. Its chief recommendations are, that it is neat, inoffensive, CONTAINS NO KINDS OF WEEDS, is very quick and powerful in its operation upon vegetation, and at the same time is so harmless that it can be put in direct contact with the seed or plant without injury, which is totally unlike other fertilizers. It will bring early crops of peas, beans, potatoes, sweet corn, &c., and for lawns and grass plots is unrivaled. The small quantity used and ease of application render it very economical. The price for 1 barrel is $3; 3 barrels, $5; and $1 50 per bbl. for any quantity over 6 barrels, delivered free in the City. A pamphlet will be forwarded by mail, or furnished gratis on application. Address
THE LODI MANUFACTURING COMPANY,
No. 60 Cortlandt-st., New-York.

NEW-YORK CITY.

QUARANTINE SETTLED—SEGUINE'S POINT PARCHASED.—The Quarantine Commissioners have purchased fifty acres of land at Seguine's Point, known as the Wolfe Farm, for a Quarantine Hospital site, and have paid $28,000 for it—so that the title to the same is now vested in the people of the State of New-York. This matter would have been settled some week or ten days sooner, but for the rumor that the title was defective. All doubts upon that point have been settled, and the transfer is now complete. The estate adjoins the property of Mr. SEGUINE, on the east side of the Point. Upon it is one principal building, a gentleman's country seat, which, with other improvements, is estimated to be worth about $14,000. The Commissioners will proceed immediately to erect the necessary buildings for the reception of patients, and to carry out the design of their appointment. Since the purchase has been made the Commissioners, we understand, have been offered a donation of ten acres of land for a Quarantine site, by HENRY M. WEED, Esq., at Cedar Grove, to the eastward of Seguine's, at the foot of New-Dorp plain. A large land-owner on the Island is urging the location on the Grove, for the advantage it would be to the eighty acres which he owns in that neighborhood. So it seems that Staten Island even is divided in sentiment as to the effect of Quarantine in a neighborhood.

With respect to Coney Island, the majority of the Commissioners insist that though parties did offer a lease of it, since they held that lease for it only as for a bathing-place, they could not legally underlease it for a Hospital.

THE TAMMANY DEMOCRACY—MEETING OF THE GENERAL CONVENTION.—A special meeting of the Democratic General Convention was held last evening at Tammany Hall. ELIJAH F. PURDY, the President, presided. After the transaction of the usual opening business, a series of resolutions sustaining the Administration and approving of its Federal appointments, condemning the acts of the Legislature in reference to its legislation regarding this City, and indorsing the course of Mayor WOOD in his opposition to such legislation, were adopted.

A resolution offered by Capt. RYNDERS, that a Committee of one from each Ward be appointed to assist in the success of the grand indignation meeting in the Park, was also adopted.

All the resolutions, especially those referring to the acts of the late Legislature, are couched in very strong language. The question upon each of them was taken by ayes and noes.

The members of the Committee of one from each Ward to determine upon the manner in which a new General Committee shall be selected was announced.

A full and official report of the proceedings was ordered to be published.

NO NEW PORT-WARDENS AT WORK.—From present appearances the newly appointed Port-Wardens are not likely to find anything to do, as the merchants and underwriters stand firmly, and act just as if no new officers existed. In the matter of marine surveying, the old incumbents continue to act—the Underwriters recognizing their certificates, and acting under their authority; and the new Port-Wardens having taken no legal steps to prevent it. On the whole, the old Surveyors are rather anxious that a suit should be brought to test the matter: and profess to have no fears for the result. The ship Wabano is now undergoing repairs on the Dry Dock, under a certificate of the old Marine Surveyors; this is a case which might be proceeded against, if there were the disposition to do so.

THE SHAD POLES TO REMAIN THIS SEASON.—The Pilot Commissioners, on whom now devolves the duty of removing obstructions in the river, upon the piers and in the slips of New-York, have notified the Chamber of Commerce, and the Board of Underwriters, of their readiness to act; but, as there is no appropriation made to defray expenses, no action will be taken until that necessity is provided for. The Commissioners say they are willing to do their duty without pay; but, as there will be a considerable sum required for contingent expenses, and as they cannot do the work, and pay the bills too, probably nothing will be done at present, and the shad-stakes will remain where they are until the close of the present fishing season, which will scarcely last a month longer. Next year the law restricting the setting of poles to places where there is but six feet of water at mean low tide, they promise, shall be strictly enforced.

CITY OFFICIALS WAITING FOR THEIR PAY.—The payment, on Friday last, of over $200,000 interest on City stocks and bonds, was a pretty large draft on the City finances. A good surplus, however, remained from the money just paid in on new revenue bonds. It was stated that, from this surplus, the salaries of City officials would be paid yesterday. There was a great rush early in the morning, in consequence, to the Comptroller's office, of persons holding office under the City Government, to get their last month's pay. But the Comptroller has deferred payment, alleging that more important obligations must be canceled first. How much grumbling there was may be imagined, when it is remembered that the monthly pay of salaries to City officials is $34,250.

A CHANCE TO AID FOR GENERAL WALKER.—A number of guns were seized about two weeks ago on board the Frederick Gibbard, just after her arrival at this port. The seizure took place because an attempt was made to land them without paying the requisite duties on them. The guns are in the Custom House, and no claimants have appeared for them as yet. If no claim is put in for them to-day before the United States District Court, they will be condemned and forfeited to the Government. It is said that the guns were sent over here with a view to their shipment to Gen. WALKER. Be this as it may, it is hardly probable any claimant will appear for them. A good chance, therefore, will offer itself for WALKER's friend and supporters in the City to purchase them at a low figure—as in case of their forfeiture they must be shortly offered at public sale.

ANOTHER SLAVER.—The bark Minnetoka, which left New-York in the latter part of March last, is reported to have gone on a slave expedition to Africa. Some suspicion attached to her before her departure, but not sufficient to cause a close watch to be put upon her movements. She cleared for St. Thomas and a market. A house in Havana purchased the Minnetoka last January from CANTRIL & Co. of this City, her former owners. The vessel formerly was employed in the West India trade. She is a stout, square-built bark of 284 tons, and was built in 1852. She was sold to her present owners for $13,000. The names of these owners are not given.

ACCESSORY TRANSIT.—A President and six Directors, to manage the affairs of the Accessory Transit Company, were elected yesterday by the Stockholders of the Company. The following were elected:

President—JAMES M. CROSS.

Directors—Daniel B. Allen, John P. Yelverton, Richard Varick, Peleg Hall, Frank Work, Chauncey St. John.

The announcement of a programme for future movements is deferred till "General WALKER is killed off"—at least so it was stated at the office subsequent to the election.

THE FATAL FIRE-ENGINE ACCIDENT.—An Inquest was held yesterday, by Coroner CONNERY, at the house of Engine No. 38, in Ann-street, upon the body of the young man RICHARD H. HUNTINGTON, who was accidentally killed on Monday night, while proceeding to a fire, by being run over by Engine No. 38, to which he was attached. The facts elicited did not vary from the statement as published in yesterday's TIMES. The verdict rendered by the Jury was: "That the said RICHARD H. HUNTINGTON came to his death by being rolled over by Engine No. 38, on Sunday evening, May 3, 1857, at or near the corner of Broadway and Chambers-street, receiving injuries of such a severe character, in the cervical vertebræ, as to cause instantaneous death."

Mr. HUNTINGTON became a member of No. 38 Company about four months ago, and since that time has "bunked" in the engine house. He was a young man, much liked by his companions. His people reside in Utica, to which place his remains were sent yesterday by railroad. A large number of firemen and friends of the deceased accompanied the body to the depôt, and a hearse from No. 38 Company accompanied it to its destination.

☞ DANIEL DENTON, a member of Hook and Ladder Company No. 15, died very suddenly on Saturday evening, at 7 o'clock. The funeral service took place at the house of the Company, in Franklin street. Rev. Mr. WESTON, of Trinity Church, delivered a very affecting address. The remains were forwarded to Elmira, Monday afternoon.

Fires.

IN THIRTEENTH-STREET.—A fire broke out about 3 o'clock yesterday morning, in the machine shop of HOSE & DELAMATER, at the foot of Thirteenth-street, North River. The flames spread very rapidly, and the building—a wooden one—was with all its contents entirely destroyed. The loss is estimated at $7,000. The building is insured for $4,000, in the Columbia [illegible] and the stock for $2,500, in the Manhattan [illegible] Fire, Hamilton, Rockaway and Hudson River, Relief, Merchants' and Rutgers Companies.

POLICE INTELLIGENCE.

THE LATE FATAL AFFRAY AT THE FULTON FERRY—VERDICT OF THE CORONER'S JURY.

The inquest upon the body of the man John Sweeney, the Corporation carman, who died at his residence, No. 84 Frankfort-street, on Saturday last, from injuries received the previous Wednesday night, at the Fulton Ferry, was resumed and finished yesterday, before Coroner PERRY. Several witnesses were examined.

John McCormack, one of the deck hands of the Ferry Company, being sworn, said: Deceased came on board our boat at eleven o'clock Wednesday night, as we were about coming over from Brooklyn; he appeared to be pretty drunk; he staggered; as he was going into the ladies' cabin, I stopped him and told him he was too drunk to go in there; I did not use any force to prevent him going in; I only laid my hand upon him; when we reached the York side, and had the boat secured, he called me from the bridge and said he wanted to speak with me; I asked him what he wanted; he answered: "You insulted me;" he continued to talk in this way; as we came up to the gate I took and put him outside; he then went away; about 12 o'clock he came back to the boat; I was in the ladies' cabin; he came in the cabin; says I, "Hello, neighbor, are you back again?" says he, "You insulted me;" I told him to come outside, as I wanted to speak with him; when he came outside, and when we were on the deck, we stood facing each other, when a young man with him said, "Go in, John;" with that Sweeney struck at me; the second time he struck at me he knocked off my hat; as I stooped to pick it up, several got at me and beat me; I soon got away and ran away to the gate; Sweeney followed me to the gate and got hold of me, and I pulled away from him and ran; I tried to go into the boat when I saw Sweeney fall to the ground; there was fighting going on all the time between the other parties.

William Blaker, residing at No. 89 Water-street, testified: About 12 o'clock last Wednesday night, as I was going past the Fulton Ferry, I saw some men come out of the Ferry-gate striking at one another; one man was struck down; I do not know who the man was who struck the deceased; he appeared to be a boat-hand; he said to deceased, "You are the man who attacked the man on the boat," and then struck him; deceased fell to the ground; the man who struck the blow picked deceased up, and set him against the ferry gate; there was a great noise outside of the gate at the time.

The Coroner briefly addressed the Jury, recapitulating the evidence submitted. The Jury after a short consultation returned and reported the following verdict:

"That the said John Sweeney came to his death by injuries from a blow inflicted by one of the boatmen of the Fulton ferry-boat Nassau, April 29, 1857, and that said boatman was acting in self defence."

THE NEW EXCISE LAW.—Drunkards are now disposed of in accordance with the provisions of the new Excise law, which provides that persons found intoxicated in the streets shall be arrested and locked up until sober, when they shall be examined as to where they obtained their liquor, fined $10 and imprisoned ten days unless the fine is paid. This provision, it will be seen, is essentially the same as that embraced in the late prohibitory law.

ARREST OF A FUGITIVE.—A young and genteel-looking man, giving his name as Willis, with more or less aliases, was captured on Monday evening by an officer from Philadelphia, where he stands charged with a hotel robbery. The fellow is also charged with the perpetration of a burglary in Troy, where a reward of $200 was offered for his capture. The police have been looking after him for some time. He was detained in the Fourth Ward Station-house all night, and was yesterday sent back to Philadelphia.

THE BLOODLESS REVOLUTION,

As the journals call the present attitude of our City authorities towards certain legislative enactments, excites the popular attention; but quite as great a public sensation is being created by that exquisite NOVELTY in the way of PARLOR ENTERTAINMENTS, just introduced into our midst by the "London Stereoscopic Company." It has become the fashionable thing of the day. Lovers take it to their sweethearts as a gift. Parents present it to their delighted families. These wonderful articles are very beautiful and very inexpensive. The London agent has them at HALL'S Music Store, corner Broadway and Park-place.

REV. H. W. BEECHER'S CHURCH—MR. BEECHER ON THE THEATRE.—At the morning service in Rev. HENRY WARD BEECHER'S church last Sabbath, fifty-three persons were admitted to the church on profession of faith, and twenty three on letters from other churches. Of these, eight had been baptised by immersion on the Wednesday evening previous, the Baptist Church in Pierpont-street having tendered the use of its house for the purpose, while some fifteen were baptised by sprinkling on Sabbath morning. At the evening service Mr. BEECHER preached on the doctrine of Christian Liberty, with an eye to the Christian's liberty to enjoy the drama. While heartily sympathizing with Dr. BELLOWS on his general doctrine of amusement, he considered the Doctor's application of his argument to the Theatre as fallacious. "When you raise oaks out of toadstools," said he, "you may get good out of that Bowery example room"—the Theatre.

MORNING PRAYER MEETING.—On Saturday last, the series of morning prayer meetings which has been held in connection with the Plymouth Church, was brought to a close. Its place, however, is to be filled by a Union Prayer Meeting of several of the churches on the Heights, to be held in the lecture room of Rev. Mr. HOGARTH'S church, in Henry-street commencing at 8 A. M., and continuing half an hour. A similar meeting has been held in Boston daily for five or six years, at the lecture room of the old South.

THE BROOKLYN GAS COMPANY TRIUMPHANT.—The Brooklyn Board of Aldermen held a regular meeting last evening, and the first business before it was the consideration of the Report of the Gas Committee, in favor of entering into contract with the Brooklyn Consolidated Gas-Light Company, to supply Brooklyn with gas at about half the price charged by the old Company. Three hours' time was consumed in discussing the matter, when Alderman DEL VECCHIO of the Sixth Ward offered the following amendment:

Resolved, That in the opinion this Common Council it is not expedient to make the contract with the Brooklyn Consolidated Gas-Light Company, as proposed by the Gas Committee.

This was adopted by the following vote:

Ayes—Aldermen Cashow, Russell, O'Neil, Doherty, Del Vecchio, Hudson, Reeve, Bogert, Oliver, Fiennis, Walsh, Bannon, M'Mahon, Colahan, Preston, Ralphs, Weller, Schalk—18. Nays—Aldermen M'Namee, Lowber, Pierson, Fowler, Dorlan, Clarke, Van Brunt, Spader, Vail, Worlan, Snyder, Bliss, Palmer, Kalbfleisch, Soydam.

ARREST OF A PICKPOCKET.—As a lady was passing through Fulton street, Brooklyn, last evening, when near Nassau-street, a little colored boy snatched a porte monnaie from her hand, and started off at the top of his speed. The alarm was given, and after a sharp pursuit the thief was captured, and deposited in the cells of the First District station.

CHEAP.—Two East Brooklyn Germans were on Saturday fined $25 each for preparing diseased meat for sale. They paid the fine and were discharged.

ANOTHER OUTRAGE.—WM. H. LYONS, alias "Honey" Lyons, has been arrested in the Eastern District of Brooklyn, for committing a brutal outrage on the person of ELLEN CLINK, whom he caught one evening while out on an errand.

☞ The Phœnix Engine Co. of New-Haven will visit Brooklyn on the 14th inst., and while here will be the guests of Engine Co. No. 12.

☞ An adjourned meeting of the Liquor Dealers' Association was held yesterday in People's Hall, Brooklyn. It was strictly a business meeting, and after admitting a number of members a motion to adjourn to Thursday next was carried.

NEW-JERSEY.

ORGANIZATION OF THE NEW COMMON COUNCIL.—The new Board of Aldermen of Jersey City was organized last evening. The members of the old Board met—Alderman DAVENPORT, President, in the Chair. Having approved of the minutes of the last regular and special meeting, the Board adjourned sine die.

The members of the new Board then took their seats. Those holding over are as follows:

First Ward—George S. Gardner.
Second Ward—Joseph G Edge and Hugh McComb.
Fourth Ward—T. E. Tilden and J. V. Thurston.

The new members are as follows:

First Ward—D. S. Sinclair, R. B. Kashow and Wm. Voorhies.
Second Ward—M. Irwin, (reelected,) A. A. Hardenbergh.
Third Ward—C. M. Hawkins, M. L. Blum, J. M. Brown and R. K. Cornelison.
Fourth Ward—M. S. Wickward and Wm. Roosevelt.

Alderman ERWIN was chosen temporary Chairman. The Board proceeded to organize by appointing the following officers:

President—HELANOTHON S. WICKWARE.
Clerk—GEORGE W. CASSIDY.
City Marshal—NATHANIEL ELLIS.

The rules of the old Board were adopted.

Aldermen Hardenberg, Tilden and Sinclair were appointed a Committee to inform the Mayor that the Board was organized, and ready to hear any communication which he had to offer.

The President, upon taking the Chair, proceeded to address the Board at some length and in an appropriate manner.

The Council then took a recess for fifteen minutes, at the expiration of which time the Committee returned, and the message of Mayor WESCOTT was received and read by the Clerk. Mayor WESCOTT paid a handsome compliment to his predecessor, Hon. DAVIN S. MANYERS. He believed that the collection of the finances now done by a Collector of Taxes, a Collector of Arrears of Taxes, and a Collector of Assessments, should be done by one officer, and under the direction of the Comptroller. He called attention to the advantage of using the Belgian pavement in the streets of Jersey City. The material for such pavement is abundant and near at hand. An increase of the police force he believed to be demanded by considerations of public security. He hoped that a satisfactory arrangement would be made during the present year with the Gas Company for lighting the streets with gas. He favored the restraint and regulation of the liquor traffic by a license system which will check the free sale of spirituous liquors. These are the principal points in the message. It was a well prepared document. When its reading was over the Board adjourned to meet this evening.

☞ The Hudson County Courts commence this morning.

MONDAY, May 4—P. M.

The Official Averages of the Banks in the City of New-York for the week ending Saturday last, May 2, the particulars of which are advertised by each bank separately on another page of this paper, present the following changes from the previous weekly statement of April 25:

Increase in Loans	$1,017,335
Increase in Specie	182,050
Increase in Circulation	269,778
Increase in Undrawn Deposits	990,302

The statement this week was strongly influenced by the preparations made for the 4th of the month, this day, when the payments at Bank and for rents were unusually heavy. The Discounts were evidently enlarged, and the Deposits also influenced, by these preparations. Even the Circulation is run up by the out-door disbursements on quarter day between landlord and tenant. The Specie line is about equal to the previous estimate founded on the various income and export movements of the week. The clearances between the Banks were heavy, averaging $31,080,796 ₰ day. Including these and the Sub-Treasury statement, the following is the general

COMPARATIVE RECAPITULATION.

The Stock Market was dull in the forenoon, and prices about ½ ₰ cent. down on most of the Railroads as compared with the closing of Saturday. This feeling encouraged the Bears to offer about 3,000 Shares New-York and Erie, at the Second Board, down to 42 ₰ cent., sellers' option, to deliver in 30 days. The lot was immediately taken, and the cash price consequently advanced to 42⅝@¾@⅞ ₰ cent.; the market leaving off firm on this Stock and otherwise remaining steady.

The discount Brokers are doing a fair amount of business at 8@9 ₰ cent on prime paper, and the leading Stock brokers are, with few exceptions, readily supplied with money at call, at 7 ₰ cent. Some of the Foreign Banking houses, as usual before steamer day, were not lenders. The terms for sterling bills for the Boston steamer may be quoted an eighth easier on the large transactions, though the whole range is still called 109¾@109⅞. Francs 5.18¾@5.17½. The Boston mail will close early to-morrow, the official announcement says 11 A. M. The California mail also closes to-morrow. There is about $475,000 in bullion put up to go by express for shipment by the America. Other shippers, who would have remitted in this way, will avail of the new steamship Vanderbilt, sailing from this port to-morrow, for Havre. From $300,000 to $400,000 is spoken for this opportunity. The Sub-Treasury disbursed $118,344 over the receipts, to-day, reducing the balance to $14,295,768.

The proposition before the Board of Brokers, to limit time contracts within sixty days, instead of twelve months, came up on the formal vote this forenoon, and failed, for want of a two-thirds majority. The count was: Yeas, 59; nays, 39—the affirmative side lacking 7 votes of the required majority to change the standing rules. The result is much regretted by most of the regular Commission Brokers—the more so as the vote turned out closer than they had hoped for, from the opposition evinced at the close of last week, and might have been carried, on a full attendance of the old members, more than a dozen of whom were out of their seats. An effort may be made, to-morrow, to reconsider the vote, though it will require one of the 39 members who voted nay to enter the motion.

The new Fire-Insurance office established by the HUMBOLDT COMPANY, at No. 10 Wall-street, is under a wealthy and highly responsible mercantile management, with Mr. JOHN RANKIN, as President, and Mr. W. MULLIGAN, Secretary. Capital, $200,000.

The suspension of interest by the City of Albany on the bonds issued some years since to the Northern Railroad, creates much mortification as well as surprise. This mode of testing the constitutionality of the issue is not only very questionable, in good faith, but in this particular instance is anything but graceful. The loan to the Northern Railroad was at one time an individual, or private affair. The Road, however, having conferred the only good of which the line is capable upon the City, the Councils, by formal vote, assumed the burden, and authorized the issue of bonds now in dispute. The only semblance of apology for stopping the interest is the recent Legislative authority to force upon the tax-payers a loan of a million of dollars to the Albany and Susquehanna Railroad. But this did not avail as a rational plea before the Court, on an application for an injunction against the Northern Road interest. The injunction was refused, and now the Councils, from which the Bonds originally issued, step forward, and instruct their Chamberlain not to pay until the Rochester City case, before the Court of Appeals, is finally determined; without following the example of Rochester City, which deemed it unnecessary to postpone the interest, in order to test the legality of the principal. Indeed, that City has declared that, come what may, the interest and principal shall both be satisfied.

The act of the Legislature interferring with Bank Note redemption was not signed by the Governor until ten days after the adjournment of that body. This fact has raised a question as to the meaning of the Constitution on the subject of the Executive prerogative in hoarding up bills after the adjournment, and then signing them. Until recently it has been held that bills could not be signed after the adjournment of the Legislature, and the Governor used to attend at the Capitol, as the President does now, on the last night or the session to sign all bills that might be passed during the last hours of the Legislature. Governor SEYMOUR, we believe, was the first to act upon a different theory. The language of the Constitution,—after prescribing that if the Governor approve the bill he shall sign it; but if not, he shall return it with his objections,—is:

"If any bill shall not be returned by the Governor within ten days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall be a law, in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the Legislature shall, by their adjournment, prevent its return, in which case it shall not be a law."

Governor SEYMOUR held that this clause permitted him to sign bills at any time within ten days after they were presented to him;—and that the adjournment of the Legislature only prevented the bill from becoming a law if not signed within the time specified. This construction has been adopted and acted on by all his successors and thus far, so far as we are aware, without being contested or disputed in any instance. If Governor KING signed this bill within ten days after it was presented to him, we presume it will be held valid;—if the ten days had elapsed before it was signed, its validity must have ended also.

The New-Jersey Central R. R.'s Co.'s receipts, expenses and net earnings in each of the last two years, ending with April 1, were as follows:

THE BURDELL MURDER.

TRIAL OF MRS. CUNNINGHAM.

The District-Attorney's Opening for the Prosecution.

Testimony of Dr. Francis, Dr. Mayne, Hannah Conlan, Mrs. Stansbury, J. J. Burchell, and Mary Donahue.

SECOND DAY—TUESDAY, May 5.

COURT OF OYER AND TERMINER.

Before Judge Daly.

On the opening of the Court this morning, the [illegible] in the case of the People vs. Mrs Cunningham, charged with the murder of Dr. Burdell, appeared as on the first day with the exception of Miss Augusta Cunningham, who was not present—Mrs. Cunningham, who was a little more composed, perhaps, and wearing her veil over her face. The room, including that in which the Marine Court is usually held, was crowded even more densely than on the first day. The Jurors came into Court a few minutes before 10 o'clock, in charge of Mr. McKnight, one of the deputies, and soon after they had answered to their names the District-Attorney opened the case for the prosecution, as follows:

OPENING OF THE DISTRICT-ATTORNEY.

May it please the Court and Gentlemen of the Jury. The duty is assigned to me by the prosecution of preparing, in the usual way, your minds to receive the evidence which the prosecution, under the rules of law, will offer in support of the indictment upon which this defendant at the bar was yesterday arraigned. The prosecution proposes to prove by testimony, which it deems in its chain of progressloo, though formed of small, and to some extent delicate, links, a perfect chain of mental conviction. We propose to prove that one of your late fellow citizens, Dr. Harvey Burdell, whose dying moments were with the dying moments of the first month of this year—towerde midnight on the 1st of January he ceased to be your fellow-citizen; but to you as Jurors, his memory survives. We propose to prove that this gentleman was murdered with malice aforethought; that he was murdered in his own house, surrounded by the sanctity of his own home,—that the deed was premeditated; that it was a deed which shows upon its very impress the marks of deadly hate, revenge for some injury mistoned for, and mortal consciousness. We shall prove by the evidence that some one in the house did the deed; that there was a total exclusion of every other person in the world; that among the inmates of that house was one, who greater than any other in the world, had a motive with malice aforethought to perpetrate and accomplish that horrible deed; that that person was a woman; that that woman was this defendant; and that clustering round all these circumstances is the irresistible mental conviction, that that deed was the deed of a woman,—a deed to a great extent inartificial,—a deed planned and contemplated from a different stand point from which a man of the world contemplates crime,—bold, daring, desperate, but perpetrated to a great extent with that ignorance of human nature, which compared with a man of the world, women, at all times in the history of life, have possessed, and at all times in her own history claims. You will observe that there is a distribution here of the persons, the deed and the murderer, and the circumstances clustering round them both. You will confine your attention to two parts of this case—that part which relates to the persons, that last part which relates to the circumstances. And who were the persons? A citizen against whom no reproach had been raised; a citizen who was said to have enemies—but, so far as the prosecution have been able to extend their investigation, who had no enemy whom you can call an enemy but this woman. It surely needs no words of mine to recall to each of you the sensations and the convictions which filled your breasts when, in the morning at your breakfast table you read the details of this horrible deed. It needs no feeble words of mine to bring before you the feeling which, as fellow citizens of each other, and of the great population distributed round you, you had regarding the effect of such a crime upon the world at large if it were undiscovered and unavenged, in the language of the law, by the speedy and retributive arm of justice. Dr. BURDELL is dead, and the cold word of charity may say, "Let his memory be forgotten." But she who was his deadly enemy in life lives; and as yesterday upon that stand as witnesses, regarding your own purity, your own integrity, and your own unconscious bias and prejudice towards her, she challenged you through her counsel, in the language of the law, before you were jurors, so today, as she sits there a veiled picture of sorrow, as the world would say, she challenges you, as jurors, by her looks demanding a sympathy which belongs not to a murderess, but a woman; and day by day as you shall sit here in the discharge of your solemn public duty, she will continue to challenge your sympathy, and eloquence and ingenuity will come to her aid, and at every step of this testimony, the thought will be forced upon your minds that you are trying a woman. We appreciate fully the difficulty which the prosecution labors under from the outset, but in the discharge of that duty we shall mince no words with you. Crime has no sex! Crime has no peculiar attribute of its own, that differs when it strikes in the form of a man or of a woman. Oh, it is no wonder that all the holy associations that cluster round the name of woman should force themselves into the breast when a case of this kind comes before the public eye. When we remember the mother of our prayers, the sister of our adoration,—when we remember the wife of our life until death,—when we remember the children who are to be the future women of the world, we ask, can it ever be that those upon whom God Almighty has placed his own seal of purity should ever live to become criminal—to be the midnight assassin and the murderer, and cherish hate, revenge and jealousy? But yet, when we open the page of history, we perceive that crime knows no sex. In Roman history we read of her who, having murdered her husband—the Servia of Kingly Rome—drove her chariot over the dead body of her father, and in the time of Imperial Rome of Messilina, whose name is as odious and abhorrent in profane history, as that of Jezebel in Sacred Writ. Still, looking to the time of imperial Rome, we remark Fuvia, who, when the head of Cicero was brought to her, she unveiled it, spat upon it, and, drawing from her bosom the deadly bodkin, thrust it again and again through the tongue of that gaspicy corpse. The same great dramatist who spoke to you of the wife of William Tell, narrates how Agnes, Queen of Hungary, bathed her feet in the blood of sixty-three knights, exclaiming, as she did, "it seems as if I were wading in May-dew;" and the blessed Evangelist, who speaks of her who was last at the cross and first at the grave, tells you in the same Gospel of she who bore upon a charger the head of the deadly enemy of her family—the forerunner of the Saviour of the world.

"I was a women once,
A thing to nourish children at my breaste,
And hear their angel's whisper in my dreame;
But now with sorer travail, deeds of rage
And ghastly horrore take their birth from air."

Remember the relationship that existed between the gentle and loving Cordelia, and the infamous Regan and Goneril. Throughout the life of Dr. Burdell the prisoner pursued him with a fiendish hate, jealousy and revenge until the knife held by this woman found a repose in his heart. The prosecution labors under this disability—sympathy.

Now, gentlemen, I will proceed with a brief history of this case. She had known him three years, and she says that she was the mother of a child who never saw the light. She was his mistress, though she claims to be his wife; and if I shall show to you by testimony that she deserves, from her own history, from her own words, no sympathy, and no respect, then, to that extent, I have done my duty. She was jealous of him, as the evidence will show, and she haunted and hunted him, and beset him down and up stairs,—in his privacy and his publicity. She was, in this world, that picture of remorse to the mind,—if remorse he could have in thinking of his acquaintance with her—which, if he died the death of an unbeliever, just so surely would come to him in the next. The domestics of the house will go upon the stand. We will take the roof off that dwelling, and allow you to gaze into that depth of moral degradation which in that family clustered round that woman. The domestics will show that she hunted and haunted him. The Police officers whom we shall bring before you will prove that they have entered his residence at his bidding, to still the quarrels, the hate and revenge, that clustered round her and fastened themselves upon him. They have seen this woman strike him, and one of them who came in later heard her assert that she was his wife by every tie upon earth. Even their quarrels were forced upon the public, through the keen eyes of the policemen who were called in. And there was litigation between them. She sued him, claiming that there had been a breach of promise of marriage—claiming that there had been slander or seduction. Those suits were dated in October last—the quarrels, as you will see as we progress in the chain of events, coming down to the very night of the fatal occurrence, when she followed him out of the door, with a deadly threat upon her lips, which we shall presently show to you. Those suits were settled and withdrawn, and most extraordinary papers, at her bidding, were drawn up and signed by him, this hunted, haunted man, by this fiend in woman's shape—papers which you self-respect would shrink from making, were you not possessed of the consciousness that she who bid you sign them was your mortal enemy, even to hatred and diabolical revenge, and unless upon your soul was the deadly presentiment of the catastrophe that came to him—a presentiment which he himself had expressed many a time in his own house and in public. They went to the house of an intimate friend, (Dr Thompson,) and forced their quarrels upon him, one following him into the very house, as the Doctor will tell you. Again, with the sly cunning of her sex, she took the domestics into a room next to the one occupied by him during the last Summer, bidding them listen to the conversation that occurred between Dr. Burdell and herself. Her spies as she thought! But not so. They were the spies of justice, and they will be here to tell what passed between her and that dead man. They will be here to narrate to you words so loathsome and disgusting that even they—the domestics—shrank in horror, and returned back to the kitchen to remember well, for future use, what they had heard. And there came to the house one day he who sits in court—a man whom neither you nor I would quarrel with. The greedy and lascivious eyes of this woman were fastened upon him, and he became, as the history of this case will disclose, a counterpart of him who had been her paramour on the story below. She did love him; she did love this man Eckel, and she, the mother of daughters who were themselves candidates for marriage, fastened her greedy, lustful eyes upon him. But I have nothing now to say of him. Let him be taken care of hereafter. But we must not forget this in the case, as step by step there is progression: that whether she was the wife of the murdered man, or his former mistress, in either event she was alike guilty of the grossest infidelity in her conduct to him who occupied the adjoining apartment to herself. Burdell had made up his mind that life to him was useless so long as he had this shadow at his side. He had made up his mind to let that house of which she was the tenant, and he the landlord, to another person, and she heard of it. She saw what was going on, and, gentlemen, upon the very night before the murder the very respectable lady who was to have become the tenant of that house from the year commencing last Friday went through the house, when Mrs. Cunningham saw her, and when she had left interrogated Hannah the cook: "What was that woman doing here?" "Why, Madam, looking at the house." "Is she going to take this house?" "Yes, they have been looking all around, and in the kitchen." "Is Dr. Burdell going to let this house to her?" "Yes, it looks so." And then fell from her lips, which would not have escaped a man of the world, the expression, "By to-morrow night he shall be a corpse," or "Be ore to-morrow night he may be a corpse." On that very morning to the boy who had swept out the room, she said that the Doctor was a passionate man, and might not live another day. This occurred on the Friday, and on the same night the deed was done. The Doctor was a regular man. His outgoings and incomings were regular. She had watched and she knew them. There was a highly honorable man who had no part or parcel in that household who, lived upon the third story, (Daniel Ullmann,) and who occupied with his professional and public career, had little knowledge of the infamy that clustered round it, and going to him upon this very Friday as he was going out, making an excuse as to the fire in his room, she gleaned from him knowledge as to when he would return,—that he was going to be absent all the evening and it would be midnight before he came home. In the hearing of Dr. Thompson she asked Burdell when he would return. Her own household she could take care of. There was her paramour, whose interests were subservient to hers, there were her daughters, and there was a boy young in years, but at the same time as artful a child as ever you placed your eyes on, and there was the cook who slept far away in the attic, away from all sounds. Why, gentlemen, in the whole annals of crime, wherever you place your finger upon a bloody and malicious murder, you will never find an opportunity so carefully provided for as that contrived by this woman upon this night, to murder this her enemy—the upper lodger out all the evening, the exact time from the lips of the murdered man when he would return, her family taken care of, and the cook, the only domestic, sent to bed. "Oh," said this lying woman upon the stand—and the discrepancy is enormous, it is wonderful, it is convincing, the very hand of Providence is in that little incident—"Oh," said that lying woman upon the stand, "I rang the bell for the cook to come into the parlor, she came up, received her orders for the next day, and I dismissed her to bed." Now, gentlemen, when the cook comes upon the stand she will tell you, that the prisoner came down into the kitchen with her paramour, a thing she had seldom done before, and ordered her to bed, although she was the only servant in the house, and consequently had double duty to perform. Mrs. Cunningham knew at once the effect of that little incident. If she had admitted that she went down stairs to call the cook, it would be convincing against her. She had once stolen Dr. Burdell's safe key, and once his pistol. She had a dagger of her own, and everything was ready for his coming. I shall show you that she was continually haunting and hunting him Dr. Cox will prove that she listened to the conversation that he had with deceased on Friday, as also Dr. Blatchell. We shall show to you that the situation of that house utterly excludes the idea of intrusion or interference by any outside person. We shall show that when the boy came there in the morning the basement door was locked, as well as the back door. We shall prove that the street door had a lock of peculiar construction; that Dr. Burdell had one key, found on his body when dead, and Mrs. Cunningham, Mr. Snodgrass, Mr. Eckel and Mr. Ullmann had each one, making the whole set, and none missing. Ingress through that front door was therefore utterly impossible. But the learned counsel may probably argue that when he came in some enemy from the outside followed at his heels up stairs, stabbed him to the heart, and then, blood-stained, rushed from the house. No, gentlemen, he came in alone. His apartments were entirely secured and locked up. She has a pass key, and she alone, to the front room, which was his bedroom. He has the key of his sitting-room in his pocket. He puts it in the lock and opens it. He goes in; a shawl was found folded upon the sofa, and cap carefully disposed of.

Now physicians will tell you that the mortal injury inflicted on that man occupied the briefest possible space of time. And wherever he was struck, this damning fact will come out—that the blow was given by a left-handed woman. And she, gentlemen, (pointing to Mrs. Cunningham,) is a left handed woman. She has been carefully watched while in prison, and that fact has been established, corroborating the domestics in the family, who swear that she is left-handed. I shall have a model here in a day or two—perhaps this afternoon,—which will give you a correct idea of the locality where this catastrophe occurred, but this I may say without it—that by the door to which he would naturally, by the instincts of self-preservation, rush—by that door in the corner, as one standing behind him struck him. The wounded animal, as hunters tell you, turns in the direction from which comes the blow. It is human instinct as well. On receiving a blow a human being turns in the direction from which it comes, and the blow that was given to Burdell was a left-handed blow—not a downward stab in the heart, but upwards, "Oh," but says my learned friend, "this was not necessarily premeditated." "It might have been justifiable or excusable homicide, or manslaughter." It would hardly be proper for me to ask the learned counsel whether that was the faintest reflection of a client's confession. I will not do it; but I will ask him in his candor and fairness as counsel before a Jury, to say where are the marks upon that murdered man's body which show anything that would excuse or justify,—anything which would show that the blows were the result of spasmodic temporary passion, which when cooling time came would bring regret, horror, and remorse? But no, gentlemen, there were 15 wounds upon that body, and such a theory if it be presented cannot for an instant stand. The wounds show revenge, hatred, and malice. They show that even when the man was dead, and the life-tide flowing rapidly from his heart, and his soul gone to his last account, that again and again were the stabs inflicted into the unconscious corpse, to "make assurance doubly sure,"—to make it a thing of certainty that my enemy had gone,—the discarded paramour, this victim of jestousy, this victim of hate and revenge,—this victim who had dared to make an appointment for the next morning to set his hand to paper to bargain away her rights of property, and her house,—this victim who died in the fulfillment of bloody threats which had not yet cooled on her lips—had been safely disposed of.

Whoever did that deed was in all probability covered from head to foot with blood—blood upon the deed wall, upon the dead door, upon the dead metal, and upon the different articles of furniture—blood upon the carpet, drops that had fallen from the bloody dagger, or the clothes There was a safe which once before Mrs. Cunningham had robbed She had committed petty larceny. She had once stolen papers from that safe, which the morning after the murder had the catch a little up showing that it had been entered, for entered it could be, for the key was in his pocket as he laid upon the floor. When he was found the next morning he was carefully laid out. We shall present to you a man whose testimony has never yet been made public, who will show that there was no haste about that thing, that it was deliberately planned, and promptly and efficiently executed. There lies the dead man; the shadows of midnight surround him, and she is alone with him. I choose to make no charge as yet against the others who were in that house. She stands alone in this indictment, and alone at present we are trying her. I choose not to ask you to picture to yourselves the aid of a child, and that child a daughter. Let the circumstances give their own solution to each of your minds, and I think you will come irresistibly to the conclusion that the deed was committed by some one in the house. Who but a woman not knowing the world, cunning only to a certain extent, would ever have said that that man had committed suicide. Who but a woman would ever have laid that head so near to the door that it was with great difficulty that it could be opened without touching it. The learned counsel then alluded to the suspicious circumstances of a fire having been kindled in the top room, which was a very unusual circumstance, and argued that the murderer there burned his blood-stained clothes. This point would be abundantly established by testimony. All night long the body laid on the floor with the gas light burning. The bookcase, the next morning, was found open, the key upon the outside of the door. His watch was stopped at half-past six, showing that the deed had been committed almost at the moment that he entered the room, as he had no time to wind it up previous to retiring.

What, continued the learned gentleman, is the instinct of a man and of a woman, not to say a wife, but even a friend, when informed of the occurrence. Word is brought to her by the affrighted neighbors, that "Dr. Burdell is dead." "Is he dead?" They tell her so. Naturally she would do one of two things—either fainting or unconscious at the deadly news, or rushing to see if it be true. But she was ready and did act her part of simulation, which witnesses will graphically describe to you. Dr. Mayne who lives opposite, came in and said to her "Dr. Burdell is dead." Even then she had not gone down stairs, to render, if wife she was, that duty she had sworn to render. "I am so glad to hear that, for I thought he was murdered;" and then again, almost at the same instant: "I have a dreadful secret to tell you," and taking out a marriage certificate, says, "My name is Emma Augusta Burdell; I was married to the Doctor, and here is my certificate." No going down stairs to see whether he had died by natural causes or whether he had been slain, but moving about her room, spasmodic in one corner, calm in the next, agitated in another, and tearing her hair in other places. Why, the same feelings were in her breast as on the night when the Coroner sent up to examine her, and she responded to him; "I won't come down without I have the aid of counsel." Now, why did she,—this innocent woman, require the assistance of counsel? If it was not her first duty to render respect to this dead man, it was doubly her duty to protect the character of her house and her children, and to rush down to give her testimony, for at that time no suspicions were against her. She was at liberty in her own house. Nay more, the son-in-law of the Coroner himself was her counsel during the Sunday, but she saw that abler advocates were necessary, and my learned friends came to her aid, and advised her to close her lips thereafter. The District-Attorney alluded to the fact, which he would substantiate by proof that there was a mark discovered on the neck of Mrs. Cunningham corresponding with that found on the neck of the deceased, which he contended proved that they had grappled together. He then concluded his remarks by a brief recapitulation of the points that he had submitted to the Jury tending as he believed conclusively to fasten the guilt upon the accused. The prominent point in the case was the motive of Mrs. Cunningham to commit the murder, and he felt convinced that when the evidence for the defence had been placed before them in spite of all the ingenuity of the counsel for the prisoner—whether her name were Emma Augusta Cunningham, or Emma Augusta Burdell, whether mistress or wife, they would be compelled to find her guilty of the murder of the Doctor.

TESTIMONY OF DR. J. W. FRANCIS.

The first witness examined for the prosecution was Dr. J. W. Francis. His evidence, reduced to a statement in regular order, was to this effect: I was born (he said) in the City of New-York, and am 67 years of age; I have been in the practice of physic forty-seven years, and have also been engaged, during a considerable portion of that time, as a professor of medical jurisprudence in the college; I have been residing in Bond-street, near Broadway, for some twenty years; on the morning of Saturday, the 31st of January, I think, I was called into the house No. 31 Bond-street, at ten o'clock, or ten minutes past ten o'clock; I accompanied the messenger, whom I did not know, to that house, passed through the front door, ascended the first and second flights of stairs into the second story back room, which was the dentistry office of Dr. Bordell; as I was ascending the stairs I asked if the person was very ill; the messenger told me he was dead, and they wanted to know the cause of his death; there was a police officer at the door, and he let me in; the messenger stood partially outside as I entered the room, which I did carelessly; I stepped into blood; there was a large quantity of clotted blood on the floor; casting a glance downwards I saw a large, stout, strong, muscular body, seemingly in great health, lying dead on the floor; a gentleman in the room—I don't know who he was—told me he had turned the body over, but had let it lie in the same place in which he first saw it; the face was now upward; the clothing of the body seemed to be very tenaciously wrapped around it, and upon feeling it I found it a mass of soaked linen and clothing super-saturated with blood; between the body and the wall was a large mass of clots of blood, which might have been forming for some four or five or six hours and some of which might have weighed half a pound, and some a pound and a half; the blood had coagulated and laid there; one of the men asked me to move round cautiously, for there was a good deal of blood about there; I cast a glance at the countenance of the corpse; I was not familiar with Dr. Burdell, but had seen him one hundred times probably; the Coroner came up to me and told me to wait a few moments, as Dr. McKnight, his assistant was in the next room and would be ready in a few moments, having a case with some instruments or probes, to make a thorough examination of the body; in a few moments Dr. McKnight entered; we approached the body, took a look at the countenance, and found it to be a surcharged, plethoric, full distended face, with the eyes protrusive, with the mouth firmly drawn together, and with the tongue protruded between the teeth; it looked at that moment as though the man had died of a convulsion; in examining farther, I perceived a line sufficiently distinct passing round the front part of the neck; but, inasmuch as the body was of a full habit, and the mark of the application of a ligature could be there but a short time, it would naturally be a little evanescent; after a while the body would react and absorption would set in, so that the mark would not be so distinct; but still there was a strong mark which others saw as well as myself, though no ligature could be seen; I immediately thought of that popular idea of garrotting, but said nothing particular about it; Dr. McKnight being now ready with his instruments, we turned the face of the corpse a little about towards the right side, and I observed under the angle of the ear and jaw, on the left side, a wound; on being probed it was found to extend nearly the whole length through the neck; it allowed the probe being extended so far that we put it down to six or seven inches; on examination we discovered that it had divided the carotid artery and the great vessels of the neck. We found on the cheek—the malar bone—on the left side, a wound that went down and inward into the face. On the one side there was one distinctly marked. On the left side there was an abrasion. Lower down on the right side, near the clavicle, was a wound which extended directly into the thorax some six or seven inches, and running into the internal portion of the chest. On the right arm was a transverse wound, pretty low down, some two inches or so below. On the left arm, near what is called the deltoid muscle, where the swell is, there was a wound that went down four or five inches. There was another wound on the same arm, lower down, that went in two or three inches. The clothes being removed from the body, and the abdominal region and trunk all exposed, it was immediately apparent how many additional wounds had been received. There was one on the left side, between the fourth and fifth ribs, which extended some six or seven inches, perhaps seven and a half; about two inches lower down there was another wound that ran upward in the region of the heart, and which, according to an examination subsequently made by others, proved to be in the auricle of the heart; there were two or three wounds in the abdomen, near the region of the stomach, in the abdominal viscera; that extended inwards I should say some four or five inches; there was another wound near what is called the margin of the hip, that ran inwardly and outwardly on the left side; there were altogether fifteen wounds; but there is one other wound yet to be mentioned of great importance, and that was a wound under the left axillary or arm-pit, which extended in many inches, some six or seven; the course of that wound in the arm was directly inward and down towards the thorax; on examining the body we did not see anything particularly worthy of remark more than what I have mentioned to you; the mark of the ligature about the neck was rather heavy; I suppose it was about a third of an inch broad, or a little more perhaps; some parts of it appeared to be more distinct than others; we did not observe any marks on the back part of the head; it appeared a little more distinct on one side, and seemed as though the head had been drawn back; many of these wounds might, in their noture, have been fatal; I should suppose the wound under the arm was aimed at a vital part; when that wound was received undoubtedly the arm must have been raised; the wound was rather downward; the wound about the fourth and fifth ribs ran upward; the wound two inches or so below that ran forward so that the cavity of the heart and apex of the heart were reached by two different processes; three of those wounds in the abdomen in front looked like a kind of heter-skeiter driving without any especial object; it is impossible to decide whether the wound in the carotid artery or that in the heart was given first; if the wound had been first made in the heart, a spout of blood would have followed the second wound, which was in the carotid artery. After the wound in the artery death would ensue in perhaps some two or three or four or five minutes; as to the wound in the heart I could not say how soon death would ensue from it; I have known a person to travel about the house with a wound in the heart and then sit down and die; it depends somewhat on what part of the heart is wounded; with a wound in the apex of the heart, which is solid, a person might live a long time; if in the substance of the heart he might die almost immediately; the auricle of the heart and the apex of the heart were both wounded in this case; the wounds all seemed to be inflicted by something like a similar instrument, an instrument of about two-thirds of an inch or a little more in breadth, and we thought sharp-pointed, and some eight or nine inches in length; the wound would naturally enlarge a little after being cut; the wounds most assuredly produced death; there was no apoplexy in the case nor anything of the kind.

Cross examined—Q.—Can you recollect the precise hour in the morning when you arrived at the house No. 31 Bond street? A.—My own opinion was that it was just about fifteen minutes after 10 o'clock; I have said at ten.

Q.—You came immediately on being summoned? A.—Yes, Sir; with the messenger who came.

Q.—Are you able to say who that messenger was? A.—That I cannot tell.

Q.—Was it a man or boy? A.—A man; decidedly a young man.

Q.—Not a police officer? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—When you got there you found there was a police officer and Coroner there? A.—No, the Coroner was not there; but I was a few moments in the room when the Coroner came in.

Q.—The Coroner was not in the room then? A.—Not at the first moment I entered.

Q.—Do you know who the police officer was? A.—That I could never find out.

Q.—Was the police officer who was in the room the one who told you that the body had been turned over? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—What kind of clothing did the deceased have on his neck? A.—I think he must have had a black cravat, and it was hanging off loose.

Q.—He had, then, a black neck-handkerchief as distinguished from a stock? A.—I cannot swear positively as to that, but I think so; his clothes were all cut open.

Q.—Were his clothes cut open after you arrived? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Are you able to fix the precise place on the neck where the red spot was visible? I wish you to fix it anatomically and name the place. A.—It went across Adam's apple, and was rather tighter on each side than in the middle.

Q.—Do you know what the length of his neck was from the points where this spot became visible on one side, to the point where it became invisible upon the other—how many inches? A.—It struck me as being a little over six inches; it was a very large neck, and under the circumstances it was a little distended.

Q.—There was more of this mark visible on one side than the other? A.—It seemed to be a little lighter on one side.

Q.—When death has been occasioned by strangulation, what is the effect upon the brain—can it be determined? A.—There have been a great many cases determined. There is generally a larger quantity of blood in the vessels covering the membranes of the brain than in the ventricles.

Q.—Would dissection determine exactly. A.—It would confirm death by strangulation.

Q.—Would you know when you made the examination? A.—I examined nothing but the external wounds.

Q.—In what particular direction did this wound enter on the left side of the neck? A.—It was below what is called the mastoid lump, directly cutting the carotid vessels; the carotid arteries and the jugular veins were all cut.

Q.—Did you notice whether round the mastoid lump was cut? A.—I was pretty well satisfied that it was not reached.

Q.—You had no dissection? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Is it possible to tell accurately the direction of a wound without a dissection? A.—A dissection is rather a better help.

Q.—As a professor of medical jurisprudence, I ask you, if in the case of death by violence and wounds, if a dissection of these wounds is not absolutely necessary to the purposes of justice? A.—To give a mathematical, precise account it would be necessary, undoubtedly, to have a dissection, still you might go on at work, using a microscope and fill up a quarto volume with the minute details, if you wanted to enter upon such an examination.

Q.—Will a probe tell the depth of a wound exactly? A.—Yes, Sir, if the probe is long enough.

Q.—Do not the parts of the wound close up so that the probe would not go to the bottom of it? A.—Blood might form and the probe might not ascertain the depth of the wound exactly sometimes.

Q.—From the appearance of this man you judged him to be a strong and muscular man. A.—A very firm and hardy man, strongly developed.

Q.—Will you state what the wound was in the left arm? A.—It began on the inside of the left arm; it went inward and partly upwards.

Q.—Did it go beyond the elbow? A.—Yes, Sir, somewhat; neither of the wounds went through the arm, and they were each about five inches in length.

Q.—Did they go through the muscles? A.—Yes, Sir, into the substance of the arm.

Q.—Did they go through so that a dagger would come out? A.—No, Sir, they did not go through.

Q.—Is it possible to tell whether the instrument that made these wounds was sharp on both edges? A.—I do not think it could be determined absolutely.

Q.—What was the appearance of the wounds? A.—Sharp edged and clean, and they seemed to have been made by a sharp-edged instrument on both sides.

Q.—In a dissection could you tell whether a wound was alike on each side—whether the instrument that made it had two edges or not? A.—It would show whether the instrument was sharp edged or not.

Q.—Would a dissection tell whether the wound had been caused by a carving knife or a dagger? A.—I think to a rational, close observer it would determine it more precisely.

Q.—Suppose the wound had been inflicted by a dagger of that character, (a common sheath dirk) is that the kind of instrument which would naturally cause those wounds? A.—I came to the conclusion that it was a good deal such an instrument; not so broad as that, but about eight inches long.

Q.—In looking upon the man, did you suppose that he looked like one who might have died of convulsion? A.—I have seen countenances like his of men who have died of convulsion, but it would be wrong to suppose that he died of convulsion; there were full evidences of strangulation in his case, wonderfully strong, a protruded tongue and distended large eyes.

Q.—This wound in the left side of the neck, I understood you to say, went through the neck? A.—It went pretty nearly through; there was no mark on the left side corresponding to the place where it would come out.

Q.—Did you notice whether the neck was dislocated? A.—I did not see any thing like it; I did not see any marks of violence upon it.

Q.—Did this wound which you saw in the clavicle in the right shoulder extend into the thorax? A.—As no examination of the thorax was made, we only inferred that it went into the cavity of the thorax without cutting any very large vessel.

Q.—Would it have required a great deal of force to have made that wound? A.—Not a great deal.

Q.—Did you make any dissection to know? A.—We did not, we only probed the wound that went into the large clavicle; the wound that might have been given with a little more violence was the wound that was upon the anterior part of the trunk, between the fourth and fifth rib, which cut the edges of the rib.

Q.—Had he a woollen coat, and a woollen vest with a lappel? A.—I do not remember, it was so covered with blood; it looked like a piece of old silk that had been soaked in water.

Q.—Did you notice how far down the blood had run upon his clothing? A.—Inside it had run down, covering his clothing; it was all matted thoroughly; there was a great deal of blood down his legs.

Q.—Did you notice the condition of his boots. A.—I did not.

Q.—How many of these wounds would necessarily have been mortal? A.—The wound in the neck might have been mortal; the wound under the mastoid lump was alone sufficient.

Q.—What other wounds were mortal? A.—The wound upon the anterior part of the chest, between the fourth and fifth ribs, wound under the left arm, and the wound under the edge of the right clavicle, and even the abdominal wounds might have been mortal, although it is possible that the man might have survived them.

Q.—I mean mortal in the end? A.—He might have survived a number of these wounds; they were not wounds which would necessarily be fatal, as those of the carotid artery and heart.

Q.—How about the one in the shoulder? A.—He might have survived that.

Q.—Was that in an important place, where a man who knows the human body would strike to effect death? A.—Yes, Sir; that would have been one of the knowing places.

Q.—Did these wounds indicate that the person who made them knew where to strike in order to effect the death of the person, or were they struck at random? A.—I thought that some of the wounds had been inflicted with a little anatomical knowledge, and I thought that others had been inflicted without any extraordinary care or attention.

Q.—Were they wounds made by a person competent to give testimony as an expert?

The witness was understood to answer affirmatively.

Q.—Did you not make the remark that day in the room, after looking at the wounds, that they were made with singular accuracy? I did make a remark of that kind; my language was that these wounds seemed to evince anatomical knowledge.

Q.—By a Juror—Do you say that the person who gave these wounds would be competent to give evidence as an expert? A.—I thought the wounds looked a good deal like as if the persons who made them had a knowledge of the human structure and knew what they were about.

Q.—By a Juror—I would like to have your opinion, and I will ask you one question in reference to the wound under the arm to which you have referred: Can you tell me how the party inflicting that wound must have stood in reference to the Doctor? could he have stood before him, or must he have stood before him in striking that wound? A.—It looked as though the person might have stood rather more backward than in front, rather more behind than upon the anterior part.

Q.—By a Juror—There is another wound to which you referred, the one upon the left arm. Could you tell me in reference to the locality in what manner the wound was made? A.—I think the person must have been rather upon the front: some of these wounds evinced a reckless mode of administering them, and seemed to have been made in a hurried manner.

Q.—By a Juror—Do you suppose the stab in the left arm could have been made by a person standing behind? A.—Standing behind and on the outside it might have been.

Q.—By a Juror—Then you could not judge by these wounds whether they were inflicted by a left or right-handed person? A.—That is a subject which I have thought over without ever answering any questions about it; I have asked nobody a question about this matter since I was first examined; I once came to the conclusion that the blows might have been inflicted by a left-handed person, but it would have been better to have examined them more minutely to determine this question; I was rather inclined to favor the idea that it was done by a left-handed person.

Q.—Did you depend upon the relative positions of the person wounded and the person giving the blow? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—There is one question which I wish to ask you further. You have noticed the blood upon the wall? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did you notice the character of the blood? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Could you tell whether it was arterial or venous blood? A.—No one could tell that; I formed the idea that this blood had spurted chiefly from the neck.

Q.—Did some of the blood bear marks of having spurted, and did some of it look as if it was dropped? A.—Some of the blood on the wall looked as if it were spurted.

Q.—Did you notice it when you first went in? A.—In a moment after I got into the room to see a patient, as I thought, but found a dead man—

Q.—Did you notice if there was any blood on the wall leading down? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Was the blood then perfectly dry? A.—Yes, Sir; it was not a hard, dark incrustation, but a light discolorstion.

Q.—I want to ask you one question further. Did you notice the blood on the front door? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Was it dry? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Was it thick, clotted blood? A.—It was rather hard and dry.

Q.—It was on the outside? A.—Yes, Sir, a little above the lock.

Q.—Was not there a severe rain storm that morning? A.—It rained pretty hard that day.

Q.—Do you recollect what the character of the night was? A.—I think it was rather a tempestuous night.

Q.—Was it the Saturday in which that very severe rain storm arose? Yes, Sir.

By a Juror.—What was the appearance of the mark around the neck? Did it look as if it were made by a rope or by the hand? A.—It might have been something like an inch wide, and could not have been made by the fingers.

By a Juror—Was this blood on the outside of the door? A.—It was on the outside of the hall door just above the keyhole.

Q.—Would not an immediate anatomical dissection have determined how much force was used, and the character of that ligature? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Was the blood settled or not? A.—It was a little dark and discolored, but it was not an effusion of blood.

TESTIMONY OF HANNAH CONLAN.

The witness said she had lived in the house No. 31 Bond-st. going on two years; Mrs. Jones kept that house when she first went there, and she (witness) never knew Dr. Burdell until she went to live in his house; Mrs. Jones stopped keeping house six days before May a year ago; Mrs. Cunningham was boarding in the house when witness went there, and began to keep the house when Mrs. Jones left; Mrs. C. had a room in the attic for a while during the time she boarded, and then a room below next the Doctor's on the second story; she took the lower room when Mrs. Voorst went into the country, but she had been down there sleeping with Mrs. Voorst before that lady left; Mr. Baker and Mr. Thayer occupied the floor over that in which Dr. Burdell's and Mrs. Cunningham's rooms were; Mrs. Jones' room was in the attic; witness could not say how long the Doctor and Mrs. Cunningham occupied that second floor; on the first Thanksgiving day after she (witness) went to the house, Mrs. Cunningham was sick; the Doctor had gone to Brooklyn for her two daughters, and he being away Mrs. C. cried "Oh, Doctor, where are you?"

Here the Court took a recess of an hour.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

At the reassembling of the Court, the District-Attorney continued the direct examination of Hannah Conlan. He returned to the question which had been asked her at the time of taking the recess. "What did Mrs. Cunningham say concerning Dr. Burdell at the time of her sickness, on Thanksgiving Day, 1855?" Mr. Dean objected strenuously to the question. It was altogether irrelevant, he maintained. Suppose it was shown that Dr. Burdell produced an abortion on the person of Mrs. Cunningham, would that prove that more than a year afterwards she had murdered Dr. Burdell? Was it not done to blacken the character of that lady? What family in the City would be safe, if the memory of a domestic was, in case of any charge against them, to go back to conversations so remote?

Mr. Clinton argued that it would be in direct violation of the ruling of the Court to allow testimony of one offence to be given as evidence of the commission of another.

The District Attorney said that he had never heard that an abortion had been produced. He expected to prove from the witness the domestic relations of Dr. Burdell and the prisoner from the time spoken of till the time of his death.

The Court allowed the question.

The witness proceeded—Mrs. Cunningham said, in her sickness, "Oh, Doctor, where are you?" she (the witness) went for a doctor, and while he was in attendence Dr. Burdell came home, went up stairs, and attended to her himself.

Mr. Clinton moved that the latter statement should be stricken out of the evidence on the ground that the witness was not present and did not know what took place. (Objection sustained.)

District Attorney—Did Mrs. Cunningham say what was the matter with her?

Mr. Clinton objected. Objection sustained. Witness went on to state that Mrs. Cunningham was sick for about a month; she did not at that time know what her sickness was; she saw a chamber vessel in Mrs. Cunningham's room, and took it down stairs; the contents appeared like the shape of a child.

District Attorney—Did she state who was the father of that child

Mr. Clinton objected. Question allowed. Exception taken.

Witness—She said it was Dr. Burdell's; the Doctor began to take his meals at the house, at the time Mrs. Cunningham took the house, six days before May, 1856; she could not say how long he took his meals there; it was about two or three months; witness heard Mrs. Cunningham talk about Dr. Burdell; they often had rough words; she paid no particular attention to the quarrels; when vexed very much, she said she would be revenged on him; she accused him of keeping company with ladies, very often; on the afternoon of the third day before the Doctor was killed, Mrs. Cunningham asked the witness what some ladies, who had come to see Dr. Burdell were looking at; she replied that they were looking at the parlor, dining-room, closets and washstnbs; witness told her the Doctor was going to let the house to them and sign a paper; Mrs. Cunningham replied "Perhaps he will not live to let the house, or sign the paper either; this was said in the kitchen; the Doctor went out that afternoon to dinner about five o'clock; I went to bed that night, the witness continued, at ten o'clock; Mrs. Cunningham and Mr. Eckel came down and told me to go to bed, for it was near ten o'clock; I told her I would as soon as I had washed some clothes out; I went up stairs to go to bed, and stopped in Mrs. Cunningham's room—third story front; Mrs.

said upon this occasion, that perhaps he might not live to sign the paper or let the house. Did you swear to that before the Coroner? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Were you not asked to tell all you knew before the Coroner? A.—That did not come into my head until the lady that took the house was asking me.

Q.—Where did Mrs. Stansbury see you? A.—She saw me in the dining-room in the house in Bond-street.

Q.—When was this? A.—At the examination of the Coroner's Jury, before it was ended.

Q.—You said that you did not think of this when you gave your testimony before the Coroner's Jury? A.—I did not think of it then.

Q.—Did Mrs. Stansbury talk much with you after you gave your testimony? A.—Not much.

Q.—Did you tell Mrs. Stansbury of this at the time? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—To whom did you first name it? A.—I have now named it to Mrs. Foster, the matron of the City Prison.

Q.—How recently to her? A.—Within three or four days.

Q.—Is that the first time you ever mentioned it? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did you ever think of it before you told of it to Mrs. Foster? A.—I did, but not at the time I was before the Coroner.

Q.—Was it after you were examined the first time that you had this conversation with Mrs. Stansbury? A.—It was after I was examined the second time—the same day.

Q.—You were in custody as a witness at that time? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Were you not asked before the Coroner to state all that was said upon that occasion? A.—I was.

Q.—You did not then recollect it? Q.—I did not.

Q.—How many days before the death of Dr. Burdell was this conversation? A.—I could not say it was before he was buried.

Q.—Have you not been asked, since the Coroner's Jury rendered their verdict, whether you knew anything farther about this case? A.—I was never asked by anybody about it.

Q.—Has anybody called upon you to ask any questions in reference to this matter? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Where have you been since this homicide? A.—I have been three weeks in the station-house; seven weeks boarding with Capt. Dilks, and four weeks in the Tombs.

Q.—Has Capt. Dilks said anything to you about this matter? A.—No, Sir; and no one has spoken to me about it.

Q.—Did you tell Mrs. Foster two or three days ago about it?—A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did Mrs. Foster speak to you about it first? A.—No, Sir; it was running in my mind

Q.—Do you know Mary Donohoe? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Do you recollect when Mary left the Doctor's house? A.—I think it was three days before the murder of the Doctor.

Q.—Did she ever leave the house before that? A.—She went away for a night or two

Q.—Do you know anything about her being discharged? A.—I didn't know that she was to come back.

Q.—Was Mary drunk?

Judge Davies—This is a very improper question, and I cannot permit any statements in regard to her character, however humble she may be.

Q.—Will you state what transpired when Dr. Burdell and Mary Donohoe were in the cellar? A.—She can answer for herself; I have nothing to do with Mary Donohoe's business.

Q.—State what transpired in the cellar upon that occasion? A.—There was nothing done by him but to help me up stairs with Mary.

Q.—I ask you whether Mary and the Doctor had fights and quarrels? A.—I don't know whether they had, and I never knew them to have quarrels; there might have been sharp words about cleaning and sweeping, and raising of dust.

Q.—Have you ever heard Mary use any threats about the Doctor? A.—I never did.

Q.—Have you ever used any yourself? A.—Never, in that way.

Q.—Did Mrs. Burdell take care of the clothing of the Doctor at the time of his death? A.—Yes, Sir; I did his washing, and she attended to his clothes.

Q.—Did you see Mrs. Burdell that Friday evening, before she came down into the kitchen, about ten o'clock? A.—I do not think I did; I went up to tell her that there was a girl, Mary McClinchy, that wanted to see her; I could not say whether it was before or after dinner-time; I told the girl to come the next day—she was coming as chambermaid.

Q.—When you went up to the room to tell them about the murder, what were they doing? A.—Snodgrass was writing; Eckel was sitting at the fire.

Q.—Was it used as a sitting-room for the family? A.—They used all of them to sit in it before they went to bed.

Q.—How long do you think you were in the room altogether that night—the third story front room? A.—I did not stop more than a minute or two.

Q.—Did you then go immediately to bed? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Where were the little boys when you went into Mrs. Burdell's room? A.—They were in bed; Snodgrass told me that George said I was intoxicated.

Q.—Did you go into their room? A.—I did not.

Q.—Do you know they were in bed? A.—I heard them talking.

Q.—Do you know whether they were undressed? A.—I saw little George come down in his night clothes; I did not see him afterwards that night, or hear him say anything; I heard him talking to George Snodgrass.

Q.—Did you hear William talk? A.—Yes, at the same time in the bedroom

Q.—When was it that the conversation occurred that George said you were intoxicated? A.—He told that to his mother that night after I came up to my bed.

Q.—Snodgrass told you that? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—You were not intoxicated? A.—I was not at all; I was just as sober as I am now, and knew just as well what I was doing as I now do.

Q.—During that Friday evening was not the bell ringing for you to go into the parlor? A.—It was not.

Q.—Will you swear that you did not come into the parlor? A.—I did not go up stairs at all.

Q.—Do you know whether the girl who called went up stairs that evening? A.—She did not but Mrs. C. went down to her.

Q.—When you told Mary to come the next day, where did she go? A.—She went out at the basement door; I went to the door with her, bade her good night; I unbolted the door when she went out.

Q.—Was it bolted all the evening? A.—I always bolted that door.

Q.—Was it bolted then just as usual? A.—It was bolted by me just as usual.

Q.—Can you tell how long you lay awake that Friday night? A.—I cannot tell exactly the time.

Q.—Did you hear Snodgrass come up stairs after you went to bed? A.—I did, and I heard Miss Helen Cunningham come up; I heard them bid good night to each other.

Q.—Did you hear Helen go down? A.—I did.

Q.—Do you know where Helen and Augusta slept that night? A.—I do not.

Q.—The next morning when you called the mother to breakfast did you see the girls? A.—I saw Miss Augusta—she was in her mother's room.

Q.—Was Helen there? A.—She was up in the garret; I called to her to come down to breakfast and she answered me.

Q.—Do you know anything about overcoats being lost in the hall? A.—I heard them say that there were, but I know nothing about it.

Q.—How long was this before the homicide? A.—It was about a week or so.

Q.—Did you let anybody in at the time these overcoats were said to have been stolen? A.—I did not.

Q.—With the exception of what you have said as to the hard words between Dr. Burdell and Mrs. Burdell, was her conduct uniformly kind towards him? A.—Yes, Sir; very kind, and sociable enough.

Q.—How did she address him? A.—She always called him Doctor.

Q.—Did you ever hear her address him by the name of Harvey? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—How long before daylight did you get up the next morning? A.—It was between six and seven o'clock; I came down to get breakfast.

Q.—What time did you go to call Mr. Burdell to breakfast? A.—It was about eight o'clock.

Q.—Did you generally call him to breakfast? A.—I did not generally call him, but the chambermaid was away then, and that was the reason I did it.

Q.—Was John Burchell the first one you let in? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Had you been up stairs from the time you went down in the morning until you called Mrs. Burdell to breakfast? A.—I had not.

Q.—What time was it that you let John Burchell in? A.—It was not quite eight o'clock.

Q.—Was it before or after breakfast that he came? A.—It was before breakfast.

Q.—How long after you let him in before he came down and told you about the Doctor's death? A.—I do not think that he came down and told me any thing about the Doctor's death until about nine o'clock; it was a little more than an hour before he brought me any word about the Doctor's death.

Q.—Do you know anything about the Doctor's habit of going to the door if the boy was out? A.—He answered the door-bell very often himself in the daytime; he never answered it at night.

Q.—Are you certain what words you used when you went up to Mrs. Burdell's room to announce that the Doctor was dead? A.—I could not say exactly what the words were; I think the words were, "My God, you enjoy yourselves well when the Doctor is dead."

Q.—How long did you stay in that room when you went up stairs to announce that the Doctor was dead? A.—I staid there until Mr. Snodgrass went down stairs, came up and said that that was the fact.

Q.—What did you do when he came into the room and announced it? A.—I went over and caught Mrs. C. by the hand she was fainting away; I went down and called the next door neighbor, and I went for Dr. Roberts

Q.—Was she crying at that time? A.—She was

Q.—You took her by the hand and moved her on to the bed? A.—Yes Sir.

Q.—Did you help Eckel any? A.—I did not.

Q.—Did you notice that Helen fainted? A.—Yes,

Sir.

Juror—I understood you to say that did not take an affect? A.—I did not see Juror—Did you have any company on the murder occurred? A.—I did not.

Juror—Had you been drunk? A.—

was it that this conversation occurred Doctor being jealous of Eckel? A.—

all the time

before the death of the Doctor? A.—was about one month or less, I should

Q.—Where did this conversation occur with Mrs. C. A.—Down in the kitchen.

Q.—Do you recollect of anything else said in that conversation? A.—She said first that the Doctor was vexed at her; that was the way the subject was brought about; the conversation was in the day time.

Q.—She told you that he was jealous of Eckel? A.—I said that I did not think that she gave him any occasion.

Q.—What did she say, then? A.—She gave a smile; she said that she did not care much what he said in that respect, and she did not care about such foolish talk as that.

Q.—Did she say anything else? A.—That was all she said.

Q.—Was anybody else present? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Was the Doctor down in the kitchen much? A.—He would happen in occasionally if he wanted something.

Q.—Did he pay any attention to what was going on there? A.—There was a great many mice there, and he used to set a trap to catch them; he came down every day to see if there were any in the trap.

Q.—On the Friday before the Doctor was killed did you see much of him? A.—I saw him at night; I saw him pretty often.

Q.—About what time was it that you last saw him? A.—I saw him, to the best of my knowledge, before he went to dine that day.

Q.—Where was it when you last saw him? A.—On the kitchen stairs.

Q.—Did Dr. Burdell attend to matters about the house down to the time of his death? A.—Mrs. C. attended to them.

Q.—Did he have anything to do with the gas bills? A.—I do not know anything about the gas bills.

Q.—Did he go and cover up the dishes down stairs? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—What did he say about the bread and other matters in the kitchen? A.—He said that the bread ought not to be lying there, exposed in the way for the mice to get at.

Q.—Did Mrs. B. tell you not to contradict and dispute the Doctor? A.—She did; she told me to treat him kindly, and let him have his own way.

Q.—Are you married? A.—I have been, but my husband is not living, he has been dead four years October last.

Q.—Have you been in the habit of getting drunk a good deal? A.—I could always take my share, but never so much as not to be able to work; I never saw any one who would throw it over their shoulders, whether they were rich or poor.

Q.—Have you ever been charged with any criminal offence? A.—Not to my knowledge.

Q.—Have you ever been charged with receiving stolen goods? A.—Never.

Q.—At the time you and Mary Donoghue were at Captain Dilke was any criminal complaint made against either of you? A.—There was no complelot made against me.

Q.—Have you been in the habit of meeting men in the State Prison? A.—I was never in the State Prison but once in my life.

Q.—Who did you go to see upon that occasion? A.—Dick. Smith.

Q.—How long ago was it? A.—It was fourteen years ago; he was in the employment of my husband; I went to see him from the friendship of my husband for him and no other.

Q.—Where did you live before you went to Mrs. Jones? A.—I kept house for my husband.

Q.—Did you ever go out to service before? A.—Never; I kept house in the Sixth Ward.

Q.—What street and number? A.—It was at the corner of Pearl and Cross streets; I do not know the number.

Q.—Where did you live before that? A.—No. 30 Orange-street.

Q.—How long did you live there? A.—Five or six years.

Q.—Where did you live next before that? A.—We had an oyster saloon at the corner of Elm and Walker streets.

By a Juror—You stated when you went up stairs to Mrs. Cunningham's room and reported to them that Dr. Burdell was dead, you waited there until Snodgrass went down and come back; did Mrs. Cunningham make any effort to go down stairs? A.—No, Sir.

By a Juror—Was she in a fit state to make any inquiries? A.—She looked confused.

Q.—By a Juror—You stated you were seven weeks in Captain Dilks' family; you were not confined in the house at all? A.—I was not out but twice in that time.

Q.—Did you go out alone? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did you have any conversation about this matter at this time with anybody? A.—I did not for the people were afraid to ask me anything.

EXAMINATION OF CATHARINE STANSBURY.

Catharine Stansbury was next examined by the District-Attorney. She said she was the wife of the cashier and accountant of the New-York Express; she had known Dr. Burdell twenty years.

To the question whether she had ever engaged to hire the house No. 31 Bond-street, of Dr. Burdell, Mr. Clinton forcibly objected, on the ground that Mrs. Cunningham was not present at the time of the engagement, and that nothing which took place in her absence ought to be admitted as testimony. The Judge allowed the question. Exception taken by Mr. Clinton.

Witness—I went to No. 31 Bond-street at Dr. Burdell's request; my object was to hire the house from May 1, 1857; I was there on the Friday afternoon preceding the Doctor's death; the papers were to be signed the next morning; Dr. Burdell and my mother went through the house with me; I saw Hannah, the cook; I did not talk with her at that time; Hannah was present while we were conversing about renting the house; I did not see Mrs. Cunningham; I had previously been to the house to see Dr. Burdell; I once saw Mrs. Cunningham there.

Mr. Clinton again excepted to all this testimony, on the ground that Mrs. Cunningham not being present, such evidence was not legal. A long argument ensued between the Counsel and the District Attorney. The Judge decided that the testimony was legal Witness resumed—I once saw Mrs. Cunningham when I called at No. 31 Bond-street; she was close to the door of the Doctor's room; I had been talking to the Doctor, and suddenly opened the door; Mrs. Cuningham was going away from the door.

Mr. Dean again objected to the evidence. The Judge overruled. Witness continued: I was half way in the room when I was talking to Dr. Burdell; Mrs. Cunningham was immediately outside the door.

Cross examined by Mr. Dean—It was in the second-story back-room, I had this conversation with Dr. Burdell; the conversation occurred partly near the fire-place, and partly near the door; the Doctor stood part of the time with his hand upon the knob of the lock, as if about to open the door; Dennis Hubbard was in the house on Friday, 30th of January; I never saw her before; she was there before I arrived there.

To a Juror—My business conversation with Dr. Burnell took place partly while I was sitting in the dentistry chair, near the window; I do not know how near Mrs. Cunningham had been to the door when I opened it; she was a few feet from it when I saw her.

John J. Burchell, the boy employed by Dr. Burdell, was the next witness: He said he was in the employment of Dr. Burdell for about a month previous to his death; he knew Mrs. Cunningham; on the day before the doctor's death he was in the doctor's office with Mrs. Cunningham, between seven and eight o'clock in the morning; the Doctor had gone to the Bank; he was told by Dr. Burdell to go up stairs; Dr. Burdell gave the witness the key; I had been in the room about ten or fifteen minutes, proceeded the witness, when Mrs. Cunningham came in; she asked me if I had the ashes out of the stove, and I said, "Yes;" she asked me who sent me, and I said the Doctor; I was to tell Dr. Cox that he (the Doctor) would be back from the bank by 11 o'clock; Mrs. Cunningham said to me, "The Doctor is a passionate man;" I said, "Yes, ma'am;" then she said, "He will get over his passion in three or four days;" I left the room, and presently returned; I was absent only a few minutes; she asked me to go up and take the ashes out of her room, which I did; I left her in the Doctor's room; I went again to the Doctor's room; I asked her for the key of the room; she said she would take charge of it; about eleven o'clock the Doctor came back from the Bank and asked me for the key; I told him Mrs. Cunningham had the key; he ran up stairs to her room; I did not see him come back; I saw him afterwards about two o'clock in the afternoon; I never talked with Mrs. Cunningham about Dr. Burdell; I do not personally know of any difficulty between her and Dr. Burdell, except a quarrel about coal; I went to the house the next morning between seven and eight o'clock; the basement door was bolted, when the cook let me in; the back basement door was fastened; I went into the yard for a scuttle of coal, and had to unbolt it; I went into the Doctor's room between eight and nine o'clock; the key was outside the door in the lock; I did not see any blood outside; the door is only one step from the head of the stairs; I knocked at the door before I went in; when I got no answer I opened it; I saw blood on the side of the wall of the room; the door opened inward against the side of the room; I saw the Doctor's body; I only opened the door about six inches; he laid so near the door that a common sized man could not get in without pushing away the body; I put my hand against the side of the door, or I would have fallen down; I went and told the cook, and afterwards went up to Mrs. Cunningham's room; Mr. Snodgrass was holding her on the bed, and she was crying; I heard her scream; she did not speak to me; Snodgrass spoke to her; I do not know what he said; I was there ten minutes; I went to the front parlor when I left her room; Snodgrass came down after me and told me to take charge of the front door; Snodgrass ran into the street; he returned with Dr. Roberts; George Cunningham went out for somebody, and I went out for Dr. Smith; I did not see Mrs. Cunningham again; I went into Mrs. Cunningham's room that morning before I found the Doctor was dead; I went to clean away the ashes; nobody was in the room; they were down at breakfast; the first I saw of Mrs. Cunningham, she was standing at the back parlor door; I do not know whether it was before breakfast or after.

Cross examined by Mr. Clinton—Q.—Did you see Eckel that morning? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—What time? A.—It was just when I came in; I went up to the operating room and I was cleaning out the stove.

Q.—Was he at breakfast that morning? A.—I don't know whether he was or not; the first place I saw him was in the middle of the grass plot.

Q.—(By the Court)—In the yard? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—How old are you? A.—Fourteen, going on fifteen

Q.—Had you known Dr. Burdell before you went to live with him? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Did you see any money paid to Dr. Burdell on Friday? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—By whom? A.—By Dr. Smith.

Q.—Bills, or silver, or both? A.—Bills.

Q.—About what time of the day? A.—Between two and three.

By Jurors—What time was it you came on Friday, the day before the murder? A.—I came that morning just at seven o'clock.

Q.—What time did you say the Dr. left? A.—He left about half-past seven to go down to the Bank.

Q.—What time did the Doctor generally get to his office? A.—Why he used to sleep right in front of it.

Q.—He left then between seven and eight o'clock? A.—Yes, Sir; half past seven.

Q.—Where were you when you saw Mr. Eckel in the middle of the grass plot? A.—I was in the working room, back of the back parlor.

Q.—Was that after you went out with the ashes and for coal, or before? A.—No, Sir; just when I came in to work.

Q.—Who unlocked the back door on the parlor floor? A.—That was never bolted, not since I was there.

Q.—Did you see Mr. Eckel when he went out that morning? A.—I did not see him go out; I only saw him on the grass-plot.

Q.—By the District-Attorney—Do you know where the Dr. breakfasted? A.—Yes, Sir; at the Metropolitan Hotel.

Q.—By Mr. Clinton—Did you know that any other way than by what the Doctor said? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Where was Eckel going? A.—He had his back turned towards me; he had his two hands in his pockets, and had a light coat on.

Q.—By Mr. Clinton—Was he going to the water closet? A.—Yes, Sir.

The witness was allowed to withdraw.

Mary Donahoe was then sworn, but her examination did not commence until after the recess which was now taken from 6 till 7 o'clock.

TESTIMONY OF MARY DONAHOE.

When the jurors had reassembled, the examination of Mary Donahoe was at once proceeded with. Mary looked rather ill, and spoke so low at first that counsel were obliged to ask her to stand up. She declared her inability to do so, as she had lately been confined to her bed for a week by severe ill health.

The District-Attorney asked her how she spelt her name, or if it was with an o. She said no—it was with oe, viz: D-o-n-a-h-o-e.

Her examination was conducted by Mr. Edwards. In reply to his queries, she testified that on the 25th or 26th of November last, she went to live in the family of Mrs. Cunningham as chambermaid and waitress, and that Dr. Burdell lived in that house at that time; Mrs. Cunningham mentioned to her particularly that she should attend to Dr. Burdell's office and bedroom, besides doing all the rest of her work, and she, (witness,) while she remained in the house, did clean his office and bedroom, and always made his bed; one day, when she had been about eight days or so in the house, whilst she was making the Doctor's bed—this bedroom being then the back room and his office the front one)—she heard a great deal of talk in the front room; she recognized Dr. Burdell's voice very well, but there was also a female voice which she did not know till afterwards; the noise continued for some time—more than ten or fifteen minutes, she should think—when the Doctor came out into the bedroom, walking very fast, she, at the time, being engaged in fixing the bed, and whether he went into the little closet or not she did not know, but he hurried into the front room again; the person with him there was Mrs. Cuningham; she heard him call her a bad woman, or words to that effect, and Mrs. Cunningham, in reply, informed him that he was a bad man, a wicked bad man, as nearly as the witness could recollect the words; he seemed, by the noise, to take a hold of her and push her out, as he said these words to her, ("that she was a bad woman,") and then locked the door on her; she (Mrs. Cunningham,) from the entry, came into the bedroom where the witness was employed in making the bed, and seemed very much excited and flushed; she asked the witness if she had seen the Doctor take a gun out of that closet, and witness replied that she had not, as her back was to him when he came in and she only heard his foot; Mrs. Cuningham then said to her: "Mary, you have no notion of what a bad man that is."

NEW ARRANGEMENT AS TO THE HOURS OF SITTING.

Mr. Dean interrupted the examining counsel to refer to a matter in which the Court was interested. He said: "Your Honor asked a question of me this afternoon whether any arrangement had been made for a stenographic report of this trial similar to the one to which allusion was then made, and which was fully reported. We have to answer in the negative, so far as any arrangements that we have made ourselves are concerned. I, at the time, however, stated in connection with my associate, that we had been informed by Messrs. Roberts and Warburton that they expected to make such a report for the TIMES, but that it was not made for us at all, and that we did not know that we would rely on it, and, therefore, that we must require your Honor, if you must do it, to take full minutes. Within the last five minutes I have received a notice from the TIMES saying that they have made such arrangements, and that if the sessions of the Court terminated at 8 o'clock in the evening, they would have full stenographic reports of everything that occurred; that they have now three reporters, and that they will have four in one more day—another, an additional one, coming on from Boston—and that full reports of the trial should be made and printed, provided we could adjourn the Court at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Mr. Dean urged upon the Court the advisability of adopting the course purporting to be suggested by the TIMES, on the ground that the case would actually proceed more rapidly than under the existing arrangement, and that it was essentially necessary to the rights of his client that her counsel should have at least from 8 o'clock in the evening until the hour of opening the Court next day, in which to prepare their case.

Mr. Clinton suggested that the saving of time and labor to the counsel and Court, which would be effected by an accurate and full printed record not only of the evidence, but of the rulings and exceptions, would more than compensate for the proposed abbreviation of the time of sitting.

Mr. T. Romeyn insisted on the absolute necessity to the counsel for the prisoner of a few hours every evening, in which to procure witnesses and put themselves in a position to meet the testimony presented on behalf of the State.

The Court should certainly assume that the distinguished counsel on both sides came here prepared to try the case.

After some further conversation and a consultation between the Court and the Foreman of the Jury,

The Foreman submitted the matter to his fellow-jurors, and subsequently informed the Court that they were willing to accept the arrangement suggested.

The Court then announced that henceforward they would meet at nine o'clock in the morning and sit till two, that from two until three they would have a recess, that at three they would reassemble and sit until eight.

Mr. Clinton rose to present some suggestion to the Court, but was informed by the Judge that the arrangement just announced was final.

CONTINUATION OF MARY DONOHOE'S TESTIMONY.

The witness resumed by saying that the next thing that Mrs. Cunningham said was that he (Dr. Burdell) was a bad, passionate man; upon which the witness remarked, "Bless me, ma'am, he must be dangerous!" she then told witness what the noise was about—that the Doctor wanted to bring some woman—(witness was interrupted, but allowed to proceed;) Mrs. C. said the noise was about the Doctor wishing to bring some woman back to that house, which she did not wish, as she (the woman) was not a good character, and she did not wish him to bring her in amoog her daughters; whereupon witness said she was perfectly right in that; Mrs. C. then said, "Mary, I don't wish you to take any notice or make any remark of what is said here or done; I can manage him myself;" which ended the conversation; when witness had done making the bed, she went away about her work through the house; the Doctor, when witness came out, was in his office room; about an hour or an hour and a half after that, the Doctor came to witness when she was brushing the stairs on the lobby; he appeared to be dressed; he locked the door of his office room and put the key in his pocket; that room was then the front room; he went down stairs as if he was going out; while on the stairs, and just after this, witness saw Mrs. Cunningham take a key, seemingly from her pocket, or in her hand—she did not know, in fact, where it was taken from—and put it in the lock of the bed-room door and unlock it; she told witness to go up and tell Miss Augusta to come down, and that the Doctor had gone out; witness went accordingly, and Miss Augusta came down and went into the room into which Mr. Cunningham had already gone. Witness went into the Doctor's front room, passing from the other room and going through the passage between them, to dust it. Witness found them in the office room; they were looking at papers. The bureau on the right hand was open, and some of the little drawers were open. It was the same bureau that stood at the side of the iron chest in the room where the Doctor was murdered. After witness had dusted about the bureau a little, Mrs. C. said, "that will do, Mary," and she (Mary) left the room, in which Mrs. and Miss C. still remained. Witness often saw in that house a bunch of keys tied with red tape; they seemed to be like iron keys; witness never noticed them particularly, but she never saw any brass ones among them; all down stairs, in the parlors and bed-rooms, were brass keys; up stairs they were mostly brass keys, but the middle doors she believed had iron keys; witness noticed particularly once one little iron key in the door between Mr. Eckel's and Mrs. Cunningham's rooms. [This last statement, after some argument, was excluded by the Court for the present.]

The witness then asked what connection there was between Mrs. Cunningham's and Mr. Eckel's rooms as to closets, doors, &c.

The question was objected to, and ruled out by the Court, on the ground that the evidence already in the case as to the existence of a jealous feeling on the part of Dr. Burdell toward Mrs. Cunninghmam on suspicion of improper intimacy with Eckel was sufficient, so far as the question of motive was concerned.

Counsel for the defence then admitted the relative locations of the rooms of Mrs. Cunningham and Eckel.

Witness, in resuming, said she always thought that Mrs. Cunoingham slept in her own room on the third story, front; she always made her bed there.

Q.—Where was Eckel's bed?

The Court—That is admitted.

Witness continued—While she was living there Mr. Eckel slept in the small room; there was a door in the partition between these rooms; witness attended to all the rooms in the house.

Q.—Did you observe in the morning whether Mr. Eckel's bed was occupied?

[Objected to, on the ground, among other reasons, that the motive of Mrs. Cunningham was stronger if the Doctor's accusations as to her improper intimacy with Eckel were untrue.]

Witness (in continuation) said she had often heard Mrs. C. say that he (the Doctor) was a very wicked, bad man; that there was no doing anything with him; she heard that she thought about three weeks before the murder was committed; it was a frequent thing for Mrs C. to say so, but witness did not remember to hear her say that within three weeks before the Doctor's death; she never heard her say anything about the Doctor being married, but when Mrs. C. complained to her of his being so cross, she joked her about it, and said, "perhaps, ma'am, if he was married and had a wife to guide him he would not be so cross," to which Mrs. Cunningham replied that it would be a pity of any woman who would get him. Witness thought this was a fortnight or three weeks before the murder. On the Sunday after the Saturday that they quarrelled in the bedroom the Doctor had gone to Brooklyn or somewhere from home, and Hannah (the cook) and witness had gone to bed a little after ten o'clock. The children and George Snodgrass had come up also to their room—(Witness was interrupted, and asked to relate the conversation that occurred at the breakfast table, to which this was introductory)—she said that when they were talking about the words the Doctor had had with Snodgrass, Mr. Eckel remarked that he (meaning the Doctor) deserved a good knock down if it could be done handy; Mrs. Cunningham did not seem to make any remark; she merely laughed; that morning there was nothing more said but on the following morning they were conversing again about the Doctor's ugliness; there were present Mr. Eckel, Mrs. C. and Miss Helen; the two children were at the table, and Miss Augusta, she thought was present too; the conversation was a general one; they were talking about the Doctor being an ugly man; Mr. Eckel was eating cakes she thought at the time, and laughing when, putting down his knife and fork, he rubbed his hands just so, like making fun, and said, "By jingo! shouldn't I like to be at the stringing up of that old fellow, if I would not have too hard a pull at the cord; Mrs. Cunningham just seemed to give a little laugh; she did not say anything, but told witness she need not remain in the room any longer; on the Saturday night before the murder witness had been later than usual in washing out the front entry, and heard a great deal of noise in the Doctor's room; she could not distinguish between the voices, the noise was so great; just then a ring came to the door, and witness went to it, opened it, and closed it again as soon as she could; the noise up stairs continued for about fifteen minutes; witness saw the Doctor running down stairs; Mrs Cunningham, she supposed, was up stairs, but she did not see her; about an hour before she heard the noise witness had seen Mrs. Cunningham go up stairs; that night about nine o'clock Mrs C. came into the kitchen and told Hannah and witness to get ready as quick as they could and go to bed; she had never before ordered them to bed in that way; witness asked her could she not stop and set the table and do some other little things, it being Saturday night; she came back twice and said, "now look here, Mary, I don't want a muss;" Mary said she would make no muss, as she had only to clean her knives and wash her silver; Mrs. Cunningham then said to Hannah, "Mary does not understand what I mean of the affair about the Doctor." "Oh!" said Hannah, "you need not care about that, for Mary was in the entry and heard all the noise, and all that the Doctor said in passing her by." Mrs. Cunningham then went up stairs and came back again. Witness was never asked by her to go into the bath-room for any purpose. One time Mrs. C. sent her with a plate of soup to the Doctor, who had a bad cold, and he refused it. Witness took it down and told Mrs. C. that he (the Doctor) said he was going to dinner, or had had his dinner, and did not require it. One time witness was asked by Mrs. C. to bring up to the Doctor a sort of hot stuff which the family were in the habit of making for themselves altogether twice a week, and he did not take it, saying he did not take anything like that. Witness brought it back to Mrs. Cunningham. Witness very often stood behind Mrs. Cunninghnm's chair and she remarked that she used her left hand more than her right; she saw that Mrs. Cunningham used her fork a good deal and generally used the knife in her left hand to cut with. Witness assisted in change the Doctor's bed from the back to the front room about a fortnight after she went there; it was a few days before Christmas a good while. At the time of making this change witness heard Mrs. C. remark that she supposed the Doctor had made that change so that he might hear every noise and every foot up above in her room. Witness left the house on the Wednesday before the murder, she thought at about half past six o'clock in the evening.

Cross-examined by Mr. Clinton—Q.—Do you recollect any overcoats stolen out of the hall? A.—Yes.

Q.—How long was that before the murder? A.—It was a long time before the murder; overcoats were stolen twice, one of which belonged to George Snodgrass, and the other to Mr. Eckel.

Q.—When was Snodgrass' coat stolen? A.—I think that was six or seven weeks before the murder; Snodgrass was always in the habit of visiting when I went there; he was in the habit of coming every evening to see the young ladies, and after a week that I was there he hung his coat in the hall, and Mr. Eckel had been hanging his there also, and both were taken.

Q.—That was about a week after you left? A.—I think so.

Q.—Were they both taken at the same time? A.—Both at the same time.

Q.—Do you recollect that any coats were stolen after that? A.—Yes.

Q.—About how long after that? A.—I think it was upon a Friday, a week or so before the murder? I know that on the following Monday Doctor Burdell put a new lock upon the door.

Q.—What room did Mrs. Burdell occupy while you were there? A.—From the time I was there I always made her bed in the third story front room.

Q.—And you always supposed that she slept there? A.—I always supposed so

Q.—Without interruption? A.—Yes; I always had her bed to make in the morning.

Q.—Do you not know that Doctor Snodgrass and his wife occupied that room for a portion of that time? A.—For a fortnight they did; she (Mrs. Cunningham) always occupied that room, but gave it up to Doctor Snodgrass.

Q.—He and his wife (Doctor Snodgrass) were visiting there at that time? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Was not Mrs. Snodgrass there longer than that? A.—No, sir, I do not think she was.

Q.—Did she not remain there while Doctor Snodgrass left, and subsequently returned after having been gone a week or two? A.—Not while I was there; I did not miss them out of the house for a meal; they may have been away a day or so, but not more.

Q.—They are the father and mother of George Snodgrass? A.—Yes; I waited upon them and attended to them.

Q.—You say that Mrs. Burdell made a remark that she supposed the Doctor had changed his room so as to hear all that was going on in her room? A.—Yes.

The District-Attorney—Overhead in her room? A.—Yes.

Mr. Clinton—About what time was it? Are you sure how long it was after you went there that the bed was changed? A.—I do not think that it was more than a fortnight after I went there that the bed was changed.

Q.—You took the drink to the Doctor? A.—Yes.

Q.—About when was that that you first took this drink to the Doctor? A.—Only once.

Q.—I ask when was that? A.—About a month or so before the murder.

Q.—After you returned with it what was done with it? A.—I do not know; I sat it down on the parlor table; she (Mrs. Cunningham) sent one up another night to Mr. Ullmann.

Q.—Were other parties drinking this same hot stuff down stairs? A.—Yes.

Q.—It was the same drink? A.—Yes.

Q.—Nothing poisonous in it as far you know? A.—I never thought of poison, nor anything of the sort.

Q.—Fix the time when you took the soup up to the Doctor? A.—As near as I can, I think it was about six weeks before the occurrence—between five or six weeks; it was six weeks at all events.

Q.—Did you make that soup? A.—It was soup which Hannah made.

Q.—For the family? A.—Yes.

Q.—And not specially prepared for Dr. Burdell? A.—No; it was soup made for the family

Q.—Good soup, was it not, and nothing wrong about it? A.—No.

Q.—What was done with it? A.—I brought it down again, and took it into the kitchen.

Q.—Did the Doctor have a cold at that time? A.—Yes.

Q.—And was complaining? A.—Yes.

Q.—You heard a conversation as to the Doctor wanting to bring some women here which Mrs. Burdell did not want, as she did not wish them to associate with her daughters. Do you know what women were meant? A.—No.

Q.—Were not their names Hubbard and Post? A.—I understood that it was afterwards.

Q.—Did you attend to the door in the evening? A.—Yes, Sir, always; there was no boy when I went there first.

Q.—You did not let any one in who took the overcoats, of course? A.—No, Sir

Q.—Of course not? [Laughter.] A.—No, Sir, [emphatically.]

Q.—You do not know who took them? A.—No; I told them that it was their own carelessness; I know nothing about it.

Q.—Now, as to this talking about the Doctor at the breakfast-table, on the Monday morning: State who were present on that occasion? As far as I can remember, Mrs. Cunningham, Mr. Eckel, Miss Helen, and the two little boys.

Q.—Was Augusta there? A.—I do not think she was down.

Q.—Was Snodgrass there? A.—No; he had taken his breakfast in the kitchen, and went to his work early.

Q.—Was Snodgrass present when this conversation occurred? A.—I think not.

Q.—Did you not swear before the Coroner that he was present? A.—No, I did not; I do not think I ever did.

Q.—Did you not state that Snopgrass spoke about the Doctor in that conversation at the breakfast-table, on that Monday morning, about his having got up to let the Doctor in the night before? A.—Yes, but it was not at the breakfast-table; he ate his breakfast in the kitchen that morning, for he would not wait for the family to come down.

Q.—He did not make this remark at the breakfast-table? A.—Not at the breakfast-table with the family.

Q.—What were you doing in the breakfast-room at this time—waiting on table? A.—Yes; I always stood and waited from the beginning of meals until they were done.

Q.—Do you recollect anything else that was said at the breakfast table that morning? A.—No. Q.—Who began the conversation about Dr. Burdell? A.—I cannot say directly, but I think it was Mrs Cunningham. She said that George Snodgrass could have him punished for using the language to him that he had done after getting up and letting him in on Sunday night.

Q.—What language did she say he (Burdell) had used to Snodgrass? A.—Something or other about knocking in his brains.

Q.—Had the Doctor said he would knock his brains in? A.—Yes, for putting a bolt in the door, so that he could not get into his own door, and she (Mrs. Cunningham,) said that George Snodgrass could have him arrested for that language.

Q.—He did not say that Dr. Burdell claimed that Snodgrass himself had put a bolt in the door against him, but that somebody else had? A.—Yes, and that Snodgrass and he had some words, and that he was mad.

Q.—Did she say anything about Snodgrass getting up at one or two o'clock in the morning, and letting him in? A.—No.

Q.—Were you sleeping in the attic at the time that Snodgrass let him in? A.—I was undressed, and in bed.

Q.—You had been asleep? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—It was after he and the little boys had gone to bed? A.—They were in the room; Little Tom Snodgrass was there, and the two boys.

Q.—George and Willie Cunningham? A.—Yes, the four were in that front attic room.

Q.—You heard a bell ring? A.—I heard a great deal of noise; I told Hannah that there was some noise down stairs, and she said never mind; then I heard the bell, "and" says I, "that is Dr. Burdell, and he can't get in."

Q.—Did you ever have any difficulty with Dr. Burdell? A.—I never had any difficulty with him.

Q.—Did Dr. Burdell and Hannah take you out of the cellar on one occasion. A.—They did.

Q.—Were you intoxicated at that time? A.—I had been very poorly for a long time.

Q.—Were you intoxicated? Answer me that question.

The witness—I tell you—

Mr. Clinton—Answer the question.

The Court—Let her give her own explanation.

Witness—Please allow me; I had been very poorly for a long time with a severe cold and a pain in my side, and it was the day after New-Year's, I think—(witness confused)—I think I certainly had been—(confusion self evident and laughter)—the truth is before all the people here, that I had been taking about (hesitation) been taking about one glass of very—very bad brandy, and made into punch; I did not go to ask for it, for I am not accustomed to do so; No, Sir; after I had taken this I went down into the cellar for a scuttle of coal, and I took a faintiog fit, or a spasm—like which came over me, and either Mrs Cunningham or Hannah came to call me, and I was in a sort of faint or ill; but no person ever saw me the worse for liquor—no person ever saw drunkenness about me; I was never in the beastly state of intoxication that I have seen Mrs. Cunningham in. Important Decisions.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT—MAY 4.

Before Judge Nelson.

SUPPLIES—LOCAL LAW—LIENS.

J. A. Secor et al. vs. The Steamboat Highlander.—This case derives interest from its connection with the doctrine laid down by the United States Supreme Court in the case of the Sultana, (Pratt vs. Reed,) at the last term, which holds contrary to the often expressed decisions of many of our Courts, that in order to give a material man a lien upon a vessel, there must be a necessity proved for the credit as great as would warrant a bottomry hypothecation of the vessel. The appellant in the present case, in addition to the points taken in the Court below, upon the argument of the appeal, pressed the doctrins of Pratt vs. Reed. Judge NELSON, however, does not seem to consider that case as applicable.

NELSON, C. J.—The libel was filed in this case to recover the balance due on a special contract to build a boiler for the Highlander, the balance being $1,400 and interest, and also for work done over and beyond the contract amounting to some $1,488 95. A decree was rendered in the Court below for both sums. The latter account is not seriously in dispute. The balance on the contract is contested on the ground that the credit was given to Cornell, the owner, and not to the vessel. This contract was entered into between the parties on the 2d February, 1855, by which Cornell agreed to pay for the boiler $1,000, on the 1st March, $1,000 by the 1st of April, $1,000 when the boiler was on board and complete, and the balance by note at three months from the time of completion. Cornell neglected or refused to give the note, as agreed, and this item has been, therefore, included in the suit for the other portion of the work. There is no question but that the balance of the price for the boiler is due and payable, but it is insisted that the builders had no lien on the vessel, as the credit was given to the owner. The Highlander is a domestic vessel, and the lien, therefore, depends upon the State law. This law, at the date of the contract, provided that the lien shall cease twelve days after the vessel has left the port for some other one within the State. (2 R. S. p 733, § 1, 2.) By a subsequent law, passed March 25, 1855, the time is extended to sixty days. (Sess. Laws, p. 174, § 1, 2.)

So far as the question here is concerned, the letter law is not important. The contract was made before its enactment, and of course with reference to the old law.

On the part of Cornell, it is insisted, that the agreement to take a note for the last installment at three months was inconsistent with the idea of a lien or the vessel, as the event would occur to wit, leaving her port, in all human probability more than twelve days before the credit of three months would expire; and hence, no lien could have been in the contemplation of the parties as to this payment.

On the part of the libelant, it is claimed, that the whole of the contract price became due on the completion of the work, but that the last installment was to be paid by a note at three months. And as the note was not given or tendered, this installment became immediately due. The question is a close one, and I have entertained some doubts about it. Judge Ingersoll, who decided the case below, came to the conclusion that the lien existed, and enforced it by his decree. The mere giving of credit does not necessarily displace the lien. That has been held in several cases. The ground here is not that a credit was given, but that the credit is inconsistent with the idea of a lien for the reason, unless the boat should remain at her port for the three months, the lien would be lost by the terms of the statute; and that this must have been within the contemplation of the parties. The case of Peyroux vs. Howard (7 Peters, 344,) bears somewhat on this question. Here a contract giving an unconditional credit, extending beyond the time which the law gives to the lien, was considered as inconsistent with the idea of a lien, and operated as a waiver of it. The difference between that case and the present one is, the credit given here is not absolute, as in the above case, but conditional—that is, upon the owner's giving a note at three months; on neglecting or refusing to give which, the credit ceased; for, the demand then became immediately due and payable according to well-settled law. Now, it may be going too far to say that the builder must have intended to waive the lien on the event of the refusal to give the note, for the case comes down to that. I agree that he did, if the agreement was kept on the part of Cornell, and the note given. But on his refusal to keep the agreement in respect to this installment, there is certainly much justice in saying that the builder also should not be bound by it, but should be remitted to his rights independent of the contract. It may have been material to him, whether this balance should remain in account, or in a note upon which funds could be raised.

The State act is very strong and positive. It declares that such debt (one like the libelants) "shall be a lien upon such ship or vessel, &c., and shall be preferred to all other liens thereon except mariners' wages." There is no condition or qualification attached, as in cases of maritime liens, under the admiralty, except that the work is done on the vessel or supplies furnished. The affirmative, therefore, lies on the claimant to displace the lien. That it is insisted has been done by showing a contract inconsistent with any such lien; but this assumes that the contract has been fulfilled, in which case the inference is clear; but, is the party equally subject to this inference when it has been broken? It seems to me not. As I read the contract, the builder agrees to give three months' credit, on the owners giving him a note of that tenor; if not, then no credit was given. This is certainly the legal effect, in case of the refusal, and I do not see why it should not be considered as the meaning and intent of the parties.

Upon the whole, I am inclined to agree with the Court below, and affirm the decree.

For appellant—Messrs. Benedict, Burr & Benedict. For appellee—Mr. McMahon.

PROOF OF ORIGINAL DOCUMENTS BEFORE UNITED STATES COMMISSIONER.

Addison J. Comstock vs. Thomas Carnley and Don A. Cushman.—NELSON, C. J.—This is an action of trespass brought to recover the value of property seized upon by virtue of a process of attachment against one Darius C. Jackson in this City, by Carnley, Sheriff, in favor of Cushman, the plaintiff in the attachment. Comstock, the plaintiff in this suit, claims to have been the owner of the property. Several questions were reserved at the trial, and a verdict rendered for the plaintiff, subject to the opinion of the Court. Jackson and his partners, of Elyria, Ohio, had entered into a contract with the Junction Railroad Company in that State to construct a certain portion of it, and, among other things, it was agreed to take bonds of the Company and of other Corporations in payment for the work. A certain amount of these bonds were agreed to be advanced to the contractors on their giving security for the application of the proceeds to the construction of the road. Comstock, the present plaintiff, as claimed, gave this security; but insisted that the bonds, by way of indemnifying him, should be assigned to him, and also, the goods purchased by any of the proceeds should be deemed as belonging to him, and his property until applied in the way agreed. The goods in question were purchased out of the proceeds of some of these bonds, some portion in the name of Comstock, the rest in the name of the firm of Jackson. All the goods were purchased by Jackson. One of the bonds was also attached which was in the possession of Jackson. The case turns a good deal upon his deposition taken under the act of Congress ex parte, he residing more than one hundred miles from the place of trial. And the first question presented is, whether or not his deposition furnishes competent proof of the suretyship of Comstock in behalf of Jackson's loan to the Railroad Co. This proof is quite material, as it lays the foundation of the title of Comstock to the property in question. The original writing securing the Company was not produced before the United States Commissioner, and proved, but only a copy which Jackson testified was a correct copy. This copy is annexed. We think the proof produced incompetent. It was no higher than parol evidence of a written instrument, the original of which was in existence. It was in the hands of the Railroad Co. where, as I understand from the deposition, Jackson examined it and produced a copy before the Commissioner. The original should have been produced and proved before this officer, and he should have annexed a true copy in returning the deposition to the Court. Or if Jackson could not have obtained the original, it was competent to have examined the officers of the Company in whose custody the paper was. (9 Car. & p. 313.)

I entertain strong doubts, also, as to the competency of Jackson as a witness for the plaintiff in the case. It is put upon the ground that his interest is neutralized—that is, whichever way the case may result, he is liable. But, I am inclined to think, as the case stands, if the verdict should result in favor of the defendants, Jackson would not only be liable to Comstock for the property, but, as principal in the transaction out of which the litigation has arisen, he would be bound to indemnify Comstock, his surety, for the expenses of the litigation, which, if true, would disturb the balance of interest. It is not necessary, however, to express a definitive opinion upon this question, as there must be a new trial, and it will depend upon the facts as they may appear upon that trial.

The case is one, also, that should have been put to the Jury upon the question of fact whether or not, under the facts, and circumstances attending the purchase of the goods in question, and the dealings with the bonds, the property did not belong to Jackson's firm, and not to Comstock, the plaintiff. The case properly presented this question, and it belonged to the Jury to determine it.

For the reasons above, we think there must be a new trial, with costs to abide the event.

SUPREME COURT—GENERAL TERM—May 5.

Before Hon. Justices Mitchell, Roosevelt and Peabody.

THE LEMON SLAVE CASE.

On reaching this case yesterday, Mr. O'Conor, for Mr. Lemon, moved for its postponement until the first Monday in September, to obtain the opinions rendered in the Dred Scott case, which would have a great bearing on this suit.

Mr. Blunt desired the case to proceed at once, as there had already been too many postponements. Mr. Evarts desired to have the matter postponed, as he had been but recently retained, and wished time to examine the facts. He had tried to obtain the Dred Scott opinions, but could procure but thirty pages, whereas there would be about seven hundred in all.

The Chief Justice inquired whether this was a bona fide controversy, or merely a case got up for deciding an abstract question. If the alleged owner of the slaves had been indemnified, what question could there be for the Courts to pass upon?

Mr. O'Conor stated that even if the owner had been indemnified by a third party, he was not deprived of his remedy against the unlawful possessor; but he would inquire whether this case was fairly before the Court.

His Honor stated that he would think the matter over and render his decision as to the postponement this morning.

THE ARGUMENT ON THE QUO WARRANTO ON APPEAL.

After transacting some further business, the case of The People ex rel Fernando Wood vs. Simeon Draper was taken up. It was understood that the counsel should be limited to two hours each. The arguments used were substantially those advanced at the Special Term.

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS—MAY 5.

Before Hon. Judge Russell.

At the opening of the Court this morning a quorum of grand Jurors was not to be had, so the Judge was unable to deliver his charge.

Foster Brownlow, a German sailor, was charged with grand larceny. He stole fourteen brass faucets, valued at $45 50, from John O. Morse. The defence did not deny the crime, but urged that the defendant was drunk when he committed the larceny. The Jury, after an hour's consideration, brought in a verdict of petit larceny only. The prisoner was remanded for sentence.

No other cases were ready for trial, and the Court adjourned to to-morrow morning.

MARKET REPORTS.

Markets....Carefully reported for N.Y. Daily Times, NEW-YORK, Tuesday, May 5, 1857—5 P. M.

HIDES—Are quiet and languid,—with an accumulating supply in market.

IRON—Inactive, and somewhat nominal in price.

LEAD—Messrs. FABER & PERKINS,—in their circular for the America,—say: "Since the middle of this past month, purchases made to arrive have been coming in quite freely, as, also, some few lots not previously disposed of, and although there has been no pressure of lead upon the market, an absence of the usual trade demand has rendered transactions somewhat difficult, and sales could not be effected except at a concession of about ¾c. ₱ lb., and then only to a moderate extent—including 200@250 tons for export—the last prices paid being $5 25@$5 37½ ₱ 100 lbs. for Spanish, and $5 25@$5 43¾ for refined German and English, mostly on time, adding interest.

	Receipts in April.	Since Jan. 1, 1857.	Same time. 1856.
Foreign, tons	2,466	4,724	6,500
Coastwise, tons	67	402	190
Total	2,533	5 126	6,690

The stock of Lead on hand on the 1st instant, was estimated at 750 tons, against 3,500 tons at the corresponding date of last year.

LIME—Rockland, 95c. for Common; $1 15 for Lump, ₱ bbl.

MOLASSES—Sells rather slowly, at our quotations: Porto Rico, in hhds., at 60c.@70c; Cuba Muscovado, 55c.@63c.; Clayed Cuba, 52c.; and New-Orleans 74c.@76c. ₱ gallon.

NAVAL STORES—Resin, Tar and Crude Turpentine are less freely offered, while being in request, at full rates. Spirits Turpentine is more sought after, and is worth 48c. @48½c., cash, and 49c., short credit, ₱ gallon.

OILS—Whale is in fair demand, and is pretty firm. Sperm is inactive and languid. Linseed is in moderate request, at previous figures. Other kinds unaltered.

PROVISIONS—Pork is in better demand, and at firmer prices. Sales: 1,000 bbls, in lots, at $23 40@$23 50 for Mess, usual terms; $23 25 for Mess, cash to-morrow; $19 20 for Prime, usual terms, ₱ bbl. Cut Meats are in fair demand, and are worth 10¾c. @10¾c. for Hams, and 8¾c.@8¾c. for Shoulders, ₱ lb. Bacon is in request, and is held at 11¼c.@12¾c. ₱ lb. Lard still favors buyers. The transactions since our last reach about 470 bbls. and tes., mostly fair to prime, at 14c.@14¼c. ₱ lb. Beef is pretty brisk at full prices. The transactions since our last consist of 650 bbls., at $10 75@$11 50 for new Prime; $13@$14 for Country Mess; $15 50@$16 50 for repacked Western Mess, and $17@$17 50 for extra Western do., ₱ bbl. New Prime Mess Beef $23@$30 ₱ tce. Beef Hams $23@$24 ₱ bbl. Butter is in moderate demand and is worth 15c. @20c. for Ohio; 22c @28c for common to very good State, and 25c. @30c for prime to choice do., ₱ lb. Cheese is dull and heavy at 12c @13c. ₱ lb.

SPICES—Are quiet at about previous quotations.

SUGARS—Are in good demand and are steady. Sales have been reported since our last of about 825 hhds. Cuba, &c., in lots, at from 9¾c.@11½c.; with 130 boxes Havana at 10¾c.@12c. ₱ lb.

TALLOW—15,600 lbs. prime were obtained at 11¾c.@11¾c @ lb.

TOBACCO—The demand is light, but holders fully maintain their position. Sales since Friday: 63 hhds. Kentucky at 13c @18c. ₱ lb.; 209 bbls. Havana on private terms; 91 cases seed leaf at 26c.@35c.; 25 cases Florida and 10 bales Havana scrap on private terms, ₱ lb.

TEAS—Are in pretty good request and are very stiffly held.

WHISKY—Sales have been made of 800 bbls. Ohio and Prison at 29c.@30c.; mainly at 29c. ₱ gallon.

FREIGHTS—There was less competition among shipowners to obtain freight, and though this was sparingly offered, rates were somewhat firmer. For Liverpool, Cotton 2s. 6d.@3s. ₱ bale; Flour, 6d.@9d. ₱ bbl.; Grain, nominally 2d @3d. ₱ bush; Beef, 6d.@1s. ₱ tierce; Resin, 6d @1s. ₱ bbl.; and Heavy Goods, 7s. 6d.@12s. 6d. ₱ ton. ISAAC DURYEE.

TAMMANY HALL,

Opposite the Park and City Hall, New-York.

The undersigned having become sole proprietor of Tammany Hall, the original of the American hotels on the European plan, has had it completely renovated, redecorated and otherwise improved, to meet the requirements of the present time, and hopes thereby to increase the already large patronage he enjoys. Tammany Hotel is now open for the accommodation of ladies as well as of gentlemen. A handsome parlor for the use of ladies has been fitted up. The location of the Hotel is confessedly the most agreeable in the City, fronting the Park and City Hall, and overlooking the main thoroughfares and stage routes. The large restaurant connected with the Hotel will be found greatly improved, and is conducted under the immediate supervision of the proprietor. The lodging apartments have undergone many desirable changes, and are, for comfort, cleanliness and ventilation, second to none in the City. In short, both ladies and gentlemen will find Tammany Hotel of a character to command their constant support. CHARLES BROWN.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

REMOVAL.

In consequence of the unprecedented increase of EVANS & CO.'S GREAT GIFT-BOOK SALE, they have removed from No. 409 Broadway, to the more spacious premises, between Bleecker and Amity sts., Lafarge Building, New-York.

No. 577 BROADWAY,

Messrs. EVANS & CO., grateful for the immense patronage which they have received, would respectfully inform the public, generally, that they have greatly added to their stock of books, and increased the number and value of their gifts, until neither can be surpassed by any establishment in the City. The business is conducted upon an honest and liberal principle, and a gift varying in value from 25 cents to $100 accompanies every book sold. Will be open for City trade on Thursday, May 7. Orders from the country promptly attended to. Catalogues of books and gifts sent to any address, on receipt of application.

GRACIE AMBER.

BY MRS. MARY A. DENISON,

Author of "Home Pictures," "What Not," "Carrie Hamilton," &c.

1 vol, 12mo Price $1 25.

Pronounced by the best judges—and many of them—one of the most thrilling and engaging books that has appeared for many years. Its motto is, that "though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not go unpunished." The story is of love, crime, struggles with poverty, temptation, suspicion and misfortune, under which innocence, gentleness and beauty are for a season oppressed and crushed; but in the progress of the tale they come forth brightened by the fiery trial and joy crowns the days of those who suffer most. Gracie Amber is one of the most beautiful creations of genius; "to know her is to love her." Mother Mott is a rare old character, whose quaintness enlivens the story. Jupe is a curious fragment of humanity; less than men, and yet little more than brute. Paul Halburton, an elegant villain, with money and power, and the veiled lady, a mysterious being thwarting his devilish designs, and a score of other subordinate characters, are handled with consummate skill, deepening and involving the plot that grows darker and more exciting till the great religious tenets of Providence—to reward the good and punish the evil—is brought out with admirable effect.

The book cannot fail to win the favor of the public, and to carry lessons of purity, honor and truth to every one who reads it

From the New-York Observer:

A powerful, thrilling story, told with great skill and effect, illustrating a great truth, and enforcing it so as to make a profound impression. Jupe is a creature whom we love. Jupe is an original name and excellent dinary characters, and the several parties introduced are managed with admirable tact. The book is decidedly one of the very best works of fiction that our lady writers have given us in many years, and we shall be greatly surprised if it is not popular with the reading community.

THE CHILD-MEDIUM.

A Tale of Spiritualism.

By the Author of "My Confession; The Story of a Woman's Life," etc. 12mo., cloth. Price 75 cents.

The gifted authoress says, in her Preface: "In the following story, it has never been my intention to influence the reader for or against Spiritualism. I am no believer in it myself, and shall not, probably, further investigate the subject. That the phenomena, bearing the title, are gradually assuming a most wonderful form, and are destined, at some day, very materially to affect the prospects of this good, free land, no one can doubt who remembers that, within a few years, Spiritualism was unknown, and that at the present time there are not many families in the Union who do not boast a "medium" among their numbers.

I have had no other object, in preparing this volume, than to present to the public, in the form of a domestic story, the various incidents of Spiritualism which, from time to time, have fallen under my observation. Some of them I have witnessed myself, and, for many of the others, I have the best of living attestation."

THE ELVES.

LEGEND.—The mountain forests of Pastoria are inhabited, it is said, by Pixies, Spirits and Elves, who, like the Phantom Dancers of Germany, delight to entrap travelers into their realms, and torment them with their mischievous antics. Having the power of transferring the spirit, they often, in their malicious gambols, give life to the newly dead. Statues, rocks and trees are seen fantastically moving in the street; but it is only during the day they retain their fictitious existence; at the approach of NIGHT they resume their immovability.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The trial of Mrs. CUNNINGHAM, for the murder of Dr. BURDELL, was continued yesterday. As on the previous day, the rooms were filled with spectators before the opening of the Court. Soon after the roll of the Jurors had been called, the District-Attorney proceeded to open the case for the prosecution. He referred briefly to the difficulty under which he apprehended the prosecution labored, because the prisoner on trial was a woman, and spoke of the peculiar relations existing between the prisoner and Dr. BURDELL; her motives for the commission of the crime, and many other interesting peculiarities of the case, as he expected to prove them. During his speech Mrs. CUNNINGHAM sat listening, and apparently not seriously discomposed by any of the unfavorable declarations made concerning her. The other parties were in Court, as on the previous day, with the exception of Miss AUGUSTA CUNNINGHAM, who was not present. The first witness called was Dr. FRANCIS, who described minutely the position and character of the fifteen wounds found on the body of Dr. BURDELL, and also of the mark of a ligature around his neck. The mark, when he saw the body (which was on the morning after the murder) was distinct on the front and on either side, and disappeared altogether before reaching the posterior part of the neck. This gave him the impression that the ligature had been applied from behind and that the neck had been drawn backward. It had been said that the wound under the arm must have been inflicted by a left-handed person. Such had been the Doctor's impression at first, but reflection had brought him to doubt the propriety of relying upon such an opinion. HANNAH CONLAN, the next witness, testified to her residence in the house of Mrs. CUNNINGHAM, and to the circumstances of interest in the case, before and after the murder, the same as when she was before the Coroner's Jury. While testifying concerning the unpleasant relations existing between Dr. BURDELL and Mrs. CUNNINGHAM, she added, what she said she did not recollect at that time, and that was that after the lady who came to hire the house had retired Mrs. CUNNINGHAM came to the kitchen and asked what the lady's business was. HANNAH told her Dr. BURDELL was going to let the house to her, when Mrs. CUNNINGHAM said the Doctor might not live to rent the house or sign the papers. Mrs. STANSBURY, JOHN J. BURDELL, MARY DONAHOE and Dr. MAYNE, testified substantially the same as when before the Coroner's Jury. The trial will be continued this morning.

The steamship Kangaroo, from Liverpool on the 22nd of April, arrived at this port last evening. Her advices are of the same date as those brought by the Indian at Quebec, a telegraphic summary of which appeared in yesterday's impression. We have not much additional intelligence to report. The Neufchatel difficulty, it is said, has assumed a more decided turn, and one likely to end favorably. The amount and not the principle of compensation to Prussia has now to be settled, and the honorary title of Prince of Neufchatel is offered to be conceded in an indirect way. It is stated that the Prussian Government has made formal complaints to our Government against the ill-treatment of Prussian emigrants on board United States vessels. From extracts, which we give elsewhere, from the Paris and Madrid correspondence of the London Times, it will be seen that strong hopes are expressed of an amicable adjustment of the quarrel between Spain and Mexico. NEIL DOW had arrived in England. The subject of his visit is the propagation of Maine Law doctrines.

We have received files of Mexican journals to the 9th instant. They do not contain the accounts of the Archbishop's arrest, but matters were tending to such a crisis. Two Priests had been arrested—one for preaching furiously against the Constitution, and the other for refusing the rites of the Church to a professed Liberal. The tyranny exercised just now by the Ecclesiastical authorities is almost too glaring for even Mexicans to bear, and the energy of President COMONFORT in arresting the Archbishop may have a salutary effect. It was rumored that the British difficulty was settled, but Mexican journals are not at all clear on the subject. Particulars were not known.

Several heavy failures of dry-goods merchants were reported in Boston yesterday. Among the firms mentioned are WHITNEY, FENNO & Co.; SHAW, SAMPSON & BRAMHALL; CHAPMAN, LORD & DALE; BUGBEE, HIDDEN & Co.; and PRINCE & POST. The total liabilities, it is supposed, will exceed a million dollars.

The U. S. Mail steamship Illinois, Capt. BOGGS, left yesterday for Aspinwall, with about 600 passengers, among whom were C. H. HEMPSTEAD, Esq., U. S. Treasurer at San Francisco, and his bride: Lieut. STRAIN, going to join the Cyane at Aspinwall; Lieut. BROOME, with 25 marines for the relief of the sloop-of-war Decatur at Panama; Bishop JANES, of the M. E. Church, going upon a visit to the Methodist E. churches in California; Ex-Governor BIGLER, Minister to Chili, who first visits San Francisco to see his family; FREDERICK E CHURCH, the artist, who is bound on a professional tour to Equidor; and R. BIGLER, Esq., son of Senator BIGLER of Pennsylvania. Besides these there was a fair sprinkling of California politicians.

The new law passed by the Legislature appears to have had a salutary effect on the bogus ticket sellers, as one or two of the principal concerns are closed up, and the proprietors of some others are reported as about going into the country. There were no noticeable cases of swindling passengers by the Illinois. If there were any, it was done upon so moderate a scale as not to excite complaint before the sailing of the steamer. The runners, however, are said to be busy consulting lawyers, some of whom represent the law as unconstitutional, but hesitate to advise open resistance to its provisions.

The steamship Vanderbilt left yesterday, at 1 o'clock, for Southampton and Havre, with 212 passengers and $445,000 in specie. Among the passengers is Mrs. Commodore VANDERBILT and servant.

A committee of the Aldermen had under consideration yesterday the proposition to remove the landings of the river steamboats to points further up town. Messrs. MCCURDY, BARSTOW and KELLY earnestly opposed the change, while a petition from over 20 respectable mercantile firms set forth the necessity for the removal. The Committee will take further testimony.

The new Board of Police Commissioners made a beginning yesterday in the line of their official duties, and it was of a character to inspire a good degree of public confidence in the action of the Board. The first offered the post of Superintendent of Police to the present Chief, Mr. MATSELL, who, however, declined it for private reasons—intending, as he states, soon to retire from the Department. The Board then unanimously elected JAMES R. WHITING to this office, which we presume he will accept. Both these gentlemen are members of the Democratic Party, and the new Board could not have given the public stronger pledges of their determination to administer the affairs of the Department with exclusive regard to the public good, and not for purposes of political partizanship, than by the action they have taken. Mr. MATSELL's experience and well-known efficiency as a public officer indicated him to the public as preëminently the man for the post of Superintendent; and we venture to say that nine-tenths of the public will be very agreeably surprised to learn that the position was tendered to him. Mr. WHITING's appointment will be equally popular; for he has the reputation of ability, executive energy, devotion to the public interests, and a very large experience in trying, if not in detecting and arresting, criminals. The judicious action of the Board will do much more towards enlisting public sentiment on its behalf than mass meetings or any amount of public oratory and newspaper laudations could possibly accomplish. The Board yesterday also adopted a code of rules and regulations for their own government.

Judge NELSON decided a very important case for furnishers of supplies to vessels in the United States Circuit Court yesterday—the case of the Highlander. Its interest is mainly derived from the light which it throws indirectly upon the case of the Sultana, decided by the United States Supreme Court recently, the opinion in which was delivered by the same Judge, and which was thought to have pretty much done away with all liens upon vessels for supplies. This case would seem to except domestic vessels from the operation of that decision.

At the meeting of the Board of Almshouse Governors, on Tuesday, upon reading the minutes, it was moved to reconsider the proceedings of Thursday last, in reference to the resignation of Governor TAYLOR, and the election of Mr. VAN RIPER as his successor. A letter was read from the latter gentleman, in which he says that, as some doubts exist as to the supposed legality of his appointment, and having no desire to appear in any antagonistic position, he begs to decline participating in the recent action of the Board, until all doubts as to the legality of such appointment are removed. The letter was ordered to be placed on the amended minutes, by a vote of seven to two.

At the meeting of the Historical Society on Tuesday evening a couple of daguerreotypes of WASHINGTON and his lady, from miniatures painted in 1791, were presented to the Society. Two interesting papers were read. One, to prove that SARAH RAPELYE, the first native of European blood was born at Albany, and not at the Wallabout Bay. The other consisted of reminiscences of Governor CLINTON.

REYNOLDS & Co., the contractors for the street-cleaning of most of the down-town wards, have not yet, it seems, come into possession of the machine-sweepers. Yesterday the patentee, Mr. SMITH, gave two of his machines a trial in Brooklyn for the satisfaction of our City Inspector MORTON, as to their method, capabilities and economy. They seemed to do all that was promised for them. The City Inspector, under the new Charter, is the party to whom the contractors are directly responsible.

A fight on the "bite and gouge, rough-and-tumble" plan, took place in Chambers-street, near Centre-street, about 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, between a Fourth-Ward bruiser and a younger, lighter, and less notorious man. The contest lasted about ten minutes, and was witnessed by a large number. The Fourth Warder got the worst of the encounter, but his friends, who called him "Patsy," declared him able to whip his adversary if he had only been sober. The police did not interfere.

Coroner GAMBLE held an inquest on Monday at No. 114 West Thirty-third-street, upon the body of JOHN RAUL, a negro boy, aged 17 years, who was suffocated on Sunday last while cleaning the flues of the steam saw mills at the foot of Twenty-eighth-street, near Eleventh-avenue.

No claimants appeared yesterday before the United States District Court for the case of guns sought to be smuggled recently into this port on board the Frederick Gibhard. Hence the guns will be sold soon at public sale. Their value is about $500.

The examination in the case of the alleged slaver Merchant, which was set down for yesterday, was adjourned over to Thursday. All the arrested crew are still confined in Eldridge-street Jail.

Mr. JOSEPH M. FOSTER, arrested in Brooklyn last week upon suspicion of setting fire to his dry goods store on Fulton-avenue, was examined before Justice BLACHLEY, when the suspicious circumstances were so explained that he was honorably discharged.

The Health Officer of Brooklyn reports 116 deaths during the week ending Saturday last.

The Brooklyn Board of Education held a regular meeting yesterday, when the salary of the new officers, Secretary, Bookkeeper, &c., was fixed at $1,200.

The Brooklyn Ferry Companies for the present week do not run their boats after dark. The third boat of the Company is promised to be ready in about three months. For two or three days longer the Roosevelt-street slip is used as the depôt for the New-York side—the James' Slip building rapidly going up.

At the Farmers' Club, yesterday, the subject of ventilating buildings, public and private, was discussed by Prof. MAPES, Mr. PELL, Prof. NASH and others.

Yesterday a cartman named MICHAEL GLENNON, undertook to drive across the railroad track, in Jersey City, at the Newark-avenue crossing when a train was approaching, and was run over and instantly killed.

SIDEWALK INCUMBRANCES.—Can no earthly remedy be devised for the nuisance near the Post-Office, of a permanent crowd of little and big loafers, who seem to have no other occupation than clogging up the entrance to the General Delivery, on the side of Nassau-street? In so narrow a thoroughfare as Nassau-street is, every unnecessary impediment ought to be removed; but, on the contrary, some dozen apple-stands are allowed to occupy half of the sidewalk between Liberty and Cedar streets, and, in addition to this, a colony from the Five Points impedes the passage of persons who desire access to the places for delivering letters. Policemen are seldom seen on the spot, or, if they occasionally saunter that way, it is with their hands in their pockets, apparently immersed in thought over the respective chances of success of the Mayor and the Police Commissioners, in the suit which has just commenced, but wholly regardless of duty. We recommend attention to the subject to the Post-Office authorities themselves, and request them to make such requisitions upon the City authorities as shall lead to reform.

Conspiracies Against the Law.

Our City swarms with organized conspiracies to resist the execution of obnoxious laws. The Liquor Dealers were first in the field,—but their example proved contagious. The Emigrant Runners have also combined to protect each other in resisting the statute which interrupts their villainy. The merchants talk about an organized opposition to the new Port Wardens' bill. Mayor WOOD has drilled the Police and the Common Council into a position of resistance, and a Convention of Democrats is about to be formed for the express purpose,—not of effecting the repeal, but of resisting the execution, of sundry enactments which menace their partisan and selfish schemes.

Now all this is a novelty, and one, too, of a very unpromising character. Hitherto with the public the meaning of the word law was understood to be—LAW, and nothing less. Legislators were presumed to be competent and discreet, although fallible men, and the results of their labors, whether agreeable or not, were accepted as fixed facts, to be acquiesced in and not evaded, until deliberately and judicially set aside by some higher and still more august authority. Lex dubia was not a term under which statutes and enactments could be categoried simply and solely because they conflicted with the interests or tastes of a few individuals. Earnest and careful scrutiny was exercised before a fixed opinion was formed adverse to their constitutionality, the first presumption always being that they were in accordance with the Constitution. If a bill or an act encountered disfavor with the few or the many, they took open ground against it, labored for its repeal and trusted to the sober second thought of the people to procure more acceptable legislation. Thus laws were made, obeyed while they lasted, adjudged invalid by the competent courts and thus annulled, or found inexpedient and then expunged from the statute book; but it did not enter into the mind of any one to withhold assent from them in advance of any adverse decision, on the assumption of their invalidity.

It is only within the last very few years, that classes of persons who have felt aggrieved, and whose pecuniary or political immunities have been encroached upon by legislative acts, have resorted to the method of organizing themselves, for the purpose of systematically resisting laws yet in force. The new plan was evidently suggested by the conviction that comparatively small amounts of money, judiciously contributed by a sufficient number of individuals, would enable them to worry the constituted authorities, if not into sympathy for, and connivance with wrong, at least into desisting from prosecutions. Each organization is, in reality, a regularly constituted insurance office for the commission of crime, and has its President, Secretaries, Treasurer, Board of Directors, through whom enticing appeals for patronage are made to the public, with the guarantee, on certain expressed conditions, that disobedience of the law shall not affect injuriously the pockets or prospects of its clients. Thus, for and in consideration of —— dollars and —— cents, the "Liquor Dealers' Association" insures the retailer of bad rum against the unpleasant consequences which might derive from his traffic. Equally, for an adjustad premium, the "Emigrant Runner Association" insures the gouging, bullying, swindling emigrant kidnapper in the continuance of his miscreant infringements of law and ordinance. In like manner, on a scale of more wholesale, and therefore more "respectable," insurance against the results of disobedience, we witness an Anti-Quarantine Law Association, an Anti-Port Wardens' Bill Association, an association to resist the new Pilot Laws, an anti-Charter combination, not to speak of the movement against the Metropolitan Police bill, which bids fair to be decided where all questions of constitutionality should be alone discussed, viz., in the Courts.

In the special message concerning State legislation on City matters, recently laid before the Common Council by Mayor WOOD, he asks, speaking of the Charter: "What are our duties, under this instrument?" His reply is: "We should comply with all such parts of it, ODIOUS AND UNPALATABLE AS THEY MAY BE, which, in the opinion of COMPETENT COUNSEL, do not conflict with the Constitution of the United States, or of the State of New-York." And again: "Such parts of it as are consistent with the Constitution have been legally enacted, and we must submit." These words cover the whole ground before us, in relation to all laws which may be made by the Legislature. It is undeniably the right of every one who has derived an opinion from "competent counsel," adverse to the constitutionality of a law, to resist it, simply, solely, and purely because it is unconstitutional. But the only counsel "competent" to authorize such resistance is a Court having jurisdiction of the case, and it is utterly wrong for a citizen, or an organization of citizens, to refuse obedience to an act or statute, on no higher intrinsic ground than that it is "odious and unpalatable." Unfortunately for the consistency of Mayor WOOD, he enumerates, in the very document which contains the laudable sentiments we have just quoted, no less than eleven bills of the late Legislature, against which he sounds the note of opposition, on much lower grounds than any opinion of "competent counsel" that they are unconstitutional.

Excepting in some rare and extraordinary cases, the constitutionality of every law ought to be taken for granted, however "odious and unpalatable" it may be, until it is clearly proved to be unconstitutional. A contrary theory would lead, at once, to anarchy. If pecuniary aid is invoked to the support of such anarchy, and resistance of and disobedience to obnoxious laws is put within the reach of all classes of individuals by the subscription of a small sum of money, society might as well resolve itself into its original elements, and the fundamental rule, "might makes right," be established as the rule of a modern era of savage civilization. Why should there not be a Burglars' Mutual Protection Association, or a Swindlers' Safety Union, or a Joint Gambling House and Brothel Reliance Company, or an anti Meum and Tuum Monopoly, or even a general Anti-Law, Order, and Good-Government Brotherhood, in favor of Free Crime, as well as some of the frivolous, iniquitous Committees of Safety, and Statute-breaking Insurance offices, which have become so rife in this City and its neighborhood? If the latter are allowable, so are the former. If the one class obtains impunity by success, the other may hope for the same. The tendency of the precedents which have been established, is to perpetuate a monstrous, hideous evil, which it would not require many years to render irremediable, except by means of a revolution.

There ought to be latent good sense enough in the compound Knickerbocker-Yankee foundations of our City's prosperity and strength to resist the beginnings of mischief which spring up from month to month, and from year to year, under the auspices of corrupt and rotten politicians. We fear, however, that an apathetic state of submission to evil, as cheaper and more comfortable than the agitations which attend opposing it, is rapidly gaining ground among the so-called "middle class" respectables who constitute the bona, sinew and solid worth of every community. This is to be greatly deplored. Inactivity on the part of so preponderating a class, gives audacity and hardihood to the desperadoes of "high and low degree" who are the bane of this metropolis, and plunges us every day deeper and deeper into difficulty. Let the PEOPLE—not of the pot house, and political or clap-trap gang stripe—but the real, old-fashioned PEOPLE begin to make their strength felt, and there will be an end forever to such modern usurpations as organized conspiracies to resist the law.

A Case of Circumstantial Evidence.

There are many extraordinary rumors flying round the legal circles of our City in connection with the case of mistaken identity which has figured in the press for the last few days, under the caption of the "Newburg Tragedy."

These rumors, if we were to credit them, would make the "tragedy" no tragedy at all: or, rather would compel us to infer that the case is one of "fabricated evidence"—such as not infrequently turns up in our criminal records at juncture when the decision of an important cause may be biased by the creation and overthrow of parallel circumstantial proof, in a case that can be shown to be fictitious at the proper moment.

Of this fabricated evidence we had recently one notorious instance in New-Jersey, and not far from the scene of the present excitement. A gentleman named MOORE, having a civil suit for $40,000 against a person of the name of LIVINGSTON, the defendant produced against the plaintiff circumstantial evidence of a conspiracy to murder; and the two important witnesses in the case were a girl of doubtful character and a colored man brought down from New-York. Keeping this case in view, let us now glance briefly at the main facts in the Newburg mystery.

About five miles to the north of Newburg, the corpse of a young woman, apparently between 20 and 25 years of age, was found in a plowed field, just within the fence; "and it seems," says Mr. N. REEVE, who wrote to us on the 30th of April—the day of the finding—"as if she had been murdered in the road, and thrown over the fence. There were marks of much violence about her neck and head."

A Coroner's Inquest then sat upon the body, and the question of identity was apparently disposed of by the evidence of Mr. JOHN COOLEY, of Shawangunk, who swore that the body was that of SARAH C. BLOOM, and that he had known deceased for many years; and the further evidence of JANE BLOOM, who testified that the corpse was that of her sister SARAH. Now the body, be it remarked, had many peculiarities—a scar over the left eyebrow—a scar on the middle joint of the middle finger of the left hand—a sore on one of the arms—the two middle toes of the left foot grown together as far as the first joint—a finger-mark, as of a ring, on one particular finger—a mole on the inside of the left leg, half-way between the knee and ancle—the toe-nails having a curiously-curved and compressed appearance—and the right front incisor-tooth being obliquely stuffed with gold. Having all these peculiarities before her, and in view, the witness JANE gave evidence that her sister SARAH had marks "identical in form, position, and number; and that the body before her was her sister's body."

Now here are a number of coincidences—supposing the witness to speak the truth—that nothing short of a miraculous revelation could justify the Jury in disbelieving; and taken in connection with the fact that Miss SARAH BLOOM had suddenly and mysteriously disappeared—no clue to her whereabouts being discoverable—there was a mass of evidence in favor of the body being hers to which a lawyer experienced in criminal cases could only have objected that there was a great deal too much of it. Nature's way of making evidence does not deal in such complicities of corroboration. When the chief witness in the Livingston case produced a carpet-bag, hammer and poison-vial, which she said Dr. MOORE had given to her, a shrug passed round the inner circle of the bar, and this whisper followed it: "She is trying to prove too much."

But Coroners, even in New-York, are not famed for metaphysical acumen, nor are Jersey jurymen more gifted than their brethren of this City. A Mr. WILLIAM JENKINS, of Newburg, who had been last seen in company with the supposed deceased on the Tuesday night preceding SARAH BLOOM's disappearance, was now detained on suspicion of being the principal in her murder; and though he told a plain, straightforward tale, and pointed out dissimilarities of a very striking kind between the actual deceased and the girl he was suspected of having murdered, the tide of public sentiment set full against him, and its fast-rising waves—gathering impetus from their own motion—soon either overbore or obliterated all those minuter details on which the defence of the accused would have to rest.

On last Sunday morning the corpse was removed from the Court-house, "attended by an immense concourse of citizens and strangers," and interred in the burying ground of the Episcopal Church, where Rev. Mr. BUCK, assisted by Rev. Dr. FORSYTH, performed the impressive services of the dead,—the former taking for text a scriptural proverb which clearly enough indicates the character of the young woman whose funeral rites the Reverend gentleman believed himself to be performing:—"The way of the transgressor is hard." He regarded the supposed murder of SARAH BLOOM as a "solemn lesson and exemplification of the inevitable tendency and result when a loose rein has been given to the debasing passions," and so forth. This settles the reputation of the supposed deceased, and suggests the analogy of the chief witness in the Livingston fabrication.

Now, be it remarked, that the body was interred hastily, and without any competent medical evidence—at least none that has found its way to us—to show that the deceased did actually die of the wounds and other marks of violence which were visible "about her neck and head;" no sufficient autopsy was made to demonstrate that these marks were not designedly inflicted on a body already dead; and we have now before us the strongest evidence that, whether murdered or not, the girl had been washed and laid out after death as if for regular interment; and that, instead of having been thrown rudely over the fence, after death she had been carefully laid down in a position most likely to attract attention, and with all possible respect that the nature of such disposition would allow.

The body was stretched to its full length, the hands were folded across the breast, and the eyelids had been dutifully closed—the under garments were not soiled or crumpled, as they must have been if there had been a struggle. On the contrary, they were fresh, as if from the bureau drawer, were smoothed down with all the usual solemnity, and the gown or "outer garment was drawn carefully over the face." Still further proof that she had been undressed and laid out after death, and then redressed and placed where she was found for a purpose, may be seen in the fact that the long strings in her underclothing were not tied in front, as is the usual and almost universal way, but clumsily knotted behind—a mistake which no woman could have committed, had a woman been consulted in the getting up of this extremely singular "tragedy!" But none of these circumstances seem to have had any weight with the Jury, or, if noticed, they were rejected as inconsistent with the Coroner's "theory."

At, or immediately preceding, this funeral, a colored woman turns up who says that she suspects the deceased—a girl of pure white blood—to be either her grand-daughter or niece, (for the point is variously stated.) This colored woman said that her missing relative "had a breastpin similar to the one found near the body;" and also that "the underclothes looked much like her grand-daughter's." This colored woman "not applying to the proper authorities," says our reporter, "was unable to obtain access to the remains, but told her story to a knot of eager listeners;" after which she "disappeared as suddenly as she came," returning to New-York, (without mentioning any name, or having seen what she professed to have gone up to see,) "by the Hudson River train at 9 o'clock" on the morning of the 4th, after which all trace of her is LOST!

This mysterious story circulating among "eager listeners" at Newburg on the Sunday of the funeral—prepared the way for the sudden reappearance of Miss SARAH C. BLOOM, a girl whose character we have referred to, on the succeeding morning. On Monday, at 9 o'clock, Miss BLOOM appeared in Court in perfect health, and swore that she had never heard of what nearly every other soul in the State had been talking about for some days—her own supposed violation and murder—until informed of it the day before (the very time of the colored woman's visit) by a person whose name she at first swore she had forgotten. Within a period of twenty-four hours, or less, she swore she had forgotten the name of the person who acquainted her that her reputed murder had been the subject of judicial investigation for several days preceding, at a place not a dozen miles distant.

The body had been found on Thursday—the inquest commenced on Friday, and Mr. JENKINS was arrested—on Saturday JANE BLOOM and Mr. COOLEY identified the body; on Sunday happened the funeral and the colored woman's visit; and all this time Miss SARAH C. BLOOM, the central figure of excitement, remained in "the Widow SALLIE DOUGHERTY's" house—one of her usual places of resort—unconscious, or pretending to be unconscious, of the cause of the whole proceeding.

Finally, we learn that the corpse was that of a female a good deal taller than Sarah and that its features were utterly unlike, though a sister swore to their identity, and to a variety of marks such as few persons have upon their bodies—such as no two persons ever had together, and exactly alike, since the vitalizing of the clay from which Adam was moulded.

Certain it is—whether murdered or not—that the dead body had been undressed and prepared for interment before its disposition in the field: this design was afterwards changed; the clothes were hurriedly and clumsily put on, and a girl of doubtful character disappeared for awhile from the public eye, in a way that argues predetermined avoidance. A colored woman goes up from New-York, prepares the public mind for a surprise, and suddenly returns, leaving no trace of name or residence behind her. A case of the strongest circumstantial evidence has been got up, corroborated, universally talked about, universally believed, and at the proper moment the whole is swept away, without leaving the slightest shadow of a foundation behind to tell us why it was ever received or credited.

These are the simple facts of the case up to the present moment. They need no comment, much as they may seem to invite it.

THE MARRIAGE CONTRACT.—A case of breach of promise of marriage has recently been tried at Rochester, in which the following is given as the substance of the Judge's charge to the Jury:

The Judge charged that it was not necessary to maintain the existence of a promise of marriage to prove that defendant in express words or terms made a promise to plaintiff. Any circumstances which usually accompany parties while holding the relation of an engagement of marriage might properly be laid before a Jury, and if sufficient to warrant the opinion that such an engagement existed, it was all the law required. It is not necessary that there should be a promise of marriage in direct phraseology—no formal promise is required. Frequent visits of the parties—retiring from the society of others—seeking to be apart by themselves—expressions of attachment—presents—going together to places of amusement—walks and occasional remarks in hearing of others, are circumstances usually relied upon to prove that a marriage engagement exists, and if such are strong enough to produce conviction upon the mind, they are all that is necessary to answer the law.

This may be good law:—but it puts the highest, most solemn and most binding contract which man or woman can make, upon a good deal lower ground than contracts for the purchase of goods and chattles to the amount of a hundred dollars. Suppose the rule should be adopted, that talking about purchasing a horse, or contracting for personal service, or for any thing of the kind,—frequent calls and conversations upon that business,—treating the subject as if it were closed,—remarks in the hearing of others calculated to produce the impression that such a contract had been made,—that these things were to be "all that is necessary to answer the law" and establish the fact of the engagement; what would be thought of such a law by sane men? And yet they are deemed sufficient to show that a man and woman have entered into a contract which is to affect the whole life of both, and which death alone can sever.

There is certainly something wrong in the public law of marriage. If it is a civil contract, it ought to be assimilated more nearly to other contracts, in regard to the manner of its being entered into. It ought either to be more solemn and important at the outset, or less solemn and binding after it has been made.

NEW-YORK CUSTOM-HOUSE.—The Philadelphia Evening Journal reiterates its charges against the officers of the New-York Custom-House, to which we have already referred. It gives, however, nothing more tangible or specific than was contained in its previous statements, but thus responds to an intimation that if it has any facts to sustain its asseveration, it should lay them before the proper authorities, at Washington.

We reply that the proof will be forthcoming in due season. In the meanwhile, our neighbor need not be impatient about the action of the proper authorities at Washington. His suggestion in that particular has been anticipated. The attention of the Secretary of the Treasury has been called to the subject, and he will be furnished with information enough not only to justify, but to imperatively require his interference. Mr. COBB is a man not apt to flinch when a grave public wrong clearly demands correction at his hands, and we predict that he will at the right time, do all that the exigency really requires.

We assure our Philadelphia cotemporary that we have no feeling in regard to this matter which will interfere, in the slightest degree, with our treating the case as it may prove to deserve. We are very glad to learn from the Journal that the matter is to receive the official attention of the Secretary of the Treasury. If upon inquiry the charges shall prove to have been well founded, we shall join heartily in the demand for punishment of the offenders and reform of the abuses. If, on the contrary, they shall appear to have been the offspring of malicious jealousy, on the part of our neighbors, we shall take the liberty of inviting them to reflect seriously upon the baseness of such a rivalry.

AN ABSURD BOSTON NOTION.—The Boston Traveller says:

"We, as a people, are said to be degenerating in physique. There is still, however, much difference in bodily proportions and development in favor of Bostonians, as against New-Yorkers. We trust the difference may be increased, and that the Athens of America may be Athenian in the rugged and healthy stature of its children, no less than in the careful culture of their minds."

We can very well afford to smile benignantly at a good many of the absurd assumptions of superiority on the part of Boston, and if it is any comfort to our Down East friends to compare themselves with the Athenians, we have not the slightest desire to deprive them of such an innocent but perfectly absurd delusion. We are very thankful that New-York does not resemble Athens, and cannot be likened to it. Athens never knew the luxury or convenience of an Aqueduct, and though Mayor WOOD is but an indifferent kind of a Pericles, in a thousand other things we beat the Athenians out and out. But, as to the ridiculous assertion of the Traveller that New-Yorkers are inferior to Bostonians in their "bodily proportions," we shall not permit such a slander to pass uncontradicted. We know of no other way of settling this question but by picking out half a dozen of our Tom Hyers and sending them on to Boston to flog double their number of the solid men of that provincial town. The amiable wish of our Boston cotemporary that the difference between us in bodily proportions "may be increased," of course implies a desire that we should deteriorate still more. We would advise our neighbors to remember "the well-known fable of Æsop" about the ox and the frog. The Traveller should travel a little to get rid of its provincialisms.

A POLITICIAN'S FAITH.—L. O'B. BRANCH, Esq., has accepted the Democratic nomination for Congress, in the Raleigh District of North Carolina, and published a very long letter devoted wholly to a subject which is becoming a favorite topic in the Southern States,—the disposal of the surplus revenues of the Federal Government. Mr. BRANCH is in favor of distributing this money among the States,—but if it can be used to "dissolve the icy barriers of Spanish pride," and lead to the acquisition of Cuba, he would favor such an appropriation of it. That it may be thus employed, he thinks, probable for the following reasons:

"Gold moves armies and is a plaything for children. It steels the robber to crime and is charity's choicest gift. It unlocks the prison gates and opens wide the doors of palaces. Neither princes nor apostles are proof against its temptations, and it leads to empire as it betrayed our Saviour. Gold—all-powerful gold—may acquire for us the key to the Gulf.

Such a solution of the problem of the surplus, would fill me with joy and the whole nation with gladness.

"L. O'B. BRANCH."

The various deeds which are enumerated as among the victories of Gold would not commend it very strongly to the love and admiration of people in general. But Mr. BRANCH looks to an agency which "betrayed our Saviour" as among the most highly-prized weapons of his political warfare.

THE MANIA OF THE PHILADELPHIANS REVIVED.—We had supposed that the old mania with which our neighbors in Philadelphia have been so often afflicted, of "steam communication with Europe," had entirely died out, and become an obsolete idea; but it has broken out afresh it seems, and may be regarded as a chronic affection. We learn from the Bulletin that the Philadelphia Board of Trade, at their meeting on Monday night, took steps for restoring the line of steamers that had been transferred to this City from the Delaware. Such perseverance as this is really marvellous, and we should not wonder if the Philadelphians should keep a line of steamships running to Liverpool regardless of expense, merely to gratify the local pride of the people of that prosperous city, who could well afford to indulge in such a luxury. Here we have a private citizen in New-York who built a superb steamer merely to take his family to Europe on a pleasure excursion. The Philadelphians ought certainly to be able to do as much for the credit of their city. But then the peculiar hardship of their case is that the Delaware will freeze over two or three months out of the year, during which their steamer will be compelled to put into the port of New-York, a proceeding which fills our amiable and ambitious neighbors with inexpressible disgust.

Italian Opera.

The "Traviata" will be given to night, for the last time. Between the second and third acts Signor ARDITI will make his appearance in a new scena.

CONCERT.

Mr. CRAWFORD, a famous singing lecturer on Scottish song, gives one of his entertainments to-night, at Dodworth's Rooms. The programme is excellent.

THE NEW PORT WARDENS.—The ship Wabash, now repairing at the Dry Dock, was ordered there on the certificate and survey of one of the new Port Wardens—not of one of the old Marine Surveyors, as was incorrectly stated yesterday. The Port Wardens assure us that so far from being entirely out of work they are really doing the principal business of the port. They made 38 surveys yesterday.

It is said that there has recently been a large emigration of German Turners from Cincinnati to Minnesota, where the Turners' Association have begun a settlement to be called New Ulm.

ADDITIONAL FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE KANGAROO,

Termination of the British Elections—The New Parliament—Mr. Layard's Farewell Address—Prussian Complaints to the Government of the United States—More Favorable Aspect of the Neufchatel Question—The Paris Arrests—Rebellion in Spain—Neil Dow in England, &c., &c.

The steamship Kangaroo, from Liverpool on the 23d ult., arrived at this port last evening. Our advices by the Kangaroo are of the same date as those received by the Indian at Quebec—a telegraphic summary of which appeared in yesterday's impression. We are under obligations to the Purser of the Kangaroo for files of papers.

There is not much additional intelligence to report. Queen VICTORIA is so far convalescent that no further bulletins are issued. The infant Princess is also reported to be healthy and well.

There is a complete lull in British politics. The general election was completed on the 21st ult., and an Opposition paper, summing up the result, says:

The new House of Commons, according to the returns, consists of 655 members, one more than the correct number, owing to the double return for Huntingdonshire. It has no less than 187 members who had no seats in the last Parliament, whilst 168 gentlemen who voted for Mr. COBDEN's motion have been reselected—a number quite sufficient to cause the noble Lord at the head of the Government no small amount of annoyance and effective opposition, should there be a second edition of the Chinese atrocities. According to the most accurate classification of the new House of Commons, which we have seen, it would seem to comprise:

Palmerstonians	265	Reformers	100
Derbyites	247	Liberal-Conservatives	53

Mr. LAYARD has issued his farewell address to the electors of Aylesbury. He states that responding to the appeals made to them by Lord PALMERSTON, the constituencies of England have removed from the roll of the House of Commons many of those historic names which will be as landmarks in the annals of the country. He says:

"To effect this result, every means that the influence of government could command have been brought to bear. It is no dishonor to suffer with COBDEN, BRIGHT, GIBSON, CLAY, CAROWELL, OTWAY, and a host of others, who have ever been found on the side of the people, and have been intimately associated with almost every recent measure for enlarging their liberties or contributing to their welfare. I cannot believe that this state of things will long continue, and I feel convinced that, when the country has recovered from the delusion into which it has been betrayed, the very exclusion of these men will lead to important results, and will mainly contribute to the success of the cause of Progress and Reform."

We read in the Liverpool Times of the 22d ult.:

"The Society of Friends of Foreigners in Distress at Liverpool is beginning to make itself felt. It has lately taken up the part of those seamen so brutally treated by the American captains and mates. The Prussian Government has caused its diplomatic Representative at Washington to remonstrate with the United States Government on account of the many acts of violence committed on Prussian subjects in kidnapping them on board of American vessels. This step has been mainly founded on a report from the Liverpool Society. The authorities in Prussia are also directing the stream of navigation to Canada and Australia in preference to the United States."

The Neufchatel Conferences met on the 21st, and the difficulty has taken a more favorable turn. The Paris journals contain an article on the Neufchatel question, headed "Communicated," which, in the language of diplomacy, means "official;" and this says that all the statements which have hitherto appeared in the French, as well as in the foreign Press, on the labors of the Conference, were inexact and devoid of authenticity. The members of the Conference, it is added, have undertaken the obligation to observe the most absolute silence with regard to the progress of their deliberations. All assertions whatsoever which may have been published on this subject are, therefore, mere conjectures and surmises, necessarily erroneous.

The political arrests which have taken place in Paris are said to be of a very serious character, involving the apprehension of those who have conspired to destroy the Emperor. The subject at present is only one of speculation and gossip, and there are politicians who insinuate that the whole thing was a trap laid by the Government to commit refugees in London to actionable proceedings. At all events, if any conspiracy existed, the evidence is said to point to accomplices who live in our own metropolis.

We hear again of rebellion in Spain. Advices from Madrid to the 19th speak of Carlist conspiracies, outbreaks and arrests. The rebellion broke out at Burgos, but was speedily suppressed. The conspirators are accused of having intended to raise Count MONTEMOLIN to the throne, and to reëstablish the Inquisition.

The Liverpool Times, in its issue of the 22d ult., says:

"We yesterday noticed the arrival of Hon. NEAL DOW in this country, from the United States—the object of his visit being the furtherance of the Maine Liquor Law principles in the United Kingdom. We are much afraid he will meet with a most determined opposition. In Scotland he will not make many converts. The Forbes Mackenzie act, in that part of the British island, was a Maine Law in a small way. It was in the estimation of many of its supporters only the first step to a more complete measure. The act is rapidly going the way of its exemplar in the United States. Regulation of the traffic to some extent, of course, there must always be, but it is vain to expect the spread of temperance, and the formation of sober, manly habits, or anything more indeed than mere external order, from legal restrictions or police arrangements. It is to a different instrumentality altogether, namely, to education and to moral and religious culture, that we must look for a reformation of the habits of the people."

Intelligence has reached Southampton that the United States steamer Hermann, which was to leave that port to-day with the English mails for New-York, was ashore near Bremen; and that the Belgian Royal mail steamer, which was about to leave Southampton for New-York, had met with an accident at Antwerp, which would cause a slight detention.

The Quarrel Between Spain and Mexico.

PROBABILITIES OF AN ADJUSTMENT,

Paris (April 17) Correspondence of the London Times.

I do not yet despair of seeing the difference between the Mexican and Spanish Governments pacifically settled, though it will require great tact and much forbearance to do so. Marshal SERRANO had an interview with Count WALEWSKI on Wednesday, and with Lord COWLEY yesterday, on the subject. He was also to have seen, and I believe has seen, M. LAFRAGUA, the Mexican Envoy, this afternoon. Whether it be the supposition that England has no great desire to have another quarrel with the United States, in case an attempt by the Fillibusters on Cuba should require her interference, and that France should shape her conduct after that of England, or whether it is from real unwillingness to go to war with its ancient dependency, it is certain that the Spanish Government are still reasonable and moderate in their demands, more moderate perhaps, than in strict justice they might be. As I have said before, they desire M. LAFRAGUA's arrival in Madrid with as little delay as possible; they are anxious to hear all he has to say, to treat him with every consideration, and if any fair explanation or satisfaction can be offered for what has occurred, I have no doubt he will be received as the official representative of the Mexican Government. The interviews of Marshal SERRANO with him are, of course, as yet, non-official; but I trust that a frank and free explanation which will have taken place this afternoon will remove most of the difficulties. The Mexican Envoy is a man of education and intelligence, and report says of a conciliatory character. To such a man some latitude ought, of course, to have been left by his Government, and it is to be hoped he will use it in a proper manner. If however, all these efforts are in vain, and M. LAFRAGUA, who has already stated his desire to give explanations, remains unchanged, then I should not be surprised if the Spanish Government addressed a note to the English and French Cabinets, and probably to the other great powers of Europe, setting forth the wrongs Spain has suffered, the moderation of the demands she has made, and declaring, that in the event of hostilities being forced upon her, she is not to be held responsible for the consequences. This step would probably be in accordance with the counsels of the two Governments to which she has already looked for advice.

Madrid (April 18) correspondence of the London Times.

I fully confirm, notwithstanding various misstatements in Spanish papers, the information I lately communicated as to the satisfaction given by the Mexican Government to nearly one-half of its Spanish creditors, and I am enabled to add that the proof of a willingness to render justice has made a favorable impression on the Spanish Ministry, and will, no doubt, tend to facilitate an amicable settlement of the pending dispute, an object which the British Minister at Madrid has been actively employing his good offices to bring about. We daily expect to learn the decision of Señor LAFRAGUA as regards his journey to Madrid, and it is hoped that it will be favorable and that he will soon arrive here.

With the recent reports of General JOSE CONCHA's recall from Cuba has been coupled one to the effect that the measure was partly to be attributed to a strong note sent in last week by Lord HOWDEN with respect to the gross and frequent violation of treaties lately committed by the landing of slaves in that island. I believe it is customary, when authentic information of such transgressions reaches our Minister here, for him to send a note to the Spanish Government calling its attention to them. These notes have of late been unusually frequent, in consequence of the many complaints made, and for the same reason, it may be presumed that they have been couched in terms more than usually emphatic. But, beyond this, I believe myself justified in stating that the above report is unfounded. As regards the rumors of General CONCHA's return to Spain, whether to take his seat in the Cortes, or by order of the Government, they are not confirmed. During CONCHA's former command in Cuba, he was noted for his honest exertions to carry out the treaty respecting Slavery, but since then he appears to have grown less scrupulous, or what many here would call wiser. His three years' term of power expires in a very few months, and it is supposed that he is making the most of his latter days.

Commercial Intelligence.

LONDON MONEY MARKET.

LONDON, Wednesday, April 22.

On Tuesday the Discount market was still comparatively easy; and, in some exceptional cases, transactions are said to have taken place at a fraction below the Bank terms.

The Times says the discreditable practices adopted by the speculators interested in the Russian Railway scheme have received further illustrations, and scarcely a doubt appears to be entertained in any quarter that a deliberate plan has been formed to entrap subscribers, by inducing respectable persons to act, unsuspectingly, as decoys.

The letters from Paris describe an uneasy feeling. The contrivance of the Government to obtain a new loan by compelling the Bank of France to double their capital seems to have occasioned considerable dissatisfaction; and it is positively stated that the opinions of the directors were unanimously against the measure.

The French funds closed on Tuesday 69¼ money, 69.35 account.

There is still no profit on the transmission of gold either way between England and America.

LIVERPOOL MARKETS.

COTTON—The Cotton Market continues without change, the transactions are of a limited character, and prices are steady. The sales—including 40 Pernambucos 9⅝, 60 Maranhams 8⅜d.@8⅝d., 500 Surats 5d.@6⅜d.—are reported 4,000 bales, of which 500 are on speculation and for export.

SUGAR—The market continues firm, and extreme prices have been realized; the business comprises 20 hhds. Demerara, at 51s.; 250 bags Bengal, (to arrive,) at 53s.; 350 mats Mauritius, at 53s. 9d @54s. 6d.; 3,600 bags Rio Grande, (in bond,) at 36s.; and 4,200 bags Paraiba and Pernama, (to arrive,) at 35s. 6d. ₱ cwt.

MOLASSES or RUM—We have no transactions to notice.

CORN MARKET—At this morning's market an extensive inquiry for WHEAT was checked by the further advanced pretensions of holders in the face of a report from London less animated than at the close of the week; still we have had a fair and rather large business done in this grain at somewhat over Friday's rates, being 3d.@4d. ₱ bushel upon the currencies of Tuesday last; fine class American White Wheats realized 9s. 5d.@9s. 6d., and Red 8s. 4d.@8s. 6d. per 70 lbs.

The demand for FLOUR is steady at 1s. ₱ sack, and barrel advance on the week's quotations.

BEANS are extremely scarce, and held for 1s. ₱ quarter advance, though such is not at present obtainable.

Fine OATS are quite as high, middling 1d. ₱ bushel dearer.

OATMEAL sells readily at 1s. ₱ load more money, 28s. 6d. being made for general cuts of Irish, and 29s. ₱ 240 lbs. for superior samples.

INDIAN CORN, with more sellers desirous to realize, has lost part of the late improvement, and to-day the trade moves slowly with an advance of about 1s. 6d. ₱ quarter upon the rates of this day se'nnight.

Interesting from Mexico.

ECCLESIASTICAL AGITATION—TYRANNY OF THE CLERGY—BANISHMENTS—ARREST OF TWO PRIESTS—REPORTED SETTLEMENT OF THE ENGLISH DIFFICULTY, ETC.

We have received files of Mexican journals to the 9th ult. They do not contain much that is important. No mention is made of the arrest of the Archbishop, of which we yesterday received intelligence by telegraph from New-Orleans.

Matters were, however, approaching such a crisis. The Siglo had received the text of one of three Archiepiscopal circulars. It states that no one can lawfully swear obedience to the new Constitution; that it is the duty of confessors to demand of all whether they have sworn to it, and if they have to require them to do penance and retract their oath. This retraction should be made as publicly as possible, and be made known to the judicial officer before whom the oath was taken.

The Ecclesiastical Government of Puebla had issued two circulars to the clergy of the diocese, asserting that the Pope had pronounced judgment against several articles of the Constitution.

The Trait d'Union gives the two following instances of ecclesiastical tyranny: "In the village of Guadalupe the priest refused to marry a lawyer, if he did not publicly retract for having brought a civil suit against the church in conformity to law. Again, in Guanajuato, a Government employe, who was just married, took oath to obey the Constitution. His young wife, on going to confess, was ordered to separate herself from her husband until he had retracted. It is reported that the employe has gone mad."

M. P. L. DE GUEVARA, Curé of San Juan del Rio, who had preached a furious sermon against the Constitution, had been arrested and brought to Mexico. Father GAONA, of Puebla, had also been arrested for refusing to allow a liberal to communicate.

The Monitor, of the 7th ult., publishes a project for the formation of a steam navigation company to place boats on Lake Chapala, in the State of Jalisco, and on contiguous rivers.

According to the Diario de Avisos, which gives the news as certain, all those persons arrested at the same time with Senor AGUILAR, late Minister under SANTA ANA, will be banished from the Republic.

The Eco Nacional says: "It was generally reported, yesterday, that the English question was settled on the day previous, and that M. SANTOS DEGOLLADO will have to submit to the judgment of the Supreme Court." Nevertheless the journals are foggy on the subject. The Trait d'Union doubts whether the difficulty is settled, and, if it be, professes entire ignorance as to the terms of the reconciliation. D'Estandarte is silent, which causes serious misgivings about the matter.

It is said that Don JUAN BAUTISTA CEBALLOS will go as Minister Plenipotentiary of the Republic to France.

The Republicano of Durango says that the eclipse of the sun on the 25th of March was total in that city. The lower class of the people were in the streets on that day waiting the movements of a procession, and not knowing what was to happen, were terribly frightened when they found themselves in darkness. They ran about in all directions crying for mercy—but the light that followed brought back their tranquillity.

The Mexican Extraordinary of the 8th ult., says: A variety of schemes are on the carpet for the purpose of relieving the Government from its present dilema; amongst which we have heard of a proposal on the part of the Church—the nature of this overture, if such it is, we do not comprehend. We give the rumor as it reached us, without vouching in the least degree for its truth.

The Orosopo says that Sr. AGUILAR, who was lately imprisoned, is the President of the Revolutionary Assembly, that exists in Mexico City.

Why the Central American Treaty was Rejected.

Correspondence of the Baltimore Sun.

WASHINGTON, Monday, May 4, 1857.

The rumor said to be given by the British Government for the rejection of the propositions of the United States Government for the modification of the project of a Treaty negotiated between Lord CLARENDON and Mr. DALLAS, is that the Government of Honduras had not yet ratified the Treaty of 1856, by which the Bay Islands are ceded to the State of Honduras. This looks very much like an after-thought.

Letters from Honduras, dated April 1, state that the British Government had not relinquished the Bay Islands, but had appointed a new Governor of the same, who had just taken upon himself the duties of the office. Further, it was stated in these letters that the inhabitants of the Islands were determined not to submit to the jurisdiction of Honduras.

This would show that the British Government have changed their mind as to the cession of the Islands to Honduras, and determined to keep them, if the United States Government should give them a chance by the slightest alteration of the Carendon project.

Had our amendments reached Lord PALMERSTON at the time of his defeat in Parliament, and before the election, he would probably have accepted them. But bound up as he is now by popular support, we shall have nothing of a conciliatory nature from him.

The Administration have this subject under consideration, and also the Central American matter generally.

LONG ISLAND.

KINGS COUNTY COURT OF SESSIONS—MAY 5.

Before Hon. Samuel D. Morris, County Judge, and Justices Schoonmaker and Emmons.

The Grand Jury came into Court and presented a batch of indictments, and not having completed their labors again retired.

BROOKLYN CITY COURT.—MAY 5.

Before Judge Culver.

The May term of this Court opened this day. The first cause called on was Stephen Scammel vs. Francis—action to recover damages for an assault and battery. The case was tried once before, when the Jury awarded $5,000.

Mlle. SARAH FELIX, sister of RACHEL, has returned to Paris from Egypt, and gives good news from her sister. RACHEL, before returning to France, intends to stop a time in Italy.

THE REJECTION OF THE DALLAS CLARENDON TREATY—THE NAVAL COURTS OF INQUIRY, ETC.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, May 5.

It is said in responsible quarters, that the Administration, although not approving of the supplemental Central American Treaty as amended, and doubtful of the power or propriety of withholding it, thought it but courteous to the Senate to transmit it to the British Government. So far as has been ascertained, not one of the members of the Cabinet regrets its rejection by England.

It is believed that the Treaty is now beyond resuscitation, the time for the exchange of ratifications having expired. The Administration maintains that the British Government has failed to execute the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, and will insist upon its being carried out in good faith.

Report says that the Cabinet were engaged to-day on the affairs of Utah.

The entire amount of public lands sold and located in Wisconsin is about ten millions of acres.

The great number of witnesses before the Naval Courts of Inquiry having been found productive of serious injury to the public service, as well as delay and expense, the Secretary of the Navy has authorized notice to be given that in all instances where it may be done with due regard to justice, the Judge-Advocate and the applicant before the Court shall enter into a stipulation to receive the depositions of witnesses on either side, the same being taken by authority competent to administer oath upon the interrogatories and cross-interrogatories, to be exhibited to witnesses.

CONTINUATION OF THE FRESHET IN THE HUDSON—DAMAGE TO RAILROADS—NEW TRIALS DENIED, ETC.

ALBANY, Tuesday, May 5.

The freshet still continues. Quay-street is flooded and the water on State-street is nearly up to Dean. Weather cloudy and rainy.

Last night, the culvert on the Central Road, west of Brockport, was carried away—the water undermining it. The Express train going west, which left New-York at 6 o'clock, yesterday, ran over it before the damage was seen, and the baggage car was upset, and two passenger cars thrown into the culvert. The engine and tender passed over safely. Some of the passengers received bruises, but none of them were seriously hurt. The damages were all repaired this morning. Travel over the road has not at all been interrupted on the main line.

On the old road, between Pittsford and Rochester, some 25 feet of the track has been washed away by the freshet. Trains, however, on the old road will pass one another to-day.

Information reached the Canal Department to-night of two breaks in the canals since the commencement of letting in the water. One of the breaks is at Utica, where a sewer is built under the canal, which broke through, occasioning nine miles of the level to be drawn off for repairs. The other break is at the Rock Reef feeder, also on the Eastern Division.

It is rumored that FRANCIS S. ROGERS, ex-Auditor, is to receive the appointment of Deputy Surveyor-General under SILAS SEYMOUR, as authorized by the act of the last Legislature.

The Supreme Court deny new trials to FRANCIS MCCANN, convicted of the murder of his wife, and JOHN CUMMINGS, convicted of shooting a farmer named SLUMPF. They will be sentenced on the fourth Monday of May.

The new Board of Common Council organized to-day, and adopted a resolution to contest the legality of the issue of Northern Railroad bonds to the utmost extremity. They also adopted a resolution recognizing Dr. QUACKENBUSH as Mayor, in order to act upon his nominations, instead of those of Mayor PEERY.

HEAVY DRY-GOODS FAILURES—A RAILROAD TREASURER GARROTED.

BOSTON, Tuesday, May 5.

There were several failures of dry goods merchants yesterday. Among the firms mentioned are: WHITNEY, FENNO & Co., SHAW, SAMPSON & BRAKHALL, and CHAPMAN, LORD & DALE.

The failure of WHITNEY, FENNO & Co. is said to have been occasioned by the defalcation of a confidential clerk. The amount already ascertained to be missing is $50,000.

Messrs. BUGBEE, HIDDEN & Co. are also reported as having failed.

The failure of Messrs. PRINCE & POST, on Milk-street, is also announced.

The whole amount of the liabilities of the firms failed will exceed a million of dollars.

CYRUS SMITH, Treasurer of the Piedmont Railroad, was garroted in Brookline street last night by three men, and robbed of eleven hundred dollars.

The Double Murder at Keesport, Penn.

PITTSBURG, Monday, May 4.

CHARLOTTE JONES has made an affidavit before the Mayor correcting her statement implicating her brother, WILLIAM JONES, and a man named JAMES WILLIAMS, in the murder of GEORGE WILSON and his sister, Mrs. BETSEY MCMASTERS, at Keesport. She charges the crime on her alleged husband, HENRY FITE, and MONROE STEWART; also, giving particulars concerning GARDNER, who was implicated in consequence of his intimacy with them, and who suddenly left on the Monday morning after the murder. CHARLOTTE's statement before Justice CLEMENS implicating her brother and JAMES WILLIAMS in the late murder of SAMUEL H. WHITE, in Washington, is generally believed. Her statement tallies with Mrs. WHITE's in some respects. The alleged object of her brother, WILLIAM JONES, in killing Mr. WHITE, was to obtain money to clear him from the charge of poisoning a young man some time ago.

CANADIAN BARK EMPIRE ASHORE—ELEVEN OF HER CREW LOST.

SANDUSKY, Tuesday, May 5.

The Canadian bark Empire, of Port Dover, Capt. MULLIGAN, came ashore yesterday afternoon near Marble Head. She hailed from Toledo and her cargo consisted of oak timber. The crew, eleven in number, were drowned. The Captain and passengers were saved.

SCHOONER ALICE ROGERS ASHORE—ALL HER CREW LOST BUT ONE.

BOSTON, Tuesday, May 5.

The schooner Alice Rogers, GEORGE WILSON, master, from St. John, N. B., for Magdeline Islands, went ashore near Point Derreau, on the 25th ult., and all hands were lost except one seaman.

Rising of the Delaware and Lehigh Rivers.

EASTON, Penn., Tuesday, May 5.

The Delaware and Lehigh Rivers are very high at this place. The Delaware rose 24 feet yesterday, but is now falling. Much damage has been done along the river, and many rafts swept away. The Delaware division of the Pennsylvania Canal is seriously damaged, and it will take from four to six weeks to repair it.

Fire at Owego, New-York.

OWEGO, Tuesday, May 5.

A fire broke out in this place about 10 o'clock last evening, destroying the dwelling and livery stable of CHARLES BELLS; also the stables of the Ahwaga House, containing nine horses, and some seven or eight small and comparatively valueless buildings. Lose about $8,000; insurance small.

A Missing Girl—Is it the one Murdered near Newburg?

The recent murder of a girl near Newburg, and the mystery about her identity, has made unusually interesting and important every case of suspicious or unexplained absence. A girl, RACHEL CLELAND, was advertised in the City papers of last Saturday, as missing. One of our reporters called on Mrs. CLELAND, the mother of the girl, at No. 105 Sands-street, Brooklyn, and though her description of her missing daughter somewhat accords with the published description of the dead body at Newburg, still it is not very probable that the two are identical.

Mrs. CLELAND is a widow in reduced circumstances, with three children, two boys and the girl, RACHEL, who for some time has worked at book-folding. She is described as 16 years of age, looking older than she really is, about 5 feet in height, of rather graceful figure, hair not a very dark-brown, blue eyes, very pretty hands, teeth bad in front, and though not beautiful, still prepossessing. She had a scar over her left eye, received a few weeks since, and wore three rings, one a cornelian on the first finger of the left hand. For some weeks past she has worked at the Tract House, and a week ago last Saturday, about 5 o'clock, she was paid $4, the amount of her earnings. She usually got home about 5½, but that evening she did not arrive till 7, thereby causing her mother much uneasiness. When she came in she seemed somewhat confused, and when her mother asked her for some money, she replied first that she had lost her wages, and afterwards that she had put it in her drawer at the shop. Early on Monday morning, the 27th of April, RACHEL left home for New-York, promising to return by 10 o'clock with the money, which her mother very much needed. She went to the shop and left again about half-past 9; since then no trace of her has been found. Her mother states that RACHEL has acted strangely for some time in various little matters, but she has no idea of what induced her to go off. A young man who knew the girl, stated that he saw her going down Centre-street, in company with two other girls on Tuesday, the 28th, and the probability is that she made acquaintances who have led her astray. Still, in the present uncertainty, it is possible that the missing girl may be the murdered one. We may add, however, that the woman from Brooklyn who was at the funeral of the unknown corpse, and who desired to see it and was refused, was not Mrs. CLELAND.

THE NEWBURG TRAGEDY.

The excitement in regard to this most mysterious murder grows more intense every day—not only at Newburg and its vicinity, but all along the Hudson River. The wonderful likeness that exists between SARAH BLOOM and the deceased, as well as the mystery that envelopes the whole affair, form the principal topics of conversation.

A lady's silk hat was seen floating down the river on Monday, and is supposed to have belonged to the murdered lady. If found it may throw some light upon this singular affair.

A report was circulated yesterday, at Newburg, that a young lady was missing a short distance above the village, and that a party had gone there to learn further particulars.

Another Disappearance—Supposed Murder.

MOSHER B. SHERMAN, a miller, carrying on an extensive business at Little Falls, Dutchess County, has been missing since Thursday last. On that day he was in Poughkeepsie, and received from DANIEL H. TURNER the sum of $752 for rent. His son arrived in Poughkeepsie, yesterday, and stated that his father had not been home since he had been to that city, and that no trace of him could be found. It is thought that as he was returning home he was murdered and then robbed of his money. Mr. S. was a stout built man, of about 55 years of age, and had on a brown dress coat, and black beaver hat. A reward has been offered by his friends for information as to his whereabouts if living, or for the discovery of his body if dead.

SELECT YOUR BOOTS AT CANTRELL'S, NO. 813 BROADWAY.—M. C. T. KIMBALL, late of the firm of Kimball & Beesley, has charge of CANTRELL'S Department for the manufacture of Gentlemen's Boots, and his skill, taste, experience and success in producing fabrics of the best quality are unquestioned. CANTRELL sells cheap, and you may travel the City through without finding finer boots than those sold at his establishment.

S. C. HERRING & CO'S PATENT CHAMPION SAFES.
The subscribers, grateful for past favors and finding that a discriminating public were bestowing their patronage to that extent that more warerooms were necessary to exhibit all their stock, have enlarged their depôt, by opening an extensive ware and salesroom on Broadway, at No. 251, corner of Murray-st., opposite the City Hall. The enlargement of warehouse room, with the recent extensive enlargement of their factory, will enable the subscribers to keep on hand at all times a larger stock of fire and burglar-proof safes than any other establishment in the world. Particular attention will be had to constructing safes for private families to match with other furniture, for the security of plate and jewelry, (and housekeepers are invited to call and examine for themselves.) Also, will keep on hand and make to order all kinds of money chests, vault doors and bank vaults. Hall's patent powder-proof locks for Banks or store doors, Jones' patent permutation Bank lock, and Crygler's patent letter lock, without key. S. C. HERRING & CO.,
Nos. 135, 137 and 139 Water-st., and
No. 251 Broadway, corner Murray-st., New-York.

RUPTURE CURED.—[MARSH & CO. REMOVED to No. 2 Vesey-st., Astor House.]—Only Prize Medal awarded to MARSH & CO., by the Industrial Exhibition of all Nations, at the Crystal Palace, for their new Patent Radical Cure Truss. References as to its superiority: Professors Valentine Mott, Willard Parker, and John M. Carnochan. Open from 7 A. M. to 9 P. M.

CRISTADORO'S HAIR-DYE, WIGS, AND TOUPEES.—To argue in favor of these articles would be folly. The dye is admitted to be the best in use. Look at the clear browns and the glossy deep blacks it produces. Would nature do better? Impossible. Sold and applied at No. 6 Astor House.

GAS COOKING STOVES AND RANGES.—W. F. SHAW'S patent, combining neatness, economy and convenience. Prices from $6 to $10, with furniture complete, by which cooking can be done at one-half the expense of any other method. Can be seen in operation at GEO. L. CANNON'S, No. 406 Broadway.

THE HATS WE CAN RECOMMEND TO EVERY gentleman who wishes to select the newest and the neatest of the various styles before the public, and would just as lief pay $3 50 for a superfine article as $4 for one in Broadway, of second quality—the hats to which we allude may be found at ESPENSCHEID'S, No. 118 Nassau-st.

PIANOS AND MELODEONS—THE HORACE WATERS modern improved Pianos and Melodeons are to be found only at No. 333 Broadway. Pianos and Melodeons to rent, and rent allowed on purchase, for sale on monthly payments. Second-hand Pianos at great bargains.

LOOK HERE, INVALIDS! WHY DO YOU GO groaning and growling through the world with your aches and ails. Pay 25 cents for AYER'S PILLS and cure them.

Try it yourself, and recommend it to others. Prepared and sold by A. B & D. SANDS, Druggist, No. 100 Fulton-st., New-York. Price 25 cents per vial.

THE GREATEST MEDICAL DISCOVERY OF THE AGE.—MR KENNEDY, of Roxbury, has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over 1,100 cases, and never failed, except in two cases, both Blotch Blunder humor. He has now in his possession over 900 certificates of its virtues, all within 30 miles of Boston.

Two bottles are warranted to cure a moving sore mouth.

One to three bottles will cure the worst kind of pimples on the face.

Two to three bottles will clear the system of boils.

Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst canker in the mouth or stomach.

Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst case of erysipelas.

One to two bottles are warranted to cure all humor in the eyes.

Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the eyes and blotches among the hair.

Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corrupt and running ulcers.

One bottle will cure scaly eruption of the skin.

Two to three bottles are warranted to cure the worst case of ringworm.

Two to three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of rheumatism.

Three to four bottles are warranted to cure the salt rheum.

Reader, I peddled over a thousand bottles of this in the vicinity of Boston. I know the effects of it in every case. So sure as water will extinguish fire, so sure will this cure humor. I never sold a bottle of it but that sold another; after a trial, it always speaks for itself. There are two things about this herb that appear to me surprising—first, that it grows in our pastures, in some places quite plentiful, and yet its value has never been known until I discovered it in 1846; second, that it should cure all kinds of humor.

In order to give some idea of the sudden rise and great popularity of this discovery, I will state that in April, 1853, I peddled it out and sold about six bottles per day. In April, 1854, I sold over

THE POLICE COMMISSION.

The Last of the Injunctions Dissolved.

JUDGE PEABODY'S OPINION.

The Board of Commissioners Organized.

Ex-Judge Whiting Chosen Chief of the New-York Police Force.

Chief Matsell Declines the Tendered Honor.

THE CODE OF THE NEW BOARD, &c.

Now that the injunctions restraining the Police Commissioners are dissolved, they have taken the initiatory steps for the discharge of their duties. They held a meeting yesterday morning, at which all the members were present, with the exception of Mayore WOOD and POWELL, and a large amount of business was transacted.

The present rules and regulations of the Police Department were adopted, with bnt slight modification.

SIMEON DRAPER, Esq., President of the Board, stated that he had called on Mr. MATSELL, the present Chief of Police, and tendered to him on behalf of the Board, the office of General Superintendent of the Metropolitan Police District. Mr. MATSELL, however, had declined the appointment, for private reasons, intimating that his intention is to retire shortly from the Department.

Mr. DRAPER then read the following letter from Mr. MATSELL:

SIMEON DRAPER, Esq., President, &c.:

MY DEAR SIR: I have carefully and anxiously considered the proposition made to me, through you, by your Commission, in relation to my appointment as Superintendent of Police under the law of April, 1857, and have to say that while I am very grateful for the honor that you would confer upon me, I feel constrained under present circumstances, and for the reasons stated to you, most respectfully to decline it.

With great respect, your obedient servant,
GEO. W. MATSELL.

Mr. BOWEN then offered the following resolution, which was adopted unanimously.

Resolved, That JAMES R. WHITING be, and he is hereby appointed Superintendent of the Metropolitan Police District of the State of New-York.

Mr. BOWEN, from the Committee of Rules and Regulations, reported the following code of RULES AND REGULATIONS FOR THE GOVERNMENT OF THE BOARD.

SECTION 1. The regular meetings of the Board shall be on Tuesday and Friday of each week, at 10 o'clock, when cases of charges and applications will be considered, and such other meetings shall be held as any two of the Commissioners, by order in writing given to the Clerk, shall direct; and all meetings of the Board shall be held in public, unless the majority of the Commissioners shall otherwise direct.

SEC. 2. The Chief Clerk shall be the Secretary of the Board of Commissioners. It shall be his duty to be present at all meetings of the Board, and record its proceedings in a book kept for that purpose, and the ayes and nays on every question before the Board shall be taken, and form part of the record of its proceedings.

SEC. 3. All appointments and dismissals from office shall be signed by at least three of the Commissioners and countersigned by the Chief Clerk, and no appointment or dismissal shall be valid unless so signed and countersigned.

SEC. 4. The Treasurer of the Board in addition to his other duties, shall render a debit and credit account to the Board; and no expenditure shall be incurred in the name of the Board, without his written authority, or a writing signed by him in the name of the Board, unless authorized and directed by a majority of the members of the Commission.

SEC. 5. When applications are to be discussed or charges are to be considered, the Board shall have private meetings, but immediately thereafter the result of such private meetings shall be entered on the minutes of the Board and made public.

SEC. 6. Applications for appointments shall be entirely in writing, and signed by the party applying, according to the rules and regulations of the Police. Charges preferred against any member of the Police force must be in writing, or sworn to and confirmed with the name and residence of the complainant, and, if based on information or belief, then the source of such information and the reason of such belief shall both be stated; but this shall not apply to the complaints and charges by any of the Commissioners, or the General and Deputy Superintendents or Inspectors, who may charge simply in writing, but such charges must be filed with the Chief Clerk.

SEC. 7. When charges are filed, the chief clerk shall notify the person complained of to call and examine the same, and the person complained of within two days thereafter, must either dictate an answer through the Chief Clerk, to be by him taken down, or he may prepare the same in writing, and within the same time file it; the trial thereof shall be in order at any subsequent meeting of the Board, of which the person complained of shall be advised; but the persons complained of may waive such trial, or submit the case and answer upon affidavit, within three days after notice has been given to the Chief Clerk and to the complainant of such waiver, and an opportunity shall be given for such complainant to produce witnesses for deposition before such Chief Clerk, or furnish evidence otherwise in support of his complaint.

SEC. 8. Charges may be voted frivolous by a majority of the Board upon being filed and exhibited to all the members present, without any examination or evidence or trial.

SEC. 9. No application for appointment, or complaint shall be heard by any Commissioner apart from the meeting of the Board, and it shall be the duty of the Commissioners to forbid applicants or others from conversing with them on any subject that is to come before the Board. It being the sense of each member thereof that his duties are semi-official, and that not only the time of each Commissioner, but a sense of justice to all men forbid that any matters of application, suspension or removal shall be heard out of the regular meetings.

SEC. 10. Upon the conclusion of a trial, judgment will be rendered and announced on the following day.

SEC. 11. The sentence of the Board shall be, first, Suspension without pay unlimited. Second, suspension with pay from one to thirty days. Third, removal from office. And all sentences shall be in writing duly entered on the minutes and kept with the Records of the Department, and a duplicate read to the force of the precinct to which the sentenced member belongs, and a copy of the same shall then be served upon him by the Inspector of the precinct.

SEC. 12. During trials no witnesses shall be examined or cross examined any longer than one hour, nor the counsel engaged any longer than half an hour, without the unanimous consent of the members of the Board. Upon objections to testimony the same shall be briefly stated without argument and submitted.

The following Standing Committees were decided on for the ensuing year:

Finance—Messrs. Stranahan and Draper.

Gen ral Di c pline—Messrs. R. Bowen.

Station-Houses, Lo ations and Domestic Economy of the Force—Messrs. Cholwell and Stranahan.

Rules and Regulations of the Police—Messrs. Stranahan and Bowen.

Ap ointments and Removals—Messrs. Nye and Stranahan.

City and County Authorities and Ordinances—Messrs. Cholwell and Stranahan.

Prison and Police Force—Messrs. Cholwell and Draper.

It was determined that the duty of the Finance Committee should be to examine and report upon the accounts of the Treasury, at least once every month; and that all matters coming before the Board for consideration should first be referred to the Committee having the charge of that subject. The Committee to report forthwith or at any subsequent meeting. The Mayor of the City of New-York shall be a member ex-officio of all Committees, when the subjects referred to them relate to the City of New-York, and the Mayor of Brooklyn shall be a member ex-officio of Committees which have in consideration subjects relating to Kings County.

The Commissioners held a short conversational meeting in the afternoon, and it was decided that no person now in the Police Department should be dismissed, if he ably performs his duties. And as the offices of Deputy Superintendent and Chief Clerk are the only vacant ones now, aspirants for police honors will have to be patient. A proposition was made to notify the Common Council of their organization, and their want of a room in which to hold their meetings, but their counsel informed them it was unnecessary, as a section of the Police bill conferred the requisite power upon them to provide for themselves in this respect.

The Board adjourned to 10 o'clock this morning.

THE INJUNCTION DISSOLVED—OPINION OF JUDGE PEABODY.

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

Before Hon. Justice Peabody.

The People ex rel. Fernando Wood vs. Simeon Draper, et al.—Yesterday, Judge PEABODY rendered a decision in this case. Preceding the opinion, was a statement of facts which, as they are sufficiently familiar to the public we omit. The opinion was as follows:

PEABODY, Justice.—In this case, which is, in substance, an action to determine the rights of the defendants to offices into which they have entered, the plaintiff rely on the invalidity of the law under which the defendants have derived their appointment. They allege that the statute, by virtue of which the defendants claim that they now hold the offices, is in conflict with the Constitution of the State, and, therefore, void; and being so, they ask judgment of this Court to that effect, and that the defendants be ousted therefrom.

This is the ultimate relief sought in this action, and to this relief plaintiffs seem to be entitled if the law be, as they aver it is, unconstitutional.

They also seek, however, the immediate aid of a temporary injunction, by which defendants shall be restrained from exercising any of the functions of their offices, pending the litigation, and until the decision of the question as to the validity of the law under which they claim to hold.

To this end they have presented their application to a justice of this Court (ex parte, as is our practice) who, after hearing counsel on behalf of the application, has made an order restraining defendants from exercising the rights or performing the duties pertaining to the offices as above stated.

This order the defendants now move to vacate, and they urge their motion on several grounds:

1. That the claim of plaintiffs that the law is unconstitutional is not well founded, but that it is, on the contrary, consistent with the constitution and valid.

2. That the remedy by injunction in an action of this kind is not authorized by law in any case.

3. That if an injunction can issue at all in an action of this kind, the facts shown in this case are not sufficient to warrant it.

The first ground embraces the principal question at issue and to be determined in the suit—the constitutionality of the law—and inasmuch as that question will very shortly come before this Court for decision, on the argument of the whole case made by the plaintiffs, it is quite proper that I should refrain from passing upon it now, unless it shall become necessary for me to do so in deciding this motion.

The second ground on which this motion is put, is one which relates to practice, and having no bearing on the general proposition on which the final result of the suit depends, may be decided without reference to anything by which that will be affected.

Is the relief by injunction allowed in an action of quo warranto by our practice in any case?

That there is no precedent for it in an action of this kind, is admitted on all hands. But plaintiffs say that the absence of a precedent furnishes little grounds for an argument against their position; that it is easily accounted for in a manner not inconsistent with their claim that it is now a legitimate remedy. And it is true, as argued by them, that prior to the time of our Constitution of 1846, the only courts in which an action of this kind could be brought were courts having only common law powers, and hence no court having cognizance of such a suit could administer the exclusively equitable relief of injunction. And it is also true that, until the time of our Code of Procedure (1848) suits of this kind were classed among, and denominated criminal rather than civil remedies, and courts of equity had a general rule of refraining from interference in criminal matters. Whereas, this Court, as now constituted, has full chancery and common law powers, and, having possession of this suit for general purposes, can aid the plaintiffs by injunction, if they are entitled to that aid; and, since the Code went into effect (1848) suits of this kind have been, and by law now are, classed among and denominated civil remedies, so that the rule that equity will not interfere in criminal matters is no longer an obstacle to equitable relief in an action of this kind.

If, therefore, the mere absence of machinery to grant injunctions in the Courts in which alone suits of this nature could heretofore be properly brought, and the fact that remedies of this kind were called criminal, are the reasons why relief by injunction has never hitherto been known, these reasons being done away, there would seem to be no longer any obstacles to that kind of relief. Actions of this kind, however, really were no more criminal in their nature, purposes, or effects, formerly than they are now, although then called criminal and now civil. And equitable relief by injunction, was then as well known, and as proper in principle, and as well adapted to the wants of litigants in this description of actions as it is now, although it was not, it is true, administered by the same Court which had jurisdiction to try the case. Yet, if it had been then proper and desirable, it could have been had by application to a Court of Chancery, which had power to grant it in aid of the legal remedy in a proper case. I am not satisfied that these reasons of convenience and habits of the Courts suggested are the real causes that this description of relief has never been known in this country or in England. On the contrary, I am inclined to look for reasons more substantial in their nature, and having better foundation in principle or policy.

I am inclined to think that such relief has not been deemed consistent with the interest of the State, with enlightened public policy, or with the general principles which must govern as to an office emanating from the sovereign power, and hence has never been adopted in practice; that the public welfare has been deemed to require that an actual incumbent of an office should not be forbidden to perform the duties of it for the time being, even though his title to the office were doubtful; that the public should not be deprived of the benefit of an office merely because it was uncertain whether the person in and ready to perform the duties of it was there rightfully, even while the title of the party assuming to act should be in controversy.

To restrain the action of the incumbent is to restrain all the functions of the office, for he being in—even if wrongfully—must act, or no one can. And it is not at all difficult to see that in very many and in most cases, the public interest would require that the duties of an office should not be suspended, and its functions cease, until the matter of personal right between rival claimants could be determined.

This, then, I take to be the reason that no cases of the kind are to be found in the reports—that the wisdom of the times has not approved of the principle on which such remedy is allowed, or has not deemed it discreet to adopt such practice, and that, therefore, it has never prevailed. Thompson vs. Commissioners of Canal Fund. (2 Abbott's Rep. 243.)

If this be the reason, the absence of precedent is important and entitled to weight in considering this question.

In this view I am sustained by the decision of the Chancellor of this State, in Tappan vs. Gray, reported in the 9th Page, 507, and by the judgment of the Court of Errors in the same case, reported 7 Hill, 259. In that case the Chancellor refused to interfere, even incidentally, pending litigation as to the title to the office, to protect the fund arising from the emolument of the office, in favor of a plaintiff, whom he pronounced entitled to it, against an insolvent intruder, exercising the powers and receiving the fees for the time being; and he put his refusal on the ground that the public interest required the duties of the office to be performed by the incumbent, whether in it rightfully or not; and with so much delicacy did he regard the interests of the public in the matter, that he declined to interfere even with the emoluments of the office in which the public had no interest, lest such interference should interrupt incidentally the discharge of the duties of it, in which the public was interested.

The Court of Errors (then our court of last resort) unanimously affirmed this decision; and so far as opinions were expressed, affirmed it for the same reasons given by the Chancellor.

At the time of the adoption of the code, then, (1848,) no such practice had ever been sanctioned, and the principle upon which, if at all, it must prevail, had been, not only thus negatively, but in the case I have cited, if no other, affirmatively repudiated.

But it is said that public officers have often been restrained in the performance of acts under the warrant of their offices, when those acts have been shown to be unauthorized by law. Doubtless they have been, and will continue to be, very properly. But, restraining a person from doing a particular act, because the act itself is not proper to be done, is a very different thing from restraining the entire functions of a public office, on the ground that though the discharge of those functions is necessary to the public welfare, as it is by law declared to be, and no one else but the incumbent for the time can discharge them, still, as there is a doubt whether the incumbent is the proper person for the place, he shall refrain from acting, and the public dispense with the benefits of the office until the question of title can be decided by the tedious process of law. It may very well be that a man being a public officer may be restrained in a proper case from doing a particular act of an official character, but it by no means follows that a public officer may be restrained from dispensing its benefits to the public. That is a very different matter. The practical utility or benefit to the public of an office cannot be questioned before a court. The law by creating it has settled that question, and from that decision courts of justice entertain no appeal. The office itself is not only an emanation from sovereignty, but it represents, and in a measure embraces the principle of sovereignty itself. Courts, therefore, will not undertake to restrain the action or operation of it, which they would in effect do if they should restrain generally the incumbent, he of necessity being for the time the only person through whom the public can have the benefit of the functions of the office.

It is not, as I understand, pretended that this remedy has been given of late by any express enactment. There is no pretence that it is expressly provided for in our present system of practice.

The claim is rather that nothing in our present system forbids it, and that there is no good reason in the nature of things why this and the other provisional remedies in the code should not be available to a plaintiff in this suit as in others. I have endeavored to show that there is good reason why it should not exist in cases of this kind—that it is opposed to and inconsistent with principle and an enlightened policy, and if I have succeeded in this effort, I have shown sufficient reason why its existence should not be inferred from the absence of anything negativing the idea; and I might stop here, but a glance at the statute by which the present action of quo warranto was created to take the place of the former writ of the same name, and information in the nature of it, will not be unprofitable.

The first remark on the subject of this action, its uses and powers, are as follows: (Code of Procedure, section 436.)—"The remedies heretofore obtainable in these forms," (meaning writs of quo warranto, &c., which the preceding part of the sentence had abolished,) "may be obtained by civil actions under the provisions of this chapter." "Remedies heretofore obtained in these forms may be obtained, &c., under the provisions of this chapter." This remedy I have shown was not therefore obtainable under the forms there referred to, and this language is far from suggesting that any new ones were to be created. Indeed it not only says that the old ones may, but by implication it suggests that only those therefore obtainable may be obtained under the provisions of that chapter.

The language, to be sure, is affirmative, that certain remedies may hereafter be obtained, but it is pregnant with the suggestion of a negative, that other remedies were not generally to be had thereunder.

Other sections of the code, in expressly providing for this and other of the provisional remedies in certain cases in this action strengthen the presumption that neither this nor the other provisional remedies are intended to be applicable to it, except where they are expressly declared in terms to be so—and on the whole I am satisfied that it is not authorized by that system. See § 435, providing for arrest in specified cases, and § 444, &c.

The code affords many other evidences that its general provisions as to actions do not apply to the action treated of in this chapter, to wit: Writs of Finding and Quo Warranto.

It may be said that some of the following rules do not apply to a case in which the validity of the offices is in controversy. It is not necessary that it should, for this is not such a case.

The existence of the offices is admitted necessarily in this suit, and the title of the defendants to them is alone in question. My conclusion is, that an injunction, restraining generally the functions of officers, in a case of this kind, is not authorized by law. The consideration of the other points made by defendants become unnecessary in the view I have taken. The injunction must be dissolved.

THE MURDERER DISCOVERED!
GREAT EXCITEMENT!

This is the way in which we head articles relative to the assassination of a single human being; but when hundreds of men and women are deliberately sacrificed to the ignorence or cupidity of self called physicians, we simply head the story "Bills of Mortality." Crowds of people who take Cod-Liver Oil, and similarly imperfect remedies, dies every week of consumption. So do a legion who swallow potash, &c., for rheumatism, and equally noxious remedies for scrofula, palsy, heart disease, liver complaints. But nobody dies who takes ANDEBE' LIQUID IODINE or PURE IODINE WATER. It cures all these disorders. It never fails. Ask those who have tried it. Sold at $1 a bottle by ANDEBE & FOSNIOK, No. 3 Second avenue, and No. 862 Broadway; C. H. RINO, No. 192 Broadway; BARNES & PARE, No. 304 Broadway; Mrs. HAYES, Brooklyn, and all druggists.

TUESDAY, May 5—P. M.

The steamers Vanderbilt, direct from this port, and the America from Boston, take about $930,000 in Bullion for New-York account. These shipments nearly correspond with the movement of the first week in May last year. They occasion little or no disturbance to the Money Market. There is a fair degree of activity and a large measure of confidence between lender and borrower, and the Banks, as a general remark, are working smoothly and easily. The heavy payments of the 4th May were well met. There was some additional business in Sterling this forenoon at 109¼@ 109⅜. Much dissatisfaction was expressed among the Merchants and Bankers in the Foreign business at the unusually early closing of the regular steamer mail for Boston at our Post-Office.

The Bear speculators took the full sweep of the Stock Exchange to-day, and sold down the market to an enormous extent, 1@2 ⅜ cent. below the closing prices of Monday. Options 30 or 60 days were offered at the close even lower than the cheapest registered sales for cash, and the eagerness evinced by this party to speculate against the future course of the market extended over the entire list, and prices were made to touch a point not very remote from the extreme depression of week before last. The figures for the past three weeks on some of the principal Road shares have thus fluctuated:

	Lowest April.	Highest To May 2.	Monday, May 4.	Tuesday May 5.
New-York & Erie	40¾	43⅝	42⅝	41¾
Michigan Southern	60	67	64	61¾
Toledo	63	71⅞	68¼	66¼
New-York Central	86	87½	87	86¾
Illinois Central	128¾	135	134½	133¾
Reading	77¼	84¼	81	80¼

The market closed steady on Erie and Reading, on the cash bids, but otherwise prices irregular. At the first Board a prominent Bear operator offered $100,000 Erie's of 1871 at 75, seller 60 days, which were taken, and $20,000 lodged with the U. States Trust Company, 10 ⅜ cent. on each side, for the security of the contract. This practice is now frequently availed of, particularly where commission brokers take such purchases for outside customers.

It affords as much pleasure to announce that the City of Albany has authorized the payment of the interest on the Bonds issued to the Northern Railroad.

The April business on the Cleveland and Toledo Road amounted to $133,197 against $130,229, the same month in 1856.

The Bondholders of the New-Albany and Salem Company are requested to meet at the Farmers' Trust Office on the 8th inst., at 3 o'clock P. M.

We have had recent occasion to talk with some of our most intelligent and experienced bank people in regard to the rapid increase making in their respective capitals. The Banks of Commerce, America, New York, Phœnix, National and Merchants, among the old line banks, have lately authorized an addition of $10,860,000 to the capital employed in the business in this city. The six concerns now stand in $23,300,000, where before they stood $12,440,000. To this might be added nearly $10,000,000 more in the new line of banks. On the 1st January, 1856, the aggregate of all the city banks stood a little under Fifty millions; on 1st January, 1857, a little under Sixty millions, and by the close of 1857, seventy millions will have been paid in. Now why this increase, particularly in the old (and as they are sometimes called "Conservative") banks? It is partly the result of the investment of the accumulation of individual wealth in this city and vicinity, and partly the demand for new facilities for conducting the rapidly increasing money business concentrating here. Neither course necessarily argues undue expansion or inflation, and although the eagerness with which the new stocks are taken up, is not of itself conclusive, the promptness with which the installments are paid in, and the stocks held firmly without transfer to second hands, show that mere speculation has less to do with the operation than the legitimate investment of bona fide private wealth. There are other abundant evidences of this sort of investment, all going to show that the general trade of the past five or seven years, made sure and active, as it were, by the railway facilities between New-York and the States of the West, has brought large accumulations to this City and its vicinity. The Discount Brokers can tell the same story as the Bank Managers, the first negotiating a vast amount of mercantile bills, (which are almost uniformly paid,) through private lenders, as the last find ready sale for their new capitals. The Stock Brokers proper feel the same influence. Their investments of private wealth in dividend-paying stocks and bonds, other than Bank, although constituting but an inconsiderable item in the speculative dealings at the Exchange

Excepting the Cabinet Councils there were no signs of political life.

A numerous meeting of merchants and manufacturers was held in Manchester for the purpose of forming an Association for the promotion of the growth of cotton all over the world, to be called the Cotton Supply Association. The Association is to encourage by all practicable means the growth of cotton in the Colonies and other countries, by diffusing information, supplying machinery, and removing as far as possible all legislative impediments.

At a special meeting of the European and American Steamship Company, a report was read stating that the total cost of the eight steamships recently purchased was £400,000, of which £227,000 had been provided for. A resolution was passed to raise the balance, £180,000, by the issue of twenty thousand £9 shares.

A fire at Liverpool had destroyed 2,500 bales of Cotton belonging to J. & D. MALCOMSON & Co.

France.

The Grand Duke CONSTANTINE had a great reception at Toulon. A review of 50,000 troops will be given at Paris about the 6th of May, in his honor.

The Council of State had commenced the examination of the bill against the usurpation of titles of nobility.

The Moniteur publishes the Convention concluded between France and the Grand Duchy of Baden in February last, relative to the strengthening of the banks of the Rhine. FERUK KHAN had been engaged in settling with the Sardinian Ambassador the draft of a treaty between Persia and Sardinia.

Spain.

Another interview had taken place between Marshal SERRANO, the Spanish Ambassador at Paris, and Señor LAFRAGUA, the Mexican Plenipotentiary. The result of it was that Marshal SERRANO would leave for Madrid to pave the way for the reception of Señor LAFRAGUA at the Spanish Court.

The treaty for settling the frontier between France and Spain was to be laid before the Cortes at their first meeting.

The Progressistas and the members of the Liberal Union were laboring to effect a coalition.

The Government were apprehending disturbances at Degrono, Burgos, Vittoria, and in all Catalonia, and had taken measures of precaution.

The troops destined for Cuba are to be dispatched from Cadiz at the end of this month.

Denmark.

There was no further news concerning the ministerial crisis at Copenhagen, excepting that the Danish Envoy at the Germanic Diet had been sent for. This circumstance shows that the quarrel with Germany enters as an important element into the present complication of affairs. ANDREAE, the late President of the Council, who was deputed by the King to fill up the vacancies caused by the withdrawal of SCHELE, had been unable to do so, and RALL, hitherto Minister of Public Worship, had, as was anticipated, been entrusted by the King with the formation of a Ministry.

Switzerland.

The Prussian and Swiss Plenipotentiaries had accepted the propositions of the mediating powers [illegible] the Neufchatel question, and had referred them for the approval of their respective Governments.

Prussia.

A proposition to substitute legal instead of police supervision over printing licenses in Prussia, which was carried in the Prussian Chambers on Monday, the 20th ult., by one majority, was rejected the next day, the Government having collected its forces.

Austria.

Baron BACH's vast plan of communal organization for all the Empire, which has been for some time under the examination of the Supreme Councils, is, it is said, considered to be too liberal, and he has been requested to modify it so as to make it in conformity with the enactments in vogue before the invasion of liberal ideas in 1848. Baron BACH is discouraged, and threatens to resign.

Turkey.

The Commission for the regulation of the Russo-Turkish frontier in Asia, as instituted by article 30 of the Treaty of Paris, and which is to consist of two Turks, two Russians, one Englishman and one Frenchman, will assemble at Kars on May 13.

A dispatch from Paris announces that the difference between Austria and Montenegro appears in a fair way of settlement. Prince DANILO has released a prisoner, and Austria has ordered that the Montenegro refugees shall be removed to the interior.

China and India.

By telegraph from Trieste dates from Hong Kong to the 15th of March, from Calcutta to the 21st of March, and from Bombay to the 2d of April, had been received.

The Europeans on board the British steamer Queen, under the Portuguese flag, had been murdered by the Chinese, and the steamer, with its valuable cargo, carried off.

The Government contractors' storehouses at Hong Kong had been burnt down by incendiaries, and 700 barrels of flour destroyed.

The Chinese in Saranak, Borneo, had risen on the 17th of February, and massacred several Europeans. Sir JAMES BROOKE saved his life by swimming across a creek. One of the Borneo Company's steamers subsequently arrived at Saranak, and with the aid of Sir JAMES at the head of a body of Malays and Dyakes, avenged the destruction of the settlement by killing 2,000 Chinese. A war steamer was sent over by the Dutch authorities but her services were not required.

Exchange at Bombay was 2s. 1½d. Money was plentiful, and the Bank had lowered its rate of interest. In the Import Market there was little change.

At Calcutta the Import Market was rather dull. The Money Market had improved. Exchange was 2s. 2⅝d.

At Madras Exchange was 2s. 2⅛d.

The total export of Tea from China to Great Britain, to the 30th of June, it was estimated, would reach 70,000,000 pounds.

Exchange at Hong Kong was 4s. 9½d.

Persia.

The latest dates from Bushire were to the 6th of March. They furnished no intelligence of fresh operations in the Persian Gulf.

Persian accounts of the recent battle of Bushire had been published, stating that the English advanced until meeting the main body of the Persians; that they then set fire to the British camp equipage and retreated towards Busbire, whence being reinforced the battle began and lasted four days, both parties retiring in consequence of the torrents of rain which fell during the whole time, rendering the ground unfit for cavalry. The Persians left some guns in the mud, but afterwards recovered them. The Persians estimate the British loss at 1,000, and their own at 400.

The Great Atlantic Submarine Telegraphic Cable.

THE FACTORIES—MANUFACTURING OF THE CABLE—VARIOUS PROCESSES THROUGH WHICH IT PASSES—SHIPMENT WHEN COMPLETED—PROPOSED PLAN FOR LAYING THE CABLE—ITS ADVANTAGES AND ITS FAULTS—PROBABILITIES OF FAILURE.

From the London Times, April 22.

About a mile or so below Greenwich stands the factory of Messrs. GLASS and ELLIOT, where the great submarine cable by which it is hoped to connect England with America is in rapid course of completion. The rolls of wire, tons of hemp yarn, and singular-looking drums from the Gutta Percha Company, which are incessantly pouring into the works, betoken the presence of an unusual kind of manufacture, and this idea is quite borne out by a mere glance over the premises themselves. The first object which attracts the visitor's attention on entering the yard is the vast bulk of cable already completed. On each side of the path are two large circular docks or pits, in which about 600 miles are piled away in four massive coils, each 35 feet in diameter. It appears so manageable and so supple as the men drag it from the building in which it is manufactured that it is difficult to realize the fact that the greater part of its bulk is iron wire, or that a light and slight-looking rope of that kind is intended to form a perpetual medium of communication under the 3,000 miles of one of the deepest and stormiest seas in the world. Such, however, is the result which it is hoped to achieve, though whether it will do so or not is quite another question, and one full of doubt and difficulty. Before entering further into the subject we may as well mention that the whole cable is being constructed in two equal portions—one half being made at Messrs. NEWALL's works at Birkenhead, and the other at Messrs. GLASS & ELLIOT's, at East Greenwich. The reason for this subdivision is that it was quite impossible for one manufactory to complete such a gigantic undertaking within the allotted time. Each firm is bound by contract to have 1,250 miles ready for shipment by July, and as many miles more as they can get completed in that time. Already, at the two manufactories, about 1,200 miles have been made. GLASS & ELLIOT produce at the rate of 70 miles per week, but with an additional machine in course of erection, they will in a few days be able to increase that amount to 100 miles. We believe both firms expect to have about 1,400 miles completed within the period specified in their agreement.

The interest with which the progress of this great work is regarded on both sides of the Atlantic will excuse our giving a brief description of the various processes through which the cable passes in its course towards completion. The conducting wire through which the electric current will have to pass consists of seven No. 22 copper wires twisted into one strand, the thickness of a No. 13 wire, or about 1-16th of an inch. This, we believe, is made by the Gutta Percha Company, or, at all events, coated by them with three folds of gutta-percha, which increases the diameter of the whole to three eighths of an inch. In this form it is delivered at the manufactories, coiled on wooden drums in two-mile lengths, with a short piece of the copper conductor left out at each end for the purpose of joining. As these arrive at Greenwich the ends of the conductor are carefully brazed together, bound round with gutta-percha, and so joined to the entire length of the cable, which, all in one piece, is going through the different stages of manufacture in the various floors of the works. One end of the cable is connected with a sand-battery of 240 cells, which maintains a continuous current through the whole, in order that the connection and insulation of every new two-mile length may be ascertained with the galvanometer as each piece is joined. The workman, therefore, who joins the ends, being in connection with the current, is obliged to be insulated from the floor with thick pieces of gutta-percha underfoot, to prevent his receiving severe proofs of the perfection with which the current is carried through. The wire thus coated and joined is then wound off to the "serving" machine, where it passes up the centre of a horizontal wheel, on which are placed five bobbins, each of which is supplied with many hundreds of yards of five-thread yarn soaked in a mixture of pitch, tar, oil, and tallow. As the wire moves slowly through this the bobbin wheel revolves at the rate of 375 times a minute, spinning the five strands of yarn tightly about it, so as not to leave the smallest insterstice. It passes from this through a gauge, which shows its diameter to be 9-16ths of an inch exactly, and the electric current with which it is in connection proves by the needle of the galvanometer that the connection and insulation of each fathom as it moves off has been uninjured by the "serving" process. It then only remains to "close" or bind it up in wire. In this operation an enormous amount of wire is consumed daily; indeed more is wanted than all the wire-drawers in England can supply, though to do so, they are now tasking their powers of production to the very utmost. Of the amount required our readers may judge by the fact, that when completed the whole cable will contain enough wire to encircle the globe nearly 16 times, or nearly to reach to the moon and back again. The wire used for closing the outside is No. 22. Seven of these are twisted into one strand, and 18 strands are twisted round the cable. The strand machine in which the seven wires are placed revolves 450 times per minute, binding the seven into one strong, compact strand, the same diameter as the conducting wire, viz.: 1-16th of an inch. Each of the strand machines, working night and day, spins 98 miles of wire into 14 miles of strand. There are 21 machines at work, which thus every 24 hours convert 2,068 miles of wire into 294 miles of strand, which suffice to cover about 10 miles of the cable. After the strand is spun it is wound on to bobbins, and, having been carefully oiled and passed through a number of gauges to ensure its being of the requisite diameter throughout, the bobbins are placed in the closing machine, which is, of course, similar to that used for serving the yarn, but very much larger. By the revolution of 18 bobbins round the cable the 18 strands of wire are woven round it so as to form an almost compact metal case.

When their great size and weight are taken into consideration, these closing machines revolve at fearful rapidity, and the centrifugal force sometimes causes the massive bobbins to fly off, carrying everything before them. Fortunately, as yet, no casualties have occurred. The cable thus completed is drawn from the "closing" machines at the rate of 20 feet per minute, through a gauge of ½ of an inch diameter, and then carried by revolving wheels through a tank of hot tar, leaving forth into the yard as fit as ever such a cable can be for its submarine duties. In the yard, as we have already said, it is coiled away in huge piles ready for shipment, each day's labor adding some inches to the height and bulk of the already ponderous masses.

The hull of the cable made at NEWALL's works will be shipped in July, on board the Niagara American screw-frigate, the largest and largest vessel of its class yet built. She will be accompanied for the occasion by the Mississippi frigate. The line made at Greenwich will be coiled on board the Agamemnon, which will also be accompanied by one of our largest steam frigates to assist in laying down. The four vessels will proceed in company to the centre of the Atlantic, where the ends of the coils will be carefully joined, and each ship will make the best of its way to its own shores—the Niagara steaming to Trinity Bay, Newfoundland, near the Peninsula of Avalon, and the Agamemnon to Valencia Bay, County of Kerry, on the southwest coast of Ireland. By this method, the whole cable is expected to be laid in a week or ten days at most. Five miles of the cable, where it joins in the centre, will be made of steel wire, to enable it to bear the great strain at parting. For fifteen miles from the coast of Ireland, it will also be made of immense strength and thickness, to insure it from injury from ships' anchors. The same precautions are also to be adopted at the other extremity at Newfoundland, though only for five miles' distance from the shore, as the water there is very much deeper. It is intended to sink the cable across the extensive plateau or bank formed by the course of the Gulf Stream on its northern side. The greatest depth here is 2,100 fathoms, or nearly two miles and a half. The average depth of the whole route is 1,400 fathoms, or a little more than one mile and a half. The direct distance from Valencia to Newfoundland is 1,690 geographical miles, so that between 400 and 500 miles of cable are allowed for "slack" and casualties.

The Atlantic cable, of the construction and ultimate destination of which we have thus given an outline, is beyond all doubt a beautiful specimen of manufacturing skill. It possesses several essential qualities. Its cost, we believe, is only £100 per mile; its weight only one ton per mile. It is constructed for to bear a strain of 3 tons 2 cwt., but it is stated to stand 4 tons with safety. Its specific gravity is between three and four, its diameter is small, and it is as flexible as an ordinary rope. These are great advantages, but the sets off on the other side are numerous and most important. In the first place, there is no wire for the return current, and the conducting wire itself is ridiculously small, (1-16th of an inch in diameter,) when it is considered that it is intended to carry a current for nearly 3,000 miles. The latter is a most serious fault; so also is covering the outside with so fine a description of wires that three months' rust will entirely destroy them. But the greatest fault of all is, that, in our opinion, the whole cable is constructed on a wrong principle. In a previous article on the subject of submarine telegraphic communication, we pointed out the errors which have already led to the destruction of so many cables, and the simple manner in which they are remedied by Mr. Allen's patents.

This Atlantic cable, though with regard to lightness and cheapness a step in the right direction, is still not in the right path. Whenever a cable is constructed with spiral wires round a soft core, any severe strain in paying it out must, by stretching the outside wires, either attenuate or break the copper conductor of injure its insulation. This is a simple fact, which those least conversant with mechanics can easily understand. At the lowest computation the Atlantic cable will stretch two feet per mile. At the deepest parts where it must be laid, six miles will be suspended at one time. What becomes of the conducting wire during this elongation of 12 feet? It must either break or become attenuated. The latter accident, we believe, will be as bad as the former, for at present it will be most difficult to get the current through $3,000 miles of 1-16th of an inch wire, and quite impossible if either strain or pressure reduce it in any part to 1-24th or 1 32d of an inch diameter, as in electricity the weakest part becomes the standard of the whole. We do not mean to say that the present cable will not succeed, but the chances are against it, and it is almost certain that before it has been down twelve months it will, like others similarly constructed, be perfectly useless. If it does answer temporarily it will not be due to the plan on which it is made, but in spite of it. The first locomotives built answered the purpose for a time, and were unquestionably locomotives, though neither of these reasons would justify a Company at the present day in ignoring recent improvements and having their engines made after those bygone models. It is the same with submarine cables. The present one, though lighter, cheaper, and more flexible than the ponderous iron coils through which shareholders have lost hundreds of thousands irretrievably is still made on the same old principle of self destructiveness. Why is not the new patent adopted which, by the use of a large conductor, makes the core of the cable its strength, and does away altogether with the necessity for outside spiral wires? By this patent cheapness, lightness, increased conductibility, and therefore certainty of electric action, are insured. Only by the adoption of plans like these can the public ever hope for any extensive and useful scheme of submarine communication. If this Atlantic cable fails, what will be the result? Why, that another, or a somewhat similar one, will be ordered immediately. Is it likely, then, that manufacturers will ever press upon the notice of companies a very cheap cable certain to do its work, when under the present system they make two or three very expensive ones, often (as in the Mediterranean) with no other result than that of benefiting trade while making it, and depositing it when made at the bottom of the ocean? Shareholders must look into these matters for themselves. We can only point the way, and it rests with them to follow it. In conclusion, we may mention that it is intended to work the cable with SMEE's batteries—a most costly and troublesome plan. MORSE's recording telegraph, once a very valuable instrument, though now behind many recent inventions, is to be used.

Slavery in the United States—Emigration of Free Settlers to Virginia.

From the London Times, April 22.

The British people, with a great proportion of the numbers, intellect and worth of the United States, have had to confess to much despondency lately on the subject of Slavery in the New World. We of this generation have been brought up in the creed of unceasing, undeviating progress, and are apt to feel astonishment and anger, if not depression, if each year does not exhibit some advance on the last. The abolition of negro Slavery all over the civilized world has been thought to be merely a question of time. CLARKSON and WILBERFORCE slew the monster among ourselves, and one of the few redeeming acts of the short lived French Republic was to emancipate the slaves of Martinique and Guadaloupe. For years the Abolitionists have been at work in the States themselves, preaching, haranguing and writing, with an enthusiasm which has never failed. Mrs. STOWE's book made the tour of the world in a few months, and there is hardly a speech or language in which that voice of pleading for human rights has not been heard. So we in England, and a great number of those who agree with us in the New World, began to think that the long-expected time, if not at hand, must yet be within the range of vision. With the whole world arrayed in condemnation of the principle of Slavery, surely the slaveowner would be driven from his old position and his traditional arguments. It was thought the natural inferiority of the black race, the convincing argument from final causes—namely, that negroes existed on one side of the Atlantic, and good fields for cotton-planting and cane-growing on the other, the Scriptural reasoning about Lot's bond servants and Philemon's runaway slave Onesimus, were pretty well given up, and that the Southerners would confine themselves to their one valid argument—that Slavery exists, and that it is next to impossible to get rid of it. But the philanthropists have been too sanguine in their anticipations. Whether from the violence or indiscretion of the Abolitionists, or from the magnitude of the interests connected with Slavery, or from the deep antipathy which the white American feels towards every man of color, a decisive vote of the whole nation has upheld the supremacy of the slaveowners, and confirmed their proceedings in the Far West. Contemporaneously with this great political judgment, we have had the principle of Slavery asserted as essentially and universally true by more than one Southern organ, and now a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States proclaims that by the Constitution no man of color can have the rights of citizenship. As far, then, as the politician and legislator can effect it, the cause of the negro has retrograded within the last few years. Never was there a time when the public opinion of the American people, deliberately expressed, had more completely condemned the African race to servitude, and declared the enforcing of labor to be a legitimate means of bringing into cultivation their great Continent.

But great natural laws make themselves felt through all the turmoil of political strife, and in spite of all the resolutions of national prejudice. The Americans have said that all men are free and equal, —meaning thereby that liberty of action and equality of rights, though not of conditions, were a necessity of a properly constituted society. This great principle seems destined to assert itself against any legislative enactments and any judicial decisions which may seem to contravert it. Americans decide that Slavery may be introduced into any part of their country,—a law stronger than themselves proclaims that Slavery shall, in spite of temporary successes, recede before the advancing tide of freedom. Slavery treads out the compromise line, and declares that it will range anywhere from the Mexican Gulf to the British frontier. Nature, working quietly but irresistibly, proves that Slavery is essentially weak, and not only has no power to conquer what it covets, but is even incapable of holding its own. At this very time, when Southerners are all powerful in the Cabinet and in Congress, we learn that the State of Virginia, "the Old Dominion," the land of aristocratic slaveowning gentlemen, is threatened with an invasion of free settlers. The case is as follows: Virginia, and particularly its eastern districts, have been under cultivation now for nearly three hundred years. The culture of tobacco, which exhausts the land, has been carried on by means of slave labor. The process became a losing one in many places as soon as steamboats and railways opened richer and newer regions to the planter. Consequently the enterprise of Virginia of late years has been directed to the pursuit of breeding slaves for Alabama, Louisiana, Texas, and the other cotton growing States. Whole tracts have gone out of cultivation. Population has increased slowly, while the Union has been rapidly advancing in the path of greatness. Virginia sent 19 members to Congress in 1820; she sends only 15 now. Her ancient families are getting poor. We are told that "Debt, debt! Taxes! taxes!" represent her present condition. Newspapers dilate on the wasting away of "the Old Dominion," its worn-out soil, overgrown fields, sedge patches, briar patches, stationary population, and waning influence. Whole districts have in fact returned to a state of nature. In these circumstances it is not unnatural that free enterprise should be directed to the old State. Why should the sturdy settler go 1,500 miles inland, when on the shores of the Atlantic there are thousands of square miles which wait for his axe and plough? Already a considerable number of Yankees and New-Yorkers have gone South, and now there seems to be a scheme for repopulating the State by an organized immigration. A Mr. ELI THAYER, of Massachusetts, has founded the "North American Homestead Company." The shareholders are to double their money by "the friendly invasion of 'the Old Dominion' by a renovating army of free white labor." A letter from this gentleman, though ultra-American in style, is sensible enough. Land in the exhausted counties can be had for from $3 to $5 the acre. Tools, by planting white colonies on it, can be made valuable, and the proximity of the settlement to the more populous parts of the Union will insure a fair supply of farmers. "Kentucky and Maryland," says Mr THAYER, "are already looking with envy on the sublime destiny of Virginia, and are inviting the same invigorating agency of free labor to their own borders." "Millions of acres of Virginia land," we are told, "owned by the merchants and brokers of New York and Philadelphia, will be made available at a profit to the present owners, who have heretofore despaired of selling it at any price."

We are bound to say, however, that the "old Dominion" is not unanimous in welcoming the "invasion." The ultra-Slavery press of the State is particularly warlike. "This enterprise," says a Richmond paper, "is a piratical expedition against the peace, security and welfare of the commonwealth." "It is a crusade against Slavery—a propagation of Black Republicanism." If the settlement be permitted, Slavery will soon be thrown on its defence instead of being a triumphant and aggressive power. Therefore "duty to ourselves and also to our sister States of the South demands that these Yankee immigrants under ELI THAYER be repulsed from the soil of Virginia. No nice technicality of legal form can fetter a people in protecting their essential interests." These expressions show pretty plainly the feeling of a section with regard to the intended enterprise. But we attach little importance to such menaces. The settlers will, of course, be only exercising an undeniable right in buying a piece of ground and planting it, and the advantage to all concerned will be too plain for any act of violence to be tolerated. We may, therefore, trust to see free labor advance by its own inherent energies into regions where Slavery has had its day and failed. The principle has now been definitely adopted, that every part of the Republic shall be opened either to the one or the other, according as the majority may determine. If the Free Soilers take their opponents at their word we have little doubt of the result. As New-York made itself free of Slavery within the memory of men still living, and New-Jersey within the last few years, so we trust the North will gradually push its principles in company with the progress of its hardy and adventurous sons.

COMMERCIAL NEWS BY THE EUROPA.

Liverpool Cotton Market.

The Brokers' Circular states that the Liverpool COTTON market was dull and prices quite irregular; holders were pressing on the market and all qualities had slightly declined; the lower qualities were the weakest, and had declined ⅛d., ordinary descriptions were ⅛d lower, and middling qualities shared in the decline to the extent of 1-16d.; while the finer descriptions were slow of sale, but had undergone no quotable change. The sales of the week were 44,000 bales, including 1,800 to speculators, and 4,000 to exporters. Friday's business amounted to 5,000 sales, the market closing dull at the following quotations: Fair Orleans, 8¾d; Middling Orleans, 7 15-16d; Fair Mobiles, 7⅞d.; Middling Mobiles, 7 9-16d.; Fair Uplands, 7¾d; Middling Uplands, 7¾d. The stock on hand amounted to 575,000 bales, of which 420,000 were American.

Manchester Market.

Trade in Manchester was checked by the stringency of the MONEY market, and a dull tone prevailed.

News From Brazil.

PREVALENCE OF YELLOW FEVER AT RIO—INJURIOUS EFFECT ON TRADE—RAILWAY CELEBRATION—SILK IN BRAZIL—BUSINESS, ETC.

We have advices from Rio de Janeiro, viâ England, to March 17.

The following letter from Rio, published in the Manchester Guardian, gives an interesting summary of late news. The Guardian's correspondent says:

"I regret that I am not able to report any improvement in the effects of the yellow fever. It is gradually getting worse; the deaths have reached 25 in one day, and not less than 150 persons per week are falling victims to it. As I said in a former letter, they are, with scarcely an exception, foreigners, the absolute majority being Portuguese.

The effect of these continued visits of the yellow fever on the fortune of the country, will, I am afraid, be most disastrous. No system of colonization can be attempted, in the face of such an obstacle, and the trade of the capital is already beginning to suffer from the very natural aversion which purchasers from the interior have to coming near this beautiful but ill-fated city. I really cannot see that the authorities neglect any measure whatsoever; they appear to be indefatigable in their exertions.

Mr. SAMUEL BAYLISS, C. E., representative of Mr. EDWARD PRICE, opened 16 miles of the Pedro Segundo Railway, on Friday last, from this city to Nazareth. The remainder of the line, to the foot of the Serra, will be opened in a few months.

Shortly after closing my long letter to you last month, on the subject of the production of silk in Brazil, I learned another and most important fact, the accuracy of which I can vouch for. Some eggs were sent, some time ago, from Brazil to Turin, and there they have been tried and have produced a chrysalis in every respect superior to those which they have there. The highest British authority in that capital, and who at one time filled the same high office in this, (where his name is still remembered with great respect,) takes a deep interest in this question, and has written to a friend here, saying that the eggs sent from Rio de Janeiro are in every respect superior to those in Italy—producing much finer worms. This is a most important fact, seeing that the degeneration of the worm is much dreaded by silk growers generally throughout the world.

Trade is very dull. Exchange, 27⅝d.@27¾d. The transactions on London this packet are very heavy. Coffee has slightly increased.

The weather continues dry; no rain for more than a month. The city is, as a consequence, in an unhealthy state.

THE BURDELL MURDER.

TRIAL OF MRS. CUNNINGHAM.

IMPORTANT MEDICAL TESTIMONY

Peculiar Circumstances of the Night of the Murder.

PROGRESS OF THE CASE.

COURT OF OYER AND TERMINER.

Before Judge Davies.

THIRD DAY....WEDNESDAY, May 6.

The trial of Mrs. CUNNINGHAM, charged with the murder of Dr. BURDELL, was continued yesterday, when a very large amount of testimony was elicited. Additional testimony was received from Dr. WOODWARD and other medical men, in relation to the position and character of the wounde found in the body of the murdered man, and much more concerning the house No. 31 Bond-street, and the peculiarities of its appearance within on the morning of the murder.

The Court room were densely crowded during the entire day, and the halls and stairways were passable only with difficulty until evening. There was no particular or material change in the appearance of the parties immediately interested in the result of the trial. The Court was opened at the usual hour, and soon afterwards the examination of Dr. MAINE was continued, as follows:

CROSS EXAMINATION OF DR. S. A. MAIN

Mr. Romaine—Q.—I think I understood you to say that it was at about one o'clock when you and Mrs. Main entered Bond-street on returning to your house on the night of this homicide—about one o'clock in the morning? A.—It was, Sir.

Q.—I do not know whether you said it yesterday, or whether I read it, that you had a cold at that time?

The Court—You got that yesterday.

Mr. Romaine—How was that? You did not perceive the odor until you got near your house?

The Court—(To the witness)—State what you said upon that subject.

Mr. Romaine—I ask the witness as to the fact.

The Court—That is exactly what he did say yesterday.

The Witness—My wife spoke of it soon after we came into Bond-street. I did not notice it so much until I got near home. Then I noticed it very particularly.

Q.—Was it perceptibly stronger when you got near home than when you entered Bond-street? A.—It appeared to be.

Q.—What was the character of the atmosphere at that time? was it clear? A.—No; it was quite warm —near to rain.

Q.—Was the state of the atmosphere favorable to the transmission of odors? A.—It was cloudy and foggy.

Q.—In what direction was the wind that night? A.—I am not positive, but I think it was in the South.

Q.—Was there not an easterly storm impending—an easterly wind blowing? A.—There was. The storm of next morning which commenced that night was from the East.

Q.—Now Doctor, if that odor had come from the house No. 31 Bond-street, and the wind was from the East, would the smell have been stronger when you got to your house opposite, and North of it? A.—Not if the wind were in the east at that time, but I am not positive how it was.

Q.—How far was it from No. 31 Bond-street to Broadway? A.—About 35 houses.

Q.—Four hundred or five hundred feet? A.—Yes.

Q.—Now, if the wind had been blowing from the South, and if the smell had proceeded from that house is it likely that you would have perceived it from Broadway as you entered Bond-street? A.—We entered Bond-street from Fourth-avenue.

Q.—Was it a usual thing in your neighborhood with the wind from the South and East, and in that state of the atmosphere to perceive this disagreeable odor from Broadway? A.—We often smell something coming from this Bowery; it is a universal place for burning up rubbish in the street.

Q.—There are a great many factories in the Bowery? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Are there any which burn bones? A.—Not to my knowledge.

Q.—Did you observe when you went into Dr. Burdell's room the state of the curtains and the shades at the back window? A.—I did when I went in the second time—after I came in with the policeman.

Q.—There had been no apparent change in the interval? A.—No. Nobody had been in.

Q.—Now, will you state to the Jury what was the situation of those windows with reference to the shades, curtains and blinds, if any? A.—The blinds were about half way up. The window has lattice blinds like these in the Court-room.

Q.—Swinging on hinges? A.—Yes, and they opened on the inside. Above is straw-colored curtains, which go over the lattice clear the whole length of the window. They were both pulled down, and I raised them to get light when I went in.

Q.—The curtains were pulled down and the lattice was closed? A.—Yes.

Q.—They were the ordinary buff muslin or linen curtains? A.—Yes.

The Court—They are properly called window shades.

Mr. Romaine—The shade pulled up and down with a cord or pully? A.—Yes.

Q.—Were those blinds of such a character that a person from the outside could see into that room with the blinds closed? A.—They were opaque blinds.

Q.—Could they see into the room if there had been no blinds if the shades were drawn down? A.—No, unless they were very high upon the other side. They could not.

Q.—And if there had been no blinds, they could not have seen through the curtain, the curtain being down? A.—No.

Q.—You have for some time, I believe, lived in the house No. 29 Bond street. A.—I have.

Q.—Directly adjoining Dr. Burdell's? A.—Directly adjoining.

Q.—Your house is of a similar character to that of No. 31 Bond-street? A.—Perfectly similar.

Q.—The same in arrangement, and the same in internal appearance? The same in every respect? A.—Yes.

The Court—Internally and externally? A.—Yes.

Q.—Pattern houses? A.—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Romaine—There were two windows in the rear of the room in which the Doctor's body was found?

The Court—We have had that already. You need not go into that.

Mr. Romaine—And the gas burners were there? A.—On the furthest window west.

Q.—And the hall was on the east side of the house? A.—Yes.

Q.—Was that gas turned up so as to give a full light? A.—It was a full jet.

Q.—You spoke of keys that laid upon the secretary. Were they ordinary pocket keys, that a man of business would carry? A.—They were a bunch of keys that fitted small locks.

The Court—Was there a night-key among them? A.—No, I think the night-key was in his vest pocket, but I will not be positive.

Q.—It was not attached to this bunch of keys? A.—No; I think I should have known it, for it was a peculiar key.

The Court—Do you say it was a peculiar key? A.—Yes; he had got a new lock on the door a short time before that; it was a singular key.

Mr. Romaine—Do you know how long that lock had been on the door? A.—I think some two or three months. I recollect when it was put on, but I cannot exactly locate the time.

Q.—The secretary that stood against the side of the

it to be with his neck-handkerchief; he was choked for his tongue protruded.

Q.—Would his appearance indicate that some man had seized him by the neckcloth and twisted it? A.—It might have been done by that.

The Court—By this black silk handkerchief? A.—Yes.

Mr. Romaine—Was there or not anything which would lead you to suppose that a narrow cord had been put round his neck? A.—No; it would have shown a mark if it had been—if it had been drawn tight.

Q.—Where was this redness? A.—Below, at the lower part of the throat.

Q.—Did you see his wounds examined? A.—I did.

Q.—You saw the body stripped in the first place?

A.—I did.

The Court—I do not think it necessary to go over this, for it has already been testified to by Dr. Francis.

Mr. Romaine—I am not going in o it in detail.

Q.—In what direction was the blow that cut the carotid artery?

The Court (interrupting)—Did you probe the wounds? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did you hear Dr. Francis' testimony? A.—I did not.

Mr. Romaine—I think Dr. Francis said that it was not a perpendicular wound.

The Court—He didn't say so. If you want to prove any difference in his statements I will permit this, but not otherwise.

Mr. Romaine—I want to ask Dr. Main what his opinion was as to the manner in which that wound was inflicted.

The Court—That is all right, Sir.

Q.—What was your opinion as to the manner in which these wounds were inflicted?

The Court—How do you suppose they were inflicted—with what kind of instrument and under what circumstances? A.—We had several suggestions in regard to it. I came to the conclusion at last that it was done by a person first from behind, who struck him upon the right side when sitting in the chair.

The Court—That was the blow in the clavicle? A.—Yes. I was of opinion that the wounds were inflicted by some person standing behind the man, and holding him by his right hand, as there were no wounds on his right arm; but his left was cut in three places. Round his right wrist there was a little rubbing, as though it had been rubbed. I noticed that particularly. It was scratched as though done by the finger nails. I was of opinion that most of the wounds were given from behind, though not all. Therefore it must have been by a very tall person, for when standing up a person could not inflict those wounds unless very tall. If done in front, a person of any height could have done it. That was my theory.

Q.—Now, as to the wound that cut the carotid artery. How, in your opinion, was that done? A.—I think that was done by a person standing in front. It was struck in a diagonal form. We probed that wound and found it to be six or seven inches.

Q.—Did you form any opinion as to whether the man was standing up or not when that blow was struck? A.—I did not at the time. We came to the conclusion that the first blow was struck while he was in the chair. After that I do not know that I formed any conclusion at all.

Q.—Did you observe the wound under the left armpit? A.—I did.

Q.—Did you form any theory as to the manner in which that wound was given? A.—I think the man held Dr. Burdell by the left hand, for the Doctor's right arm was raised to defend himself, and was wounded in three places, and it would have been impossible to have given him the wound in the arm-pit if his right arm had not been extended.

Q.—Could that wound have been inflicted by a person who was striking at him in front? A.—I do not think it could.

Q.—You do not form any definite opinion as to the manner in which that wound was given? A.—I do not.

Q.—You stated that when the door was opened it was within but a few inches of his head? A.—Yes.

Q.—Could that body, from the appearance of the blood, have been moved within half an hour or an hour? A.—Oh, no.

Q.—When you went up stairs you stated that the family was in great agitation? What was the situation of Miss Helen Cunningham?

The Court—We are not trying Miss Helan Cunningham. I shall exclude this altogether.

Mr. Romaine—But your honor I wish to make my object known. I wish to show that she was in an actual swoon, and that her mother was in such a state of agitation that she could not take care of her daughter.

The Court—You may ask about anything that Mrs. Cunningham said or did, but nothing in relation to Miss Helen Cunningham.

Mr. Romaine—Cannot I have the witness describe the situation of things in that room?

The Court—He may describe anything connected with Mrs. Cunningham.

Mr. Romaine—Very well. What did you observe in the room as to the inmates?

The Court—He described that yesterday. Why should you go over this again unless you want to point to some fact?

Mr. Romaine—The District-A torney yesterday, in his impressive address, made a point that this lady was guilty, from the fact of her not going down stairs, or, rather, that a suspicion of guilt must be attached to her.

The Court—You may ask what Mrs. Cunningham was doing.

Mr. Romaine—Then I want to show the circumstances that surrounded her. How was that, Doctor?

Witness—What is the question.

Mr. Romaine—I asked you what was the situation of the inmates of that room when you went up there?

A.—Mrs. Cunningham was upon the sofa when I went up. The eldest daughter was upon a chair, leaning upon a large trunk on the south side of the room, and the youngest daughter was on the bed.

Q.—Was she (Helen) in a state of actual fainting—in a state of syncope? A.—Yes.

Q.—What did you say to Mrs. Cunningham upon the propriety of her staying up stairs? A.—I do not recollect what I did say, if anything.

Q.—Did you not tell Mrs. Cunningham that she had better not go down stairs, and that you had immediately sent for the police and the Coroner? A.—I might have said so, and I probably did.

Q.—Try and refresh your recollection? A.—I cannot. I might have said so. There was every reason for my doing so, but I do not recollect it.

Q.—You put your boy at once to watch the door, and let nobody in? A.—Yes.

Q.—You locked the door? A.—I did.

Q.—And, after having put the boy there, and locked the door, you went up stairs? A.—Yes.

The Court—It is not now a proper time to argue the question.

Mr. Romaine—I desire to draw the witness' mind to the same objects, and I will ask him this: Do you remember not saying to Mrs. Cunningham that she ought not to go into the room, or that she could not get into the room, or something of that kind? A.—I might have said so from the fact that I had locked the door, and did not calculate that anybody would go in until I got a policeman, and gave orders to that effect; I might have said so to her.

Q.—Did Mrs. Cunningham attend to her fainting daughter? A.—She did not.

Q.—Did you yourself attempt to relieve Helen? A.—I did.

Q.—Do you remember taking hold of both of Mrs. Cunningham's hands and placing her upon the sofa, and saying to her, "Stay there," or, "You must stay there?" A.—I do not recollect; I might have done so; there was a great deal of excitement at the time, and this may have escaped my memory.

Q.—You have no recollection of what you did in that respect? A.—I know that Snodgrass caught hold of her to keep her quiet, and told her she could do no good.

The Court thought that this was not testimony.

Mr. Dean—It is part of the res gesta. The District-Attorney said that she was playing theatricals.

The Court—Counsel are very well aware that the opening is not testimony in the case. The Court and Jury will, I trust, discriminate between what is said by counsel and what by witnesses. I shall rule your question out.

Mr. Romaine—Then what Mr. Snodgrass said or did to Mrs. Cunningham you will not permit us to offer in evidence?

The Court—No, not now.

Mr. Romaine—Then I will ask you to note our exception. I offer to show it as part of the res gesta.

The Court—Go on and examine the witness.

Q.—In Dr. Burdell's room, there was gold tinfoil and valuable metals, as is usual in dentists' rooms? A.—Yes, there was in his instrument case.

The District Attorney—When you went up stairs into Mrs. Cunningham's room, you stated that you spoke of his having burst a blood vessel? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you, at that time, believe that he had burst a blood-vessel, or was killed? A.—I believed he was killed.

The Court—You stated the reverse to her? A.—Yes, Sir. I knew he was killed for I had examined him before.

To the Jury—The blood on the walls going down stairs was three or four feet from the stairs; Dr. Burdell was a thick-necked man; I think that Mrs. Cunningham was incapable of going down stairs when I went up to her, as far as I could judge, but I should not like to speak positively in regard to that; I might have told them not to go, but if I did I have forgotten it; they made no effort to go when I went in; the Doctor had thin whiskers, shaved under the chin and very g oatee; the blood must have flowed from the Doctor's body until it was coagulated; it probably from twenty to thirty minutes the blood would cease flowing; I observed no bloody footsteps round or outside the door; I turned the body over.

Q.—Are you perfectly satisfied that none of the blood-stains, the position of which you have described, came from your fingers? A.—I know they did not, for I took hold of his shoulder, which was dry; his whole surface was dry, excepting his face; when I turned him over he was wet, and the blood could not have got off from him to me.

Q.—There was no appearance that the party who murdered him had bloody feet? A.—No.

Q.—Do you think that the persons up stairs were in a position to help one another?—[Mrs. Cunningham and her daughters.] A.—I should say not; she did not assist, and therefore I should say she was not.

The Court—That is Mrs. Cunningham? A.—Yes; I suppose if she had been able she would have assisted her daughters.

The District-Attorney—If she had been able you think she would have done so? A.—Yes.

Q.—When you told Mrs. Cunningham that the Doctor had broken a blood vessel, what was her manner? A.—She was very much excited and agitated; there was then all kinds of theories; we all had our theories at the time

Mr. Romaine—I wish to ask you a general question in regard to the house in Bond-street. Were the walls strongly and firmly built or the reverse? A.—Very firmly built, and the walls were thick and solid.

Q.—When you were in an upper room in the house could you hear a person moving in the story below you? A.—No, you could not do so in any of these houses unless the door were open.

TESTIMONY OF MR. DANIEL ULLMANN.

The witness was examined by the Attorney-General, and testified that he lives in the St. Nicholas Hotel and is a lawyer. On the 30th of January last he boarded at the St. Nicholas Hotel and had a lodging-room and study in the house No. 31 Bond street. On that same day (the 30th of January) which was a Friday, he saw Mrs. Cunningham. He had returned to his room in No. 31 Bond-street at about four o'clock in the afternoon, and just before five, as he was leaving, to go down to the Hotel for his dinner he met her in the passage, and she apologized to him because there had been no fire in his room; he answered that it was not of much consequence inasmuch as he would be out the whole evening. He then left. While talking with some gentlemen that evening in the St. Nicholas Hotel he took out his watch and said to them he must return home, because it was then after twelve o'clock. He returned to his room, and on laying aside his watch he observed that it was exactly half past twelve o'clock. In coming into the house he had opened the front door with a latch key. There was an inner door, which had also a latch lock, but it must have been open as he had not that key with him. That door usually stood open, but not always. There was then no light at all in the hall. As late as that there was rarely, if ever, any light in it; he thought never. Generally there was a light before eleven o'clock, but he had never seen it later than that. Witness heard nothing unusual that night before retiring. Next morning he was roused about half past eight o'clock by the voice of some one running up the stairs and crying "Good God! Good God!" It was the voice of a woman. He then heard some indistinct expression of "Dr. Burdell is dead!" or something of that kind. It was difficult for him to say from whence the voice proceeded; he thought it was from the third story hall. His room was the rear room on the third story, and the voice came past his door. Then he heard several voices, as he thought, shrieking. The shrieks appeared to come from the front part of the house, or the room fronting his, but he did not know whose room it was. The first voice he did not recognize. The shrieks, which were very loud indeed, that he heard afterwards, were in the voice of Mrs. Cunningham. Three or four minutes, he should think, had elapsed, when a person threw herself against the inner door, and cried out, with a perfect shriek: "Mr. Ullmann, Dr. Burdell is dead!" That also was Mrs. Cunningham's voice. Witness then sprang up, dressed himself, and went down stairs without going into that front room. He did not see Mrs. Cunningham at all that morning, nor until late in the evening. He went down to the door of Dr. Burdell's office—the rear-room on the second story—and found a young man standing there. Witness asked him what was the trouble, and the other said, "Dr. Burdell is dead." Witness said "Let me see him;" the young man hesitated a moment. "Why," said witness, "perhaps he is not dead! What have you done? Have you sent to the Coroner? Have you sent to the Station-house?" The young man replied that they had sent to the Station-house. Witness renewed his request to see the body, whereupon the young man opened the door, and, as it sprang open, witness saw the Doctor lying there, evidently dead. He closed the door again, and in a short time afterward an officer and one or two other persons appeared, and they all entered the room. Witness did not know whether Dr. Main had been in before that that time; he did not know Dr. Main, nor did he know the name of the young man who stood at the door, though he had since understood that he was an office-boy of Dr. Main. Witness remained in the house until 10 o'clock, busily examining everything about the room and the body. He did not recollect of hearing anything said about employing counsel that morning, but something was said about that in the evening.

Cross-examination—Q.—You are a practicing lawyer in the Supreme Court? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—You were not applied to as counsel by Mrs. Burdell at all? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—In what tone did she give you warning? A.—In a tremendous shriek; in a louder shriek than I ever heard from any one.

Q.—Did she attempt to get into your room? A.—She dashed herself against the door; I was at the door in a moment, but she did not come in.

Q.—You had a night key to that house? A.—I had.

Q.—What was the character of the lock on the door? A.—There had been an ordinary lock on the door, and it was very easy to be opened with an ordinary night key until some time, I think, at the close of December, when Dr. Burdell caused a new lock to be put on the door; a patent lock, which was exceedingly difficult to be opened; I met the Doctor one day and told him that it took me four or five minutes to open it; he said: "That may be remedied."

Q.—What was done about it? A.—I cannot tell you what was done.

Q.—What was the state of the lock afterwards? A.—Afterwards it was very easily opened.

Q.—Could you open it with your night key? A.—It would open with the slightest touch; the very night of the 30th of December I opened it with extreme ease.

Q.—That lock had been on from December until the time of the homicide? A.—I am not sure as to the time; it might have been at the close of December or the early part of January.

Q.—Do you know what was the occasion for changing the lock?

The Court—There is no necessity for having this matter all over again.

Q.—Was the door left sometimes without being locked? A.—I found the door open the 30th of January, about half past nine o'clock; it was open some ten or twenty inches; this was the outer door of the house.

Q.—The inner door was not fastened? A.—It was wide open.

Q.—How long were you in your room that afternoon, (referring to the day of the murder)? A.—I was there from four to five o'clock.

Q.—Do you knew whether one of the servants was absent—the servant who usually built the fires? A.—Mrs. C. said that the servant was absent, and that was the reason she offered for there being no fire in my room.

Q.—Do you say whether the voice of the person running up stairs was, or was not that of Mrs Burdell? A.—My impression decidedly is that it was the voice of some woman.

Q.—Do you know who went to the door, nights, when the door-bell rang? A.—I do not know.

Q.—Did you ever have to ring the bell to get in? A.—One night I found the outside door locked, I rang the bell, and some one opened the door, and asked who it was. He came down and let me in. It was Dr. Burdell.

Q.—About what time was it in the evening, and what month was it? A.—It was about eleven o'clock at night, and it must have been somewhere about the middle of December; he opened the door twice for me.

Q.—You rang the bell and he answered it? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—While you were there you saw the inmates of the house, as you went in and out of the house, this prisoner, her daughters and sons? A.—Yes, Sir, occasionally.

Q.—What was the weather when you came home that night; do you remember it? A.—Distinctly. When at the corner of Broadway and Bond streets I looked and saw that the stars were partially obscured. It appeared to me that it would either rain or snow before morning.

Q.—Did you observe the smell of any burnt woollen or leather on your way home or in the house? A.—Nothing of the kind.

Q.—Do you know of any deficiency in your smelling organs? A.—None whatever.

Q.—Did you notice any unusual smell outside or in the house? A.—I did not.

Q.—Did you see any light in the house? A.—None—on the contrary, it was extremely dark as I went up stairs.

Q.—Was the stairway to the attic generally open? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did you see any light in the attic? A.—I saw no light in the house at all until I lit the gas in my own room.

Q.—Was there a small room between you and the front room? A.—Yes.

Q.—For what purpose was it occupied? A.—It was a sort of store-room; I had four or five trunks in there myself. There were two doors leading into it, one from my room and one from the hall.

Q.—Is there a window in this store-room looking directly into Mrs. Burdell's room? A.—I do not know.

Q.—Did you have access to it? A.—The door was generally locked between it and my room.

Q.—How was it about the hall door? A.—That was very frequently locked.

Q.—How did you get into it? A.—I had very rarely occasion to go in there. I do not think I went in there more than three times in my life.

Q.—When you went in how did you get in? A.—I found the door open.

Q.—Was there anything peculiar about this lock or night-key to the hall door? A.—It was a peculiar key. It struck me as having a great deal of arrangement without amounting to much. At first the lock was exceedingly difficult to open, but afterwards it was a great deal easier and satisfactory to me.

Q.—Did you ever open any other lock with it? A.—I never have. I have seen other keys exactly like it about the City, and I came to the conclusion that a single wire pressed into the part of the largest ward would open the lock.

District Attorney Hall stated that he would not make objection to this evidence, as he would produce the lock hereafter.

EXAMINATION OF A. DEWITT BALDWIN.

A. Dewitt Baldwin was the next witness. He said he was a member of the bar, and resided at No. 16 Bond-street; on the night of January 30, last, he left that house with three companions, at about half-past eleven o'clock; they proceeded toward Broadway, and witness perceived a strong smell of burning clothes in the street; one of his friends remarking that somebody was burning up their old rags. Witness noticed the smell very particularly; he could not remember which way the wind blew.

Cross-Examination—Q.—You said you lived at No. 16 Bond-street? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—What time did you go out on the Friday evening referred to? A.—About a quarter past 11 o'clock.

Q.—How long was it before you returned? A.—About an hour.

Q.—That would make it about a quarter past 12 o'clock? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did you then perceive anything of this smell? A.—I do not recollect that I did.

Q.—If you had perceived it you would have remembered it? A.—Very likely.

Q.—Was there much wind that night? A.—Very little.

Q.—Did you observe in what direction the wind was blowing? A.—I think it was in an easterly direction.

Q.—You looked to see if there was any smoke? A.—Yes, we looked up to see if we could see anything from the houses opposite.

Q.—Did you observe any light that attracted your attention? A.—I did not.

Q.—Had you resided at No. 16 Bond-street for any length of time? A.—Since October.

Q.—It was not a very unusual thing to have bad smells from the direction of the Bowery? A.—Bond-street is a pretty clean street.

Q.—Did you observe any offensive smells upon any other occasion? A.—I do not remember that I ever did except a few evenings ago, when there was a straw bed burnt in the street.

Edgar Davis was next examined. He said he was a policeman of the Fifteenth Ward, and was called into Dr. Burdell's house by Dr. Burdell sometime in the month of September last; he saw Mrs. Cunningham and Dr. Burdell in the hall: Mrs. Cunningham told him to take no notice of what Dr. Burdell said, as he had ruined her family and her; she appeared to witness to be very much excited, and said she would have satisfaction for what the Doctor had done; she said she would have his heart's blood, or words to that effect; witness stepped in between her and the doctor, and advised her to stop, for she was doing wrong; he told her she did not know what might happen hereafter; he advised her and the Doctor to leave the hall and go into the parlor; in the meantime officer Little came in, and, to use witness' words, did the balance of the talking; witness was present in the parlor when officer Little was there; Dr. Burdell told witness, in Mrs. Cunningham's presence, that he had lost a note, and that she had taken the key of his safe out of his pantaloons pocket while he was asleep; witness advised him to go to a police magistrate and make a complaint; Mrs. Cunningham made no remark to this; Dr. Burdell said she had taken the key out of his pocket, opened his safe, and taken the note out; this conversation took place in the forenoon of a day about the middle of September; on the morning of the discovery of the murder, witness went again to the house, and saw the body of Dr. Burdell lying on the floor of his office; Dr. Smith was there, the office boy, and officer Little; witness saw the Doctor's pockets examined; he had a watch, a night key, the key of his safe, and some other small keys; his watch had stopped; the lid of the bookcase was down; the doors of it were shut; witness remained in the house all day; he saw Mrs. Cunningham in the morning up stairs in her room, but did not speak to her; she appeared to be in distress; her daughters, Mr. Snodgrass and the two boys were there; when the Coroner was present, witness was present, and was sent after Mrs. Cunningham by the Coroner, who wanted her to come down and give her statement; she said she would not go down without consulting with her lawyer; witness went down stairs and told the Coroner; the Coroner's son said she would have to come down; the next morning witness saw Mrs. Cunningham, and advised her not to talk about the murder; when witness was in the house in September, Mrs. Cunningham struck Dr. Burdell on the shoulder; on the Sunday after the murder witness was present in Mrs. Cunningham's room when it was searched by order of the Coroner; a dagger, Dr. Burdell's pistol, a key of his safe, and two pocket knives were found; John Connery, the Coroner's Deputy and son, conducted the search; the dagger was found in her bureau; the safe key was found in the landing place of the attic, among some rags.

Q.—(By Attorney-General)—Is that the key which you found up stairs? (handing him a key.) A.—It was one like it.

Q.—Do you know where the dagger is now? A.—No, Sir.

The Court—Is there any dispute about this being the key in question?

Counsel for defence said that they had no knowledge upon the subject.

CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Q.—Was there no money found upon the person of Dr. Burdell at the time the body was examined? A.—I think there was found some small change.

Q.—How much? A.—I do not know; there was some silver and there were pennies.

Q.—About how much? A.—I should think about seventy-five cents.

Q.—Do you recollect anything about it, whether it was six cents or seventy-five? A.—I recollect that there was money found upon his body.

Q.—Do you recollect what pieces of money were found, whether there were a few coppers or silver? A.—I recollect that there were some pieces of silver and copper.

Q.—Of what denomination was the silver found upon the body? A.—The silver must have been sixpences, shillings or quarters; there were no half-dollars.

Q.—Are you sure that you were present when his pockets were examined? A.—I was present.

Q.—Did you testify before the Surrogate that nothing was found in his pockets? A.—No, Sir; I have not been before the Surrogate.

Q.—On the Saturday evening, or the Saturday during the day, did a great many people come to the house No. 31 Bond street? A.—I think that towards the evening they did—long about the middle of the afternoon a great many people came.

Q.—Was there not a very great crowd? A.—A great many people came, but there was not so great a crowd there that day as the Sunday following.

Q.—Still there were a good many people going into the house? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—In what part of the house were you mostly on Saturday. A.—I think I was in the Doctor's room mostly.

Q.—The second story back-room? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did you allow any body to go up-stairs that day? A.—Yes, Sir.

A.—Up to what time? A.—I think the Coroner gave orders toward night not to allow any one to go up there.

Q.—Was it in the middle of the afternoon? A.—It might have been somewhere in that neighborhood.

Q.—From that time until the Coroner's inquest ended, the defendant was in custody, was she not? A.—She was kept up stairs.

Q.—I ask you whether she was in custody? A.—I do not know whether the Coroner can commit or not; he told me to keep her up-stairs, and not let her come down.

Q.—Do you not know whether that is keeping a party in custody? A.—I should think it was.

Q.—Did you do as directed in that respect? A.—I did.

Q.—You were there until the inquest was closed? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—How soon after this conversation occurred in her room was it when you told her the Coroner wanted her to come down stairs and give her statement, before she did go down and testify? A.—It might have been eight or ten minutes.

Q.—When you went up stairs the second time, she immediately came down? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—During that time she did not see any counsel? A.—I do not think she did.

Q.—How did you come to go there that morning? A.—Dr. Main came down to the station-house and made the request, and three men were sent onward.

Q.—Who took possession of the dagger? A.—I think the Coroner's son John did.

Q.—Did he take possession of the pistol? A.—He did.

Q.—Did he immediately upon finding them? A.—I believe he did.

Q.—Since that have you seen them? A.—I have seen the dagger, but not the pistol.

Silas C. Herring, examined by the District-Attorney, said he sold a safe to Dr. Burdell in April, 1856; he furnished duplicate keys, as was his custom, when he sold the safe; on June 28, Dr. Burdell having lost a key, had the lock altered, so that the lost key might not open the safe; he had two new keys made for the altered lock; witness always keeps a record of all keys made by him, and on seeing a key, by referring to his book, could tell to whose safe it belonged; the safe was registered 13,772, and the key was stamped with the same number; the Doctor said he had lost one of the original keys, or it had been stolen; the new key of the altered lock was marked with the original number; after the 20th of June, the original key shown to witness, he said, would not open the safe.

Cross-examination—Q.—Was the new key delivered up to the Doctor on the 28th of June? A.—I think it was on the same day.

Q.—It was returned to him on the same day with the other key? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—That new key opened the safe at the time of the inquest? A.—That I do not know.

By a Juror—Do you know whether that key will open the safe as it is now? A.—It will not.

The Court—It has been already testified, that it will only open it as it was on the 28th of June.

TESTIMONY OF HECTOR MOORE.

Hector Moore, an officer attached to the Fifteenth District Police, testified that he knew Dr. Burdell during his lifetime; witness went to No. 31 Bond-street some time in the month of September last, but that was a different occasion from that spoken of by the last witness; he met Dr. Burdell at the corner of Broadway and Bond, and went with him to the house No. 31 Bond-street, where he saw Mrs. Cunningham; as he and the Doctor passed into the hall and passed the door of the front parlor, Mrs. Cunningham stood there as if she had come just out of the parlor; Dr. Burdell, who had been talking to witness about her before, made a motion with his hand and said, "that is the woman or the lady;" she replied, "I am his wife;" he made no response to that, but proceeded up stairs, whither witness followed him; witness did not see her after that until he came down stairs again; Dr. Burdell said nothing to her in witness' presence; witness was in the house perhaps twenty minutes altogether; he could not remember the day of the month this occurred, nor whether it was before or after officers Little and Davis had been there; it was his impression it was the latter part of the month; it was not the first part of it at any rate; witness was there in the house again on a Sunday morning after the murder; he saw Mrs. Cunningham that day, and all her children were with her in the back room on the third story front; she and the youngest son left her appeared to be arranging affairs after the morning; they had just got up and were partly dressed; witness was there some three hours or so, and went down to breakfast with them; he heard singing in the house that morning; Mrs. Cunningham and her daughter sung together; witness did not call it sacred music, though it might have been, for he was not a good judge of music; he supposed they sang a tune through, and believed it was before breakfast.

Cross-examined—Q.—Were you present at the time of this singing? A.—I was, Sir.

Q.—Where did it occur? A.—In that room.

Q.—Who else was present, if there was any? A.—I think the family was all present.

Q.—Can you name to whom else present? A.—It is my impression that those four children were all present.

Q.—The two little sons and the two daughters? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—You say you are not a judge of music? A.—I don't profess to be a judge; No, Sir.

Q.—Were any words used in singing it, or did you not pay particular attention to it? A.—I cannot say that I did not. I think I did; but I would not be positive that I heard any words.

By a Juror—What Sunday morning do you refer to?

Court—The Sunday morning after the murder.

Witness—I would not be positive about that, whether it was the first Sunday morning or the next. I am pretty confident now that it was the second Sunday morning.

By a Juror—And after the funeral? A.—Yes, Sir.

By a Juror—Were there note books to sing from? A.—No, Sir; they did not sing from any books; I am positive now that it was the second Sunday morning.

George W. Dilks was examined—He said he was Captain of the Fifteenth Ward Police; he was present at a search made in Mr. Eckel's bedroom on the Sunday evening after the murder; he marked some papers found there with his initials; the papers exhibited to him by the District Attorney he recognized as the papers in question; they were found in Mr. Eckel's bedroom, in a piece of furniture, used both as a secretary and a bedstead.

The District Attorney offered the papers in evidence. Mr. Clinton said they were not traced to the possession of the accused, and there was no legal rule for admitting them as testimony. Mr. Hall argued at some length for their admission, as they showed direct business relations between the accused and the deceased person; that there were secret and undeveloped relations existing between them, and that the deceased was in constant actual fear of the woman on trial. Mr Dean replied in opposition to the admission of the papers. That they were found in Mr. Eckel's trunk was certainly no testimony against the mistress of the house, any more than if they had been found in Mr. Ullman's trunk, or the trunk of any other boarder; if the charge, instead of murder, was one of larceny, the finding of the papers in Mr. Eckel's possession would be evidence against Mr. Eckel, but certainly not against Mrs. Burdell. The District-Attorney again contended, that as the paper showed very peculiar business relations between the accused and the deceased, the prosecution were entitled to them wherever they might be found. The Judge said he should have no hesitation in admitting the papers, if the prosecution could show that the signature attached to them, was in Mrs. Cunningham's handwriting. The District-Attorney argued that the Court must first rule whether the papers were found, under the circumstances of the case, in the possession of Mrs. Cunningham.

Mr. Dean—Your Honor decides against that?

The Judge—I decide nothing at all. The Court will now take a recess till 3 o'clock. [Laughter.]

District-Attorney—That is a very agreeable decision. The Court accordingly took an hour's recess.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

At three o'clock the proceedings of the Court were resumed before an audience immensely increased.

Captain Dilks again took the stand.

The District-Attorney resumed his examination by asking him who, if anybody, was by when these papers were found by him. Witness answered that there were John Connery, a lawyer whose name he did not know, but who acted as counsel for Mrs. Cunningham the day before the inquest, and Mrs. Cunningham herself.

The Court—Mrs. Cunningham was there. That is sufficient.

Q.—When these papers were found did or did not Mrs. Cunningham say anything about them, and if she did, what did she say? A.—She said the papers were hers and she wanted them.

The District-Attorney now renewed his offer to put the papers in evidence.

Counsel for the defence admitted that the testimony just given disposed of the objection.

The papers were admitted accordingly.

The District-Attorney read the papers.

The first was an envelope marked in pencil on the top "Private papers, John J. Eckel, 171 Stanton-st." Below was the address, "Miss Augusta Cunningham, 31 Bond-st." The first exhibit was a declaration, with no jurat, and unsigned, of the loss of a certain note drawn by Mrs. Cunningham for $612 30. The second was the assignment of a judgment for $612 30, sworn to and signed by Harvey Burdell. The third was a paper relating to Mrs. Cunningham's private affairs, which was not read. The fourth was a discharge of a judgment. The fifth was a paper relating to certain transactions regarding the same note between Mrs. E. A. Cunningham and an Edward Pierpont. The sixth was a receipt signed Harvey Burdell for $34 30, on account of rent due Nov. 1, 1856. The seventh was an unexecuted release to Dr. Burdell, signed by Emma A. Cunningham. The eighth was a security for a note signed by Mrs. Cunningham. The ninth was an unexecuted affidavit, signed by Dr. Burdell, and declaring that up to the 18th October, 1856, he had made no will. The tenth was a lease of the house in question, from May, '56, till May, '57, dated 19th March, 1856, and executed between Mrs. Cunningham and Dr. Burdell, without witnesses and with some erasures. The eleventh could not be found.

Examination resumed—Q.—What was done with those papers? A.—Mr. Connery himself marked them, and he kept them in his possession.

Q.—Did Mrs. Cunningham make any other observation than you have stated regarding these papers, and if so, have the goodness to state it. A.—I don't recollect any particular remarks she made, except that she was very desirous to get possession of them.

Cross-examined.—Q.—Did she say that? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—You are the Captain of the Police for the Ward in which Bond-street is, the Fifteenth Ward? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—And under the Coroner you had charge of the premises there, had you not? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Do you know what officer of your Ward was on duty on the beat which embraced No. 31 Bond-street on the night of the 30th of January last?

Witness—The fore or latter part of the night?

Counsel—Both. A.—I can tell who was there on the fore part of the night; it was Officer Tilton.

Q.—What are the limits of that beat? A.—From Broadway to Bowery, and from Bond to Great Jones-street, and up to Astor-place.

TESTIMONY OF DR. ERASTUS WILSON.

This witness, who is a dentist, testified that his place of business last January and February, was No. 21 Bond-street; he knew Dr. Burdell and was on speaking terms with Mrs. Cunningham; he heard Mrs. Cunningham speak of Dr. Burdell at different times, but could not say when the first time was; he knew the Doctor by sight, but had no acquaintance with him before May, a year ago; he was sure he had heard Mrs. Cunningham speak of Dr. Burdell several times; he frequently met her in the hall when going to the Doctor's laboratory; he remembered hearing a remark about the first of December from Mrs. Cunningham; she said that Dr. Burdell would learn to behave himself before she vacated his house.

CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Q.—Was Allen T. Smith there at that time? A.—I believe no one was there at the time.

Q.—Did he have an operating room there? A.—I believe he did.

Q.—Did you ever see Dr. Burdell there operating? A.—I have seen him in there with patients; it was a very convenient place to the parlor.

Q.—Were you ever there in the house in the daytime? A.—Frequently.

Q.—For what purpose were you there? Was it in a visit or for professional purposes? A.—In the first place, I called upon Dr. Burdell sometimes in connection with business of the Artizans' Bank.

Q.—Did you use the laboratory there sometimes? A.—I did.

Q.—In that room? A.—I had my own laboratory in my own house.

Q.—You stated that you called there for the purpose of using the laboratory? A.—I did; he had a small lathe which had some improvements in it upon those usually in use, and the Doctor invited me to call there and make use of it, and I did.

Q.—In the daytime as well as in the evening? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—How were you enabled to find the time at which this conversation occurred with Mrs. Burdell? A.—By thinking it over and looking at my bank-book at the Artizans' Bank; I called there about a week after I commenced an account with the Artizans' Bank; I believe it was election day; I called upon Dr. Burdell upon a business matter in connection with the Bank, but the Doctor, at that time, was out; I am quite sure that it was before the time I heard the expression of Mrs. Cunningham—I think several weeks.

Q.—Did you not state before the Coroner that it was October or November? A.—I was not quite sure about it then.

Q.—Are you quite sure about the time you have now fixed upon? A.—I feel quite confident about it; since then I have recollected the circumstances; have looked at my books; I am not quite positive about the precise time.

Q.—Who else was present when this conversation occurred? A.—I did not see any one else; I heard a gentleman's voice as I came into the hall; whether I saw the gentleman with Mrs. Cunningham in this little back office or not, I am not quite sure.

Q.—Was it not Dr. Smith? A.—I think not.

Q.—Did you see the gentleman? A.—I cannot swear positively that I saw his face; I heard a gentleman's voice, and I think I saw a gentleman; I saw Mrs. C. at any rate, and I heard male and female voices in conversation there.

Q.—How near were you to them when you heard the conversation? A.—Probably ten feet.

Q.—You came in, and she invited you into the laboratory? A.—No, Sir; I went into the laboratory myself.

Q.—Did you speak to her? A.—I did not.

Q.—How came she to speak to you? A.—I am not aware that she spoke to me.

Q.—Who was the expression she made directed to? A.—I do not know; after she let the gentleman out I believe she closed the door, and that was the time she used the expression.

Q.—Where did the gentleman go? Into the street? A.—I do not know where he went; he passed out of the operating room into the hall, and where he went to then I cannot tell.

Q.—After he went out of the operating room, and had passed out, you heard this remark? A.—It was after he had passed out, and that is where I think I must have seen him.

Q.—Did you hear anything that the gentleman said? A.—I might have heard if I had listened.

Q.—Was she with that gentleman at the time you heard the remark? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Was she near enough to the gentleman for him to have heard the remark? A.—My impression was that the gentleman had gone out into the street.

Q.—No one else was present beside you? A.—Not that I am aware of.

Q.—I understood you to say that the remark was made to you? A.—I do not know to whom it was addressed; she made the remark in a somewhat angry tone.

Q.—What was her exact expression? A.—I think that I can be positive that this was the exact expression, "No! Dr. Burdell will learn to behave himself before I vacate this house."

Q.—Was it not this: "No! Doctor Smith will learn to behave himself," &c.? A.—No, Sir; it was Doctor Burdell.

Q.—You do not know whether it was addressed to you or somebody else? A.—I do not know who it was addressed to.

Q.—Did you speak to her? A.—I did not; I stood where she could see me distinctly and where I could see her—her eyes were turned towards me.

Q.—Can you swear positively that the remark was not this: "Doctor Burdell will learn to behave himself before he leaves this house? A.—I think I will have no difficulty in swearing that was not the remark as you worded it.

Q.—As you understood it? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did you make any memorandum of the exact expression? A.—I did not.

Q.—Were you in the house No. 31 Bond-street, the Friday night before the murder? A.—I was.

Q.—About what time? A.—I think it was about seven o'clock in the evening.

Q.—You were in the laboratory? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—How long were you there? A.—I was there but a very few moments, probably not more than five minutes at the longest.

Q.—Did you pass through the parlor? A.—I passed through the hall.

Q.—Who let you in? A.—One of the little boys, her son, probably little Georgey.

Q.—You were in the habit, under Dr. Burdell's invitation, of using his laboratory whenever it suited your convenience? A.—I used to run in frequently after my business hours, as I had more leisure then.

Q.—During what time? A.—It was directly after my office hours, from six to seven o'clock.

Q.—For how long a time before that had you been in the habit of using his laboratory? A.—Occasionally for several months.

Q.—Did you see Mrs. Burdell that evening, (referring to Friday?) A.—I saw her in the hall.

Q.—As you were going in or coming out? A.—As I was coming out.

Q.—In what direction was she going? A.—She was going in the direction of the basement stairs.

Q.—Were you at home Friday evening? A.—I believe I was most of the evening, but I am not positive.

Q.—Your number is No. 27 Bond-street? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Were you home from the time you left No. 31 Bond-street until the next morning, as far as you recollect? A.—To the best of my recollection I was.

Q.—Were you in the street at all? A.—I have no remembrance of it.

Q.—Did you smell anything offensive, like burnt woolen? A.—Nothing.

Q.—Do you recollect at what time of the night you retired? A.—Probably about eleven o'clock.

Q.—Did you hear any sound or cry that night? A.—None whatever.

Q.—Do you know Mr. Blaisdell? A.—I do not—never saw him to my knowledge.

TESTIMONY OF WARREN LELAND.

Warren Leland, one of the proprietors of the Metropolitan Hotel, testified that he knew Dr. Burdell; the Doctor was a guest at the Metropolitan Hotel from the 4th of January till the time of his death; he was a day boarder and had breakfast and dinner; he generally dined about five and breakfasted about nine o'clock; witness did not see him on the day previous to his murder.

Samuel W. Furmly, the were shabbily dressed; they looked like rough characters, and they were walking in a manner that did not suit me.

Q.—Were they walking fast or slow? A.—They were walking slower than I was.

Q.—Can you give any other description of them? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Was there any thing else except their walk in their movements which looked suspicious? A.—They were rather coarse looking men in their appearance.

Q.—Were they talking to one another? A.—They were not together. I first met one and then the other. They might have been two hundred feet apart.

Q.—Was one a tall man and the other a short one? A.—That I could not say. I did not notice them enough to decide that.

Q.—Can you recollect what kind of a coat either of them wore—whether it was a Raglan or not? A.—No, Sir, I cannot.

Q.—Can you recollect whether they had on overcoats? A.—I cannot.

Q.—Did each one look suspicious? A.—I did not like the appearance of either one.

Q.—Did one look as suspicious as the other? A.—I was a little more suspicious of the last one I met than the other.

Q.—Were both going towards the Bowery? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Were you a good deal frightened at the appearance of these men? A.—Not much. I merely turned out of the walk to avoid them.

Q.—What excited you about them? A.—Seeing the first one made me notice the next one a little more.

Q.—Did you notice a light in any other attic but No. 31 Bond street on the south side of the street that night? A.—No, Sir, that was the only one I noticed; I should not have noticed that much if it had been an ordinary light; I thought Dr. Burdell's house was on fire.

Q.—Will you swear whether there was or was not a light in any other attic on the south side of Bond-street? A.—I could not, because my attention was only directed to that one window.

Q.—Are you not a very nervous man? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Not distinguished for that among your acquaintances? A.—I do not consider myself to be so; I do not know that I have ever been accused of it by anybody.

Q.—Was there any snow in the street that night? A.—I do not think there was, not when I went in; I think the walk was a little wet.

Q.—Was there not snow upon the side-walk which had fallen days before? Was there not a good deal of snow in the street that night? A.—The side-walks were dry, but the streets were filled with snow and ice, and it was piled up.

Q.—Did you cross the street in the snow? A.—There was snow and ice in the street, but it was entirely hard.

By a Juror—Did you observe the time of night you went into the house? A.—I think I noticed the clock when I went up stairs: my wife was sitting up with a sick lady; I looked at the clock and went to bed.

By a Juror—Was it not unusual for you to return home and go out the second time? A.—I often do it.

By a Juror—When you came home you say you saw a light in the attic window: did you see any light in the third story window? A.—I can't say.

Edwin H. Stone, of the Lafarge Hotel, testified that he knew Dr. Burdell as a boarder at that Hotel during the months of October, November and December, 1856; he took breakfast, dinner and supper there, and was a regular attendant at all the meals.

Daniel Olney, on examination, stated that he was a carpenter, and at Dr. Burdell's request ordered a lock on the door of the house No. 31 Bond street; the lock was supplied by Mr. Butler.

William H. Butler was then called, and stated that he was a manufacturer of locks and safes; in the month of December last he placed a lock on the door of No. 31 Bond-street; he produced a lock which he said was exactly similar, with the exception of the key, the keys to all the locks he furnished being made to vary; he exhibited the lock to the Court and Jury, and explained its peculiarity; it was burglar proof, and could not be opened except by the key made for it, when a certain slide on the inside was properly fixed; otherwise it was no lock at all, and could be opened from the outside by merely turning the handles.

Cross-examined.—Q.—This article is patented? A.—Yes.

Q.—When? A.—In October, 1855.

Q.—By whom? A.—By myself and partner, Valentine and Butler.

Q.—Who is the inventor? A.—I am the inventor.

Q.—And they are patented by Valentine and Butler? A.—Yes.

Q.—There are other patent locks? A.—O, yes, a great many.

Q.—And are they all burglar-proof? A.—They may be, or may not be.

Question repeated. A.—I do not know.

Q.—The action of this lock depends upon the bolt on the inside? A.—Yes.

Q.—If any person leave the catch on the inside unfastened, it is not a lock at all? A.—It is not?

Q.—Then all a person has to do upon the inside, is to turn it, and it I opened with a slide in that position? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—You do not know how the slide was on the night of the murder? A.—No.

Q.—There is a mere catch, and it is opened from the outside as well as within? A.—Yes.

Q.—With this slide in the centre? A.—It is then a lock, and requires a key upon the outside.

Q.—How about the inside? A.—It does not require a key at all.

Q.—Then upon the inside where the slide is it cannot be opened by pulling or turning? A.—Neither.

Q.—When the bolt is in that position, (illustrating,) it is then neither a key nor a latch? A.—In that position it is a bolt simply.

Q.—Whether or not it can be opened by a person from the outside depends on the position of the slide? A.—Yes.

Q.—Were you called upon to alter the lock after it was put on, because it could not work? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you fix it? A.—Yes.

Q.—What was the matter with it? A.—There was a fault I believe in the spring; I believe the spring was too stiff to allow the key to open it; there was too much pressure upon the key to open the lock.

Q.—When was that? A.—I should think it was a week or ten days after the lock was put on; I cannot speak within a week, perhaps.

Q.—About when was it put on? A.—The charge to Dr. Burdell was on the 13th December, as appears by our books.

Q.—You cannot tell when it was put on? A.—The charge was about that time; the order was on the 8th December.

Q.—Could overcoats be stolen in the hall when that lock was on the door?

The District Attorney—I object to this; the gentlemen is not an expert in burglary.

Mr. Dean—I insist upon this from the opening of the District Attorney, which was that there was such a lock upon the door, and that no person from the outside of that house could have committed this act.

The Court—His testimony is that it can be so fixed that it would be no lock at all.

Mr. Dean—Then that disposes of the whole case.

A Juror—How many pattern keys do you make for those locks? A.—They are varied without any limit; our machinery is so arranged that we think we can make a million of them not alike.

Mr. Dean—You can make just as many alike as you chose? A.—Yes.

TESTIMONY OF DR. THOMPSON.

John H. Thompson, who was the next witness, deposed that he was a doctor of medicine; he knew Dr. Burdell, and knows Mrs. Cunningham; Dr. Burdell called upon him in the early part of October last, about half-past three o'clock in the afternoon, and asked him whether he had ever noticed, during his visite to No. 31 Bond-street, in his (the Doctor's) conduct, anything to induce him to believe that he was engaged to be married to Mrs. Cunningham; about that time Mrs. Cunningham came in and asked what the Doctor had to say; he replied, "I am telling Dr. Thompson that you have commenced an action against me for breach of promise of marriage;" she said, "What has Mr. Thompson to do with it?" he said, "I suppose you want money of me;" she replied, "No, you know I do not, you promised to marry me, and you shall fulfill your word;" witness told Dr. Burdell he declined having anything to do with the matter in any shape or way; Dr. Burdell then asked witness to think it over; he did so, and wrote Dr. Burdell a note, declining to have anything to do with the affair, unless compelled by law to do so; this occurrence took place in the early part of October; witness added that he was at Dr. Burdell's house on the Friday preceding the murder; he was speaking to Mrs. Cunningham in the back parlor, when Dr. Burdell came down stairs; she opened the parlor door as he was walking along the passage to the front door; she either said to him, "Where are you going, Harvey?" or "What time will you return home?" Witness could not remember which; Dr. Burdell made some reply, but witness did not hear what he said; witness called on Mrs. Cunningham because she had sent for him; she wanted to know if he had discounted a note of $100 for her, and if not, she wished him to return it to her; witness had discounted notes previously for her, of which she was the maker, with one exception; he told her on this occasion that he had paid away the note she inquired about in business, and would hand her the money, less seven per cent.; he was not more than five minutes in the house; had never lodged there.

Cross examined by Mr. Clinton.

Q.—I am requested to ask you to repeat the language which Mrs. Burdell addressed to the Doctor upon that Friday? A.—She said, "Harvey, what time shall you be home?" or, "Where are you going?"

Q.—Was it not said as one would ordinarily address a person going out? A.—Yes.

Q.—There was nothing unusual about it? A.—Nothing.

EVIDENCE OF DR. WOODWARD.

Dr. George F. Woodward testified that he had made a certain post mortem examination of the body of Dr. Burdell, assisted by Drs. Wood, Uhl and Knight; witness did not recollect the day; it was on the Monday after the killing; they reduced to writing the result of their medical post mortem; the document was in the handwriting of Mr. Dodge, now Dr. Dodge; it was written at the dictation of witness and Dr. Wood, both of whom then read it over and signed it; it was signed.

The District Attorney read the written description of the wounds in the body of Dr. Burdell as furnished by the witness and his associates to the Coroner at the time of the inquest. This was published in full in the journals of the day.

The witness described the position of the several wounds by pointing to their relative locations as on his own body.

Cross-examined by Mr. Dean—Q.—What is your age? A.—31, Sir.

Q.—How long have you been in the profession? A.—Between seven and eight years.

Q.—Do you take any particular branch of the profession, or are you in general practice? A.—In general practice—in surgery, perhaps, more particularly.

Q.—Your particular branch, then, is surgery? A.—I cannot say that it is the particular branch, for I practice both surgery and medicine.

Q.—You have a partner, I believe. A.—Yes.

Q.—Who is he? A.—Dr. James R. Wood.

Q.—You are the junior partner? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—How long have you been practicing in this City? A.—As I said before, between seven and eight years.

Q.—And you always have practiced here? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Have you, at any time before, been engaged in any case that was the subject of legal investigation? A.—I have, Sir, in the way of practice—broken bones, &c.

Q.—I mean the subject of investigation in a capital case? A.—No, Sir, not in a capital case—(pausing)—except me, I was, in the Poole murder; I was examined there; I attended Mr. Lozier.

Q.—Did you attend the post mortem? A.—I was not present, but my partner was.

Q.—Then this is the first capital case in which you have conducted a post mortem where the parties were arrested for murder? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Was this paper that has been read drawn up by you, or under your directions? A.—Under my direction and my partner, Dr. Wood.

Q.—I do not see any signatures to it? A.—The signatures are there.

Mr Dean—I do not see them in any part of it.

The District Attorney—It is possible that they may have dropped.

Mr. Dean—I want the whole document. I want to have this embalmed in the annals of medical jurisprudence. (To the witness)—I ask you whether that document was made out under your directions? A.—It was made out under the directions of Dr. Wood, myself, Dr. Knight and Dr. Uhl.

Q.—Who had the control of the post-mortem—who gave directions? A.—There were no directions given; we all examined, Dr. Wood and myself more particularly.

Q.—Dr. Wood and yourself conducted the examination more especially? A.—Yes.

Q.—And are responsible for the paternity of this medical opinion? A.—Yes.

Q.—When was this codicil added? A.—At the same time, Sir.

Q.—Before it was signed, or after? Just look at it, [handing it,] and tell us when that codicil was put to the will. A.—That was put there after it was signed, but it all signifies the same thing,

Q.—I do not ask you what it signifies; it speaks for itself. Answer the questions put to you.

Witness—These notes were added in the corner, but were all written at the same time.

Q.—Are you responsible for what was written after the signatures, the same as before? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did you direct that a copy should be furnished to each of the papers? A.—No, I did not.

Q.—Look at the top of that paper. Does it not begin by saying, "Furnish a copy to each of the papers?" A.—I am not responsible for that; that is not my writing, and not given by my directions.

Q.—That is not a part of the post mortem? A.—No.

Q.—You do not then wish to be responsible for that paper? A.—Only that which appertains to the examination of the body of Dr. Burdell.

Q.—You mean to be responsible for all that is in the handwriting of Dr Dodge? A.—Yes.

Q.—The rest you do not vouch for? A.—No.

Q.—How did you come to put on that after you four had signed it? A.—I cannot tell you exactly.

Q.—Who directed it? A.—I think my partner, Dr. Wood.

Q.—Did Dr. Uhl and Dr. Knight assent to it, and were they all present? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Why was it not put in before it was signed? A.—I cannot tell you why now.

Q.—You know no reason for it? A.—I cannot tell the reason why now.

Q.—Was it at a subsequent examination after reflection, and thinking that the first was not sufficient? A.—It was upon a reëxamination.

Q.—Why was it not signed? A.—It was all put together.

Q.—Why was it not signed?

The Court—Let him give the reason why it was not signed.

Witness—It was all done on the spot. Those papers were drawn up together and signed. Then there was a reëxamination going on over some new ground, and they were all put together meaning that the signers would be responsible for the whole of that document, with the exception of those words put on which I know nothing of.

Q.—Drs. Uhl and Knight knew about this and assented? A.—Yes.

Q.—When was this subsequent examination? A.—At the same time—a short time afterwards.

Q.—Which do you mean? A.—Well, half an hour afterwards.

Q.—What day was this examination—the first examination? A.—I think it was Monday or Tuesday, but I am not sure.

Q.—You do not know which? A.—I do not; I stated Monday previously. It was either Monday or Tuesday.

Q.—Do you know Dr. Gillman, of this City? A.—Yes.

Q.—Do you know Dr. Carnochan? A.—Not professionally,

Q.—Do you know him by sight? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did Drs. Carnochan and Gillman come into the room while you were conducting this examination? A.—No.

Q.—Did you refuse to go on in their presence? A.—No.

Q.—You stopped with it while they were in the room? A.—Yes.

Q.—They are eminent surgeons? A.—Dr. Gillman is not a surgeon.

Q.—But Dr. Carnochan is? A.—Yes; I did not wish to be interfered with. We were all there conducting the examination, and did not wish to be interfered with.

Q.—Who do you mean by "all?" A.—Dr. Knight, Dr. Uhl, myself, and Dr. Wood, who I do not think was then present.

Q.—Who is Dr. Knight? A.—I cannot tell you except that he is a regular practitioner.

Q.—He is a son in-law of Coroner Connery? A.—I have so understood.

Q.—Did Dr. Uhl object to go on when Drs. Gillman and Carnochan were present? A.—There was no objection made.

Q.—Why did you stop when those gentlemen came into the room? A.—Because I wished to.

Q.—You did not doubt your ability to conduct this examination at all, did you? A.—I did not.

Q.—Did you doubt their ability to see whether it was properly done or not? A.—I did not consider it necessary for them to interfere.

Q.—Did they offer to interfere, or say a word while they were in the room to look on? A.—They did not. Excuse me—Dr. Gillman, while I was examining the body, immediately took my place, and commenced making an examination himself; Dr. Carnochan said nothing.

Q.—He said nothing and stood back? A.—Yes.

Q.—You did not invite him to participate? A.—I did not.

Q.—Did you not say that the examination should be suspended unless they left the room? A.—I said nothing of the kind.

Q.—What did you say? A.—Nothing.

Q.—You neither spoke nor acted? A.—To Dr. Carnochan I said nothing, but to Gillman I said I must go on with the examination, and after I had got through, he might conduct his.

Q.—What was the objection to have Drs. Gillman and Carnochan in the room? A.—I had no objection after I got through.

Q.—While you were conducting the examination did you mean to have anything secret about it? A.—No.

Q.—What was your objection then to having those gentlemen present? A.—Because we were examining the wounds and measuring them, and we did not want anybody to interfere with us; we could not do it when the Doctor wanted to measure at the same time.

Q.—Did Dr. Gillman ask to measure the wounds? A.—No. I have stated to you that Dr. Gilman came into that room, and went and examined the body while I was measuring the body. He took my place, and commenced to feel over the body.

Q.—That, you thought, was interfering with you? A.—While I was examining the body, most decidedly.

Q.—Did Dr. Knight agree that he would have no interference? A.—He said nothing.

Q.—Did Dr. Uhl? A.—He said nothing.

Q.—Did Dr. Wood? A.—He was, I think, not present.

Q.—What did you mean by saying that all agreed that neither Gillman nor Carnochan should be present? A.—I suspended the examination while Carnochan was there, and I said to Dr. Gillman——

The Court—The witness has already answered that question.

Mr. Dean—I did not hear it.

The Court—I have upon my notes thus: "I told him after he got through that he might conduct his examination."

Mr. Dean—And you did not say that it must be suspended if he stayed in the room? A.—I did not.

Q.—Did you dissect the wound in the neck? A.—Dr. Wood and myself did.

Q.—Where? A.—In a room.

Q.—In whose presence? A.—Dr. Wood's and myself.

Q.—Anybody else? A.—No.

Q.—And Drs. Uhl and Knight did not? A.—No, Sir; they were in the other room.

Q.—And they indorsed what you said? A.—They saw the wounds and the arteries.

Q.—And did not dissect, but you and Dr. Wood did? A.—No; we only did.

Q.—And Drs. Uhl and Knight did not? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—They signed, then, what you wrote or dictated? A.—They signed after seeing.

Q.—To what extent did you dissect? A.—To the extent of taking out about two and a half inches of the carotid artery—half an inch of the common carotid, and two inches of the external and internal carotid arteries.

(The witness was here shown a diagram of the cavities of the body, plate No. 5, and marked the arteries in pencil.)

Q.—After the forking or bifurcation, then, it is external and internal? A.—Yes.

Q.—Tell me exactly where was the cut of the knife—was it above the bifurcation or below? A.—Above.

Q.—It cut both? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you dissect it through the neck so as to show it upon the right side as well? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—How, then, did you know the direction in which the knife went? A.—By a probe, and the dissection afterwards.

Q.—When was that? A.—In taking out the carotid arteries.

Q.—After this examination? A.—At the time that we dissected the arteries, we discovered the direction which the wound had taken.

Q.—To what extent did you dissect this wound in length? A.—Lengthwise, so as to get at the carotid arteries, and then laying the neck open sufficiently to see the direction that the wound had taken externally.

Q.—Did you dissect the other side? A.—On the right side we did not.

Q.—How did you not then know that the right carotid was wounded? A.—We did not say that it was.

Q.—The depth of the wound in the neck you know only from the probe? A.—Yes, and dissection.

Q.—To what extent did you dissect in depth? A.—Sufficient to get out the arteries.

Q.—But beyond that you did not go? A.—No; and the probe went to the depth of six inches.

Q.—The neck is not solid? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Can you tell, without dissection, the actual direction of the wound—its extent upon the neck? A.—We cannot tell exactly.

Q.—This wound in the neck is necessarily a mortal wound, is it not? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—And must cause death very soon? A.—Yes, if the hemorrhage is not stopped.

Q.—Can the hemorrhage, when both carotids are cut, be arrested? A.—It might be, by applying pressure to the carotid, and then ligaturing it.

Q.—Then it is not a mortal wound? A.—It is a mortal wound.

Q.—How soon? A.—Perhaps thirty seconds.

Q.—Did you ever know a case where both carotids were cut? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Do you know how long the party lived? A.—No; I have seen several suicides where both carotids were cut.

Q.—Is it matter of opinion as to how long the party would live? A.—Yes.

Q.—Is it generally known by people who are not in the medical profession, just where the carotid lies? A.—Well, there are some people out of the profession who know better than others.

Q.—I ask if it is generally known? A.—I think the precise locality is not generally known.

Q.—Is there any place in the human system where a cut is more fatal than one which strikes the carotid? A.—The heart.

Q.—Is a blow more fatal in the heart than in the carotid? A.—More instantaneous perhaps.

Q.—That is not the question. The question is whether there is any place where a blow was more fatal than a blow that cut the carotid artery? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Ordinary people, when they cut their throats, do they cut the carotid? Do they not generally cut the front of the throat? A.—They generally attempt to cut the veins in the neck.

Q.—There is no vital organ directly in front? A.—There is the larynx. Ordinarily, people who commit suicide cut the front of the throat.

Q.—They do not attempt to cut the carotid? A.—I do not know what they attempt, but that is generally what they do.

Q.—The wound you spoke of in the left nipple reached the heart also? A.—There were two wounds in the heart—one about one inch from the left nipple, which penetrated the heart, and the other five inches below, and a little outwards, which touched the apex of the heart. I simply measured the wound in the left nipple.

The Court—The outer surface of it? A.—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Dean—What was the reason that the wound was not dissected? A.—We did not consider it necessary.

Q.—Could you tell what the nature of the instrument was with which it was inflicted without dissection? A.—I could not.

Q.—Would dissection enable you to do it? A.—No.

Q.—Would dissection help you in coming to a conclusion? A.—Yes.

Q.—But you did not think it necessary? A.—I did not think it necessary to dissect that wound, but only to dissect the wound in the neck, showing in what manner and way the carotid artery was cut.

Q.—With what instrument was the wound in the neck inflicted? A.—With a sharp instrument.

Q.—A knife or dagger? A.—I cannot say.

Q.—Was it an instrument sharp upon both sides, or only one? A.—I could not say.

Q.—Sharp at the point or not? A.—I should say sharp, most decidedly.

Q.—But you did not dissect far enough to see whether the instrument had a blunt edge or not? A.—No; we judged from the external appearance of the wound and the cuts internally.

Q.—But you did not dissect to get at the depth of the wound at the end? A.—No.

Q.—Are you able to say whether the instrument that caused this wound one inch from the left nipple had two edges or one? A.—I am not able to say precisely.

Q.—Would dissection help you to do that? A.—It would help.

The Court—But you did not do it? A.—No.

The Court—Did you make any examination of the clothes to see? A.—Yes, Sir, and that is embodied in that report.

Mr. Dean—(Addressing the Court)—We shall require to have the clothes produced.

The Judge—If you desire any direction upon that subject I will give it to you.

Mr. Dean—Q.—Between which ribs was this wound one inch from the nipple? A.—It is in the report; I think it was between the fourth and fifth ribs.

The Court—That is what Dr. Francis said.

Mr. Dean—Q.—Would such a wound, if deep enough, be a mortal wound? A.—That depends which way the instrument goes.

Q.—Rightly pointed, is it not the place to reach the heart? A.—The wound upon Burdell's body did reach the heart.

The Court—But it could be reached from other points? A.—Yes. [Illustrating on diagram and marking the position of the wound, which went into the fourth and fifth ribs.]

Mr. Dean—This wound went into the ventricle of the heart, and was therefore mortal, as I understand you? A.—I considered it a mortal wound.

Q.—The mere fact that a wound is made in the heart does not necessarily make it mortal, does it, unless it reaches either of the ventricles? A.—A wound may be made in the heart and yet a man live for some little time.

Q.—Is the other point in the heart a mortal wound necessarily? A.—Not necessarily, but it would be speedy if inflammation were produced.

Q.—Now, as to this wound we have spoken of—if it had gone in a different direction it would not have been mortal—going through the fourth and fifth ribs—unless it reached the heart; it was a fact that it reached the heart, and piercing it made it mortal? A.—Yes.

The Court—I suppose there is no doubt about that? A.—None.

The Court—The point it reaches of course determines the materiality or immateriality of the wound? A.—Yes.

Mr. Dean—Now as to the wound in the right shoulder, near the clavicle—was that wound also directed to a mortal part? A.—It penetrated the pleura.

The Court—Is there an artery under the clavicle? A.—Yes, the subclevian artery, and if that had been severed it would have been a mortal wound.

Q.—It could not have been tied? A.—It could have been tied.

Q.—But not in time? A.—No.

Q.—You did not dissect that wound? A.—No.

Q.—And you do not know how near that artery the knife went? A.—No.

Q.—Now, Sir, in view of these circumstances—this wound in the carotid artery, in the heart, and this particular wound in the right shoulder, I ask you what your opinion is, as to whether the person who struck those blows, was acquainted with the anatomy of the human body? A.—It would be impossible to say whether he was acquainted with the anatomy of the human body, but they certainly were very accurate wounds; but this might have been done by accident.

Q.—I ask you for your opinion? A.—My opinion is that it might have been done by accident.

The Court—But the wounds were calculated to produce mortal results? A.—Yes, they were very accurate wounds, but, at the same time, they may have been mere matter of accident.

Mr. Dean—Did not you and Dr. Wood say in that room that those wounds were singularly accurate? A.—I might possibly have made such a remark.

The Court—He thinks that they are singularly accurate, but, at the same time they might have been matter of accident.

Q.—In your judgment as a medical man, taking a hundred deaths caused by violence by some sharp instrument, would wounds be as accurate as in this case by a person not acquainted with the anatomy of the human body? A.—I have not the statistics.

Q.—I want to know your opinion? A.—It may occur once and may occur again.

Q.—I ask you your opinion—whether you agree with Dr. Francis and Dr. Wood. A.—I should say that taking all the points together they would be rather more accurate than in a large number of deaths caused in that way.

Q.—What amount of force would be sufficient to inflict such wounds? A.—A person of lesser strength might inflict them. I cannot say exactly how; it is impossible to say which way they were inflicted; his body and arms bore marks of resistance.

Q.—Do you mean to say, as a medical man, that a person of lesser strength than he could have inflicted those wounds, and have received no marks of violence? A.—I think not, unless he was surprised—taken unawares.

Q.—By taken unawares, I suppose, you mean that the person had struck him, and had got the advantage, so that he could not resist? A.—Yes, Sir, or, having inflicted those wounds which rendered him incapable of resistance at once.

Q.—A person coming from behind and holding him fast might have done it you think? A.—I cannot answer that question exactly.

Q.—In your judgment, looking at that room, where was the first blow struck? A.—In my opinion—and this is mere matter of opinion—I think the first blow received was upon the right shoulder.

Q.—Where was he? A.—Probably sitting down.

Q.—By his desk near the sofa, on the east side of the room? A.—Yes.

Q.—Was that blow, if struck by a person from behind, a right or left-handed blow? A.—It might be either.

Q.—Depending upon the place where the person striking the blow stood? A.—Yes; I do not know the exact direction of the blow, except that it was downward, and penetrated the cavity of the pleura.

Q.—Would the blow not naturally be in the left shoulder if struck by a left-handed person coming up from behind? A.—Not naturally; it might be in the right.

Q.—Why? A.—I cannot say. It might be in either shoulder; there would be choice. I say that a man coming behind another in that position might be guided by circumstances—but whatever they might be I do not know—and strike on one shoulder or the other. If you say "naturally," I would say that you would strike the right shoulder with the right hand, and the left with the left. From the wound itself nothing can be determined whether the blows were given with the right or the left hand; my opinion is that the wound in the neck was given from behind.

Q.—Do you agree or disagree with Dr. Wood upon that subject? A.—I agree with him.

Q.—Did he not testify that it was the other way? A.—He was under the impression it was given from the back.

Q.—On what facts do you base that opinion. A.—I think the party was endeavoring to escape from the door?

Q.—You mean Dr. Burdell? A.—Yes.

Q.—And you think the party was endeavoring to stop him? A.—Yes, was in pursuit, and came up behind and inflicted this wound.

The Court—That wound, I understand you, would be mortal? A.—Yes. I should judge that he was sitting between the two windows, by his small instrument case, when the party came up and inflicted the wound upon the shoulder; there was blood on the chair by the instrument case—the case between the two windows looking back; I cannot say distinctly whether there was blood on the chair by the east side.

Q.—Suppose he was sitting there, and the blow was struck, would not the blood be traced all the way to the door? A.—He might be and might not; blood may or may not escape.

Q.—I understood you to say that one wound was made by a left-handed person—which was that? A.—I think not; I do not recollect saying so.

The Judge.—No, he said no such thing.

Q.—Well, then, I will ask him now, could all the blows found on the body be inflicted by a right handed person? I think that the wound on the caroted artery must have been given by a left-handed person.

Q.—Why do you think so? A.—I should say, in my opinion, there is a probability of its being a left-handed blow, if not given from behind.

Q.—Would it not depend upon the position of the parties? A.—Yes, the position of the parties indicated that the blow was from the left.

Q.—Well, but would the fact whether it was from the left or the right, not depend as much on the position of the parties, as whether I should strike you on the right or left shoulder? A.—Of course, if the position was known.

Q.—Then you mean to say that unless you knew the position of the parties you cannot determine whether it was a right or left handed person? A.—I mean to say in the case that no person could state with certainty whether it was inflicted by a right or left-handed person, but in my medical opinion——

Counsel—We don't ask you that.

Witness—But you did.

Counsel—I ask you whether, not knowing the position of the parties, you could determine whether the blows were right-handed or left-handed? A.—In answer to that I say that I think in my medical opinion——

Q.—I don't ask you what you think. I ask you whether, from your knowledge of the position of the parties, you know whether that blow was right-handed or left-handed? A.—I can tell from the measure, by the indications on the wall, and——

Q.—I don't ask you that. I ask you whether, without knowing the position of the parties, and from the wound itself, you can determine whether the blow was right handed or left-handed? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—When did you first hear about this left-handed theory? A.—I don't recollect.

Q.—It wasn't on the inquest, was it?

Witness—The inquest?

Counsel—Yes, the inquest before Coroner Connery? A.—The opinion was advanced by a great many.

Q.—You and Dr. Wood were both examined? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did you and he say anything about a right or left-handed person? A.—Not as I am aware of; I will not speak certainly, but I think not.

Q.—In whatever you did, on that inquest, there, you acted under the directions of the Coroner? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—In your examination of this body, and in your treatment of Mrs. Burdell's family? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Both herself and her daughters? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Any examinations that were made were made by his directions? A.—Yes, Sir.

Court—[To counsel]—I don't think we need any of that here, Sir.

Q.—Do you know whether the clothes were on when you made this examination? A.—Yes, Sir.

Court—He has stated that already.

Witness—We removed the coat, I think, on the examination of the body.

Q.—(by the Court)—What clothes had Dr. Burdell on? A.—He had a black cloth dress-coat, black cloth vest, linen shirt; I am not positive whether the under-shirt was woolen.

Q.—Flannel or knit? A.—I think it was knit.

Q.—What were his lower garments? A.—They were black cloth pants.

Q.—Woolen? A.—Yes.

Q.—What under them? A.—Drawers, I suppose; we did not remove his pantaloons.

Q.—Do you know whether he had drawers on under his pantaloons or not? A.—I am not certain; we only removed his pantaloons for the purpose of ascertaining the nature of the wounds in the abdomen.

Counsel—(resuming)—This wound in the abdomen was also mortal, was it not? A.—It would prove mortal, in all probability.

Q.—Did the wound that you speak of, that reached the heart, go through the lapel of the coat, and the ordinary thickness of the coat, and all this lining, through the lapel of the vest, then through this cotton or linen shirt, then through the flannel shirt, and then through the cartilage between the fourth and fifth ribs, and then into the heart? A.—Yes, Sir, through the lapel of the coat, the lapel of the vest, the shirt and under-shirt, and through the body.

Q.—Would it require considerable force to make the wound? A.—Not an immense deal of force.

Q.—I asked you if it would require considerable force? A.—I cannot say what amount.

Q.—Would it require considerable force? A.—I don't know what you consider considerable.

Court—The term is indefinite. You had better ask him with reference to the size or strength of the person.

Q.—Was that wound inflicted from before or behind? A.—From the front.

Q.—Was that wound inflicted with the right hand or with the left, supposing the party standing in front? A.—I could not say.

Q.—If they stood face to face, would not the natural direction of the blow of a right-handed person be to reach the left side of the other party? A.—I could not say whether it was the right or left hand.

Q.—I don't ask which it was. I only ask which would be the natural direction of the blow of a right-handed person? A.—It might be done naturally by either the right or left hand.

Q.—Suppose the parties standing face to face, and one of them strike with the right hand, where would it naturally reach?

The Court—He has answered that already.

Witness—If a person was left-handed, he could strike naturally in the same direction in front as a right-handed person.

Q.—There would be nothing in the wound then to show which? A.—No.

Q.—You would then suppose the party struck to stand still and not resist? A.—Well, in my opinion the wound in the heart was inflicted whilst the body was either on the floor or sinking; it would be one of the last wounds given.

Q.—The wound was upward? A.—If a person was standing over him in that way the wound would naturally be downwards and upwards.

Q.—If the party was on his face you could not make that wound? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—You were not there to see how it was struck? A.—No, I have said I was not.

Court—That is his speculation, of course.

Counsel—I did not ask him his opinions as to that.

Re-examined by District-Attorney—Q.—Where is Dr. Wood now? A.—He is in Nashville, Tenn.

Q.—He is not in this City? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—You are his partner? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—How old a man is he—he is an old practitioner, isn't he? A.—Yes, Sir; he has practised a long time; some twenty odd years.

Court—I suppose his position and standing as a surgeon is not contested?

Mr. Dean—Not at all.

Q.—As to this deposition which was so much examined about. Were you present when Dr. Van Buren and Dr. Childs, as well as Dr. Uhl, were examined in regard to it?

Mr. Dean—What deposition?

Court—The results of this post mortem examination.

A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—You have been asked who Dr. Gillman and Dr. Carnochan were. Do you know Dr. Childs? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did he concur in this deposition?

Counsel for defence objected.

The District-Attorney said he merely wished to show in reference to the attempt at a sneer that was got up in this case, to show——

Court—I don't think that is necessary, unless we are called upon to rebut sneers by evidence.

Mr. Dean—Dr. Van Buren is a competent witness, and we want to have him on the stand. He is the man who first put a stop to this mode of conducting a post mortem.

EVIDENCE OF DR. THOMPSON, RECALLED.
